PANDORA BERMAN'S BOX

THE troubles of the world, you will remember, all came out when Pandora opened a certain mystic box. Last week Mr. Pandro Berman, young, very young, producer, came out of Hollywood and opened his mouth, with, among other utterances:

"Things like the Legion [of Decency] always come to an end, and it will be doubly so in the case of motion pictures when audiences are faced with a steady flow of saccharine material."

"Joe Breen is a grand person and absolutely the right man for the job he's doing. Everybody loves him. But there are many influences behind him telling him what to do."

In the glowing dawn of this new year, we are much in the debt of Mr. Berman for our mental picture at the moment, of all Hollywood standing facing east and singing in unison: "Joe Breen, we all love you." We can fancy it as a joyous pageant with DeMille angels thallbergling overhead and cohening to each other in a shower of poinsettia petals, all technicolored, with the gay lights sheehaning from their wings.

But it is not of Mr. Breen and love that we sat down to write.

We must turn back, somewhat wearied, again to say that it would be well if in the New Year someone might find a way to get the producers, even the young ones, to read the Production Code, and there to find, if they can, wherein and whereby and how, if any, the Code demands saccharinity of the screen. Obviously, Mr. Berman does not know what either the Production Code or the Legion of Decency are about, and what has been or is being done about related matters. Since they pertain entirely to the business of making motion pictures, perhaps he is avoiding information on the same ground that some of our current biographers and historians do.

That, however, is incidental to the fact that this young man is in this industry, and, for as much space as he can get, a spokesman for it. And what with the delicacy of the state of affairs in the current adjustments between the screen and the Legion, also between the screen and the rest of decent America, would it not appear an excellent time to leave the public relations and public expressions job to the authorities of the situation—including, may we suggest, such figures as the beloved Mr. Joseph Breen. What a time to rile the Legion. Little picture makers should just make pictures.

THE Era, a lively London journal in the amusement industry, says: "A contemporary observes that there was probably a crude form of wireless 3,000 years ago."

There still is. We call it broadcasting on this side.

FLIM-FLAMMING GENTLEMAN

A HIGH note of patriotism is sounded by the justly celebrated New Canaan Advertiser—for many years now officially honored as the best weekly newspaper in the United States—in its defense of that sterling Connecticut Yankee, the late Mr. Phineas T. Barnum, against what the Advertiser thinks may have been discreditable treatment on the screen. Referring to the Barnum picture, the editor immediately qualified himself for utterance by saying: Without seeing the picture one may imagine the character as impersonated by Mr. Beery, as uncouth a personage on the films as Hollywood produces. . . . Mr. Barnum was not uncouth. He was a gentleman in every sense of the word. He met princes and potentates on his trips to Europe, even though he did flim-flam them. . . .

PURE INVENTION

THE vital immortality of Thomas A. Edison in American tradition is being continuously attested by the flow of books and magazine articles about him. One of the favorite subjects of the Sunday supplement type of attention is his alleged labours on an alleged device aimed at communication with the dead, recently spread across the pages of a national publication.

The story originally appeared about a dozen years ago in a New York daily paper. It considerably annoyed one of Mr. Edison's more outspoken agnostic friends, who heatedly demanded: "Are you slipping in your old age? Has Sir Oliver Lodge got you going?"

"Now, now," interpolated Mr. Edison, "don't get fussy about a little thing like that. That reporter came over here all the way from New York to see me. He was a space writer, and his shoes were worn out and it was a snowy cold day. He needed a story—and I gave him the best I could think up at the moment."

MR. CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, when approached for participation in that annual array of New Year's forecasts, a quaint custom of Motion Picture Daily, said:

"My wish is that 1935 may be recalled as the year of fewer and shorter interviews. If we could all get on or off trains and boats, and go through Kansas City without being interviewed, what a wonderful business this would be."

Which makes us wonder what it was that our Mr. Al Finestone asked Mr. Pettijohn.

MEXICAN SUPERVISION

The entire film industry in Mexico is to be placed under federal supervision, by the terms of a bill just passed by the national congress at Mexico City. The measure's sponsor contends the move will benefit the industry, assuring uniformity of regulations, taxes and the like, where at present federal, state and municipal legislation overlaps. . . .

PRESS COMPETITION

Called to band in protest, Omaha exhibitors plan to petition Henry Doorly, publisher of the Omaha World-Herald, seeking to end the newspaper's competition with theatres, resulting from its sponsorship last month of an engagement of the San Carlos Opera, which played to 15,000 in four days, with other attractions planned. . . .

TAX ON ADS

Judge Brown Harris in Kansas City circuit court last week determined that advertisements placed in Missouri publications by agencies and advertisers outside the state are not subject to the state sales tax of one-half of one per cent. The decision ended a suit to test a ruling of the state auditor. . . .

AMATEUR AWARD

The annual amateur award of the American Society of Cinematography last week was presented to R. B. Clardy at Hollywood for a 200-foot reel, "New Horizon." Second honor went to Tatuschi Okamoto of Matsuyma, Japan, for "Tender Friendship." . . .

OHIO TAX

The new Ohio three per cent sales tax will not go into effect until February 1, instead of January 10, it was determined by the state tax commission last week. Reason: delay in distribution of taxation stamps. Exhibitors will not be required to break down the gross, as between established price and sales tax. Signs will carry only the full admission, tax included. . . .

INCOME TAX QUERY

Tom Maloy, Chicago projectionists' union head; his assistant, Ralph O'Hara, and Tom Reynolds, union president, have been called to federal court in a resumption of an inquiry into their income tax returns. Investigation into union affairs appears a likely outcome of the initial inquiry. Jack Miller, president of the local exhibitors' association, may be involved.

JAPANESE IMPROVEMENT

Improved conditions for the film industry in Japan were predicted last week by Lipton Astrachan, managing director there for Universal, who based his conclusion on general business upturn and improved American product. His recommendation to American producers desirous of better Japanese business is to "cut down on dialogue." . . .

FILM CONTEST

Audio Productions and First Division offer $1,000 in cash prizes to individual members or clubs presenting the seven best scenarios of pictures to be included in the new series of "Musical Moods," produced by Audio, released by First Division. The National Federation of Music Clubs has endorsed and will sponsor the contest. Dates: Dec. 15-April 15. A supplmentary contest, with award of $500, is for the best exploitation campaign by a theatre man during the contest. . . .

JULES CRONJAGER

Jules Cronjager, for years a well known cameraman on the Coast, died last week, the victim of a paralytic stroke. . . .

STEREOSCOPIC FILMS

Definite results within a year, stereoscopic pictures within two years, is the hope of Gaumont British and Imperial Chemical Industries, England, as the result of experiments in that field, according to a cabled report by Joan Littlefield, North American Newspaper Alliance correspondent in London. Details of the work are secret, says the writer, although complicated processes of filming and projection are involved. . . .

FOX SALES POST

Jack Sichelman has been named head of a new Fox sales department to handle distribution of all Fox pictures made outside of the Hollywood studio. Clayton P. Sheehan, general foreign manager, made the appointment. Mr. Sichelman was formerly manager of the Fox Movietone News Bureau. . . .

"INTIMATE" THEATRES

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld and his associates in the opening of the Filmarte theatre in Hollywood plan a circuit of similar "intimate" houses, dependent upon the success of the Filmarte. With Abe Mayer and Ira Simmons, Dr. Riesenfeld has formed the Filmarte Distributing Company. . . .

MILK FUND

With the proceeds from a bowling tournament sponsored by the Kansas City Variety Club and the Kansas City Star, $802, a milk fund for undernourished children in eight local schools is to be established. Frank C. Hensler, MGM branch manager and club president, originated the idea, which received wholehearted cooperation. . . .

REINHARDT VICTOR

Judge Emmett Wilson in Los Angeles superior court last week dissolved the restraining order and refused an injunction asked against Max Reinhardt, producing "A Midsummer Night's Dream" for Warner. A London producer had initiated the action. The court declared the complainant had evaded the full terms of a contract, over which they brought the action.

A VETERAN

For a leading role in his forthcoming "The Crusades," a Paramount release, Cecil B. DeMille last week cast Pedro de Cordoba, who 19 years ago played for DeMille opposite Geraldine Farrar in three silent films, "Carmen," "Maria Rosa" and "Temptation." It will be his first appearance in talking films. His was the expert narration of Fox's "The First World War."

1,210 THEATRES UNDER PARAMOUNT'S CONTROL

Emerging from Reorganizing with 970 Houses in 39 States of the Union; 240 Others in Canada and Abroad

By FRED AYER

The Paramount Publix theatre structure will emerge from reorganization with interests of varying nature in 970 motion picture theatres in 39 states of the Union and in 240 additional houses in Canada and abroad, a total of 1,210 theatres. The houses for the most part are operated under partnership arrangement with 38 companies, which in almost all cases are vested with complete authority in the buying of film, dictation of policy, the hiring of labor and, in a number of instancees, the matter of financing. Paramount, at the time it became bankrupt, operated 1,100 theatres in the United States and Canada alone.

A most noticeable effect in the reorganization has been the improvement in monetary returns from the properties, this as a direct result of decentralization.

No audited consolidated statements of operation for the year 1932 were prepared but it was estimated recently there was a loss in 1932 of $21,000,000, of which $9,600,000 was incurred in production and distribution, the remainder in exhibition. In 1933, however, following decentralization and bankruptcy, the theatre subsidiaries showed net operating earnings of $160,000, and for the first nine months of 1934 they were $482,000. These figures, published in the company's plan of reorganization early in December, did not include returns from Olympia Theatres, Inc., the Minnesota Amusement Co. and Saenger Theatres, Inc., all then in receivership.

At least 200 theatres had been acquired in 1929 and 1930 by part-cash payments and the remainder in stock with a guarantee to buy back, a few years later, at prices ranging from 20 to 25 per cent higher than at the time the deals were made. When the company's stock went downward, with all others, difficulties arose as the repurchases became due.

A year and one-half ago Paramount had interest in 899 houses, virtually every one of which was under the operation of a receiver or trustee in bankruptcy. Eighty-five theatres had been turned back to former owners and landlords and 47 more had been closed or their leases disaffirmed.

Today nearly all these have been removed from the receivership or bankruptcy status, the only ones remaining being those of the three aforementioned circuits and the New York Paramount and Brooklyn Paramount theatres. Saenger Theatres' reorganization plan was approved Wednesday by Referee John A. Joyce and federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York.

Immediately following Sam Katz's resignation in the first week of November, 1932, Paramount began decentralizing. E. V. Richards repurchased an interest in the Saenger theatres. Nathan Goldstein acquired an interest in and management of the former GB circuit in New England. George Trendle commenced negotiations for Publix properties in Detroit. R. J. O'Donnell assumed operation of 23 Publix theatres in Texas. Houses were returned to E. J. Sparks, Wilby-Kincey and Ed Dubinsky.

A map showing, by states, the Paramount theatre holdings in 39 of the United States, appears on the following pages. Also recorded are the total theatres in each state and total seating capacity of Paramount houses.

In January, 1933, Publix was reported 65 per cent decentralized. Fifty theatres had been returned to M. E. Comerford, in addition to the aforementioned deals. By January 28 it was reported that Publix had completed its decentralization program, with operators of various units vested with 90 per cent authority over their theatre charges and the remaining 10 per cent, consisting largely of budgetary supervision, under home office control.

On January 26, however, Paramount went into a voluntary receivership and at the same time Publix Enterprises, now defunct, filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition, listing assets at $24,864,076 and liabilities at $41,214,407. The corporation acknowledged an interest in 1,340 theatres, 1,100 in the United States and 240 in Canada and abroad.

Virtually every theatre subsidiary of Paramount also went into bankruptcy or receivership, and in March, 1933, Paramount Publix Corporation entered bankruptcy.

Lynch Heads Committee

The trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, maintained a strict silence regarding disposition of Publix theatres until May 27, 1933, at which time it was announced that S. A. Lynch, one time theatre ruler of the South as head of Southern Enterprises, Inc., had returned to active participation in exhibition as chairman of a committee formed to reorganize the entire Paramount Publix theatre holdings.

With its one-time control split a hundred ways by receiverships, bankruptcies and reversion of many theatres to former owners, Paramount announced on May 29 that it had no intention of relinquishing its hold as an exhibitor on a far-flung national scale.

Made Operating Partners

When the company entered voluntary bankruptcy in March of 1933, the majority of the former and new owners to whom Paramount had given operating control became the operating receivers and trustees and it is to these men today that the company has turned over the partnership operations. Many operate on a 50 per cent profit basis. In all instances, however, Paramount maintains control.

Improved Returns from Properties Reflected in Reorganization; Most Houses Now Under 38 Cooperating Companies

Much of the loss which the film industry in its entirety suffered during the general business recession was directly traceable to topheavy theatre expansion and centralized operation.

During Paramount's decentralization program, which started late in 1932 with the resignation of Sam Katz as vice-president of Paramount Publix, comparatively few theatres were turned back to landlords or to new companies and even fewer leases were canceled or disaffirmed. This was borne out in the listing of Paramount theatres in the July 1, 1933 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. At its peak the circuit had 1,300 theatres.

Theatres Affected in Late 1931

It was not until late in 1931 that the motion picture business began to feel acutely the economic retrogression. Paramount felt the burden severely, not only from the point of numbers of its holdings but chiefly because it was committed financially in these holdings and still was forced to spend money on additional building.

In the early spring of 1932, Adolph Zukor, Paramount president, on cross-questioning by Attorney Nathan Burkan on behalf of a group of stockholders, disclosed that the first quarter of that year showed an operating deficit of $1,236,000 after depreciation. A bank credit of $13,000,000 had been arranged to meet company requirements, amounting at that time, it was said, to $10,000,000.

Later it was learned that the corporation and its subsidiaries owned some 1,700 pieces of real estate having a value upward of $260,000,000. Against these properties were outstanding obligations aggregating $70,000,000.

Some six months thereafter Paramount commenced decentralization after the resignation of Sam Katz.

Since 1926 the Paramount Publix theatre circuit had expanded into almost every corner of the United States and Canada. Deals had been made with A. H. Blank, in Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska; with W. S. Butterfield, who had large holdings in Michigan; hundreds of properties were bought from E. J. Sparks in Florida and Clinton and Myers in Minnesota. Saenger's circuit in the South was acquired, as were the Kunsky and Trendle interests in Michigan; Maine and New Hampshire theatres in New England, the Northwest Theatre Circuit, M. A. Shea's houses in upper New York and Canada. Wilby, Kincey, Lucas and Baum holdings in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas, and Comerford theatres in Pennsylvania. The old Gray circuit was acquired in New England, as were Walter Reade's houses in New Jersey, along with scores of others.

In the congested New England states the seating total is shown alongside the state total in a few instances.

Nine states not designated by name in the map are states in which Paramount does not operate, nor are any Paramount theatres listed in the District of Columbia. The nine states are Delaware and Kentucky, east of the Mississippi; Kansas in the middlewest, and, farther west, Montana, Wyoming, Nevada, and finally on the Pacific seaboard Washington state, Oregon and California.

Eight theatres, formerly operated by Paramount in California and Oregon, are now the property of Fox West Coast Theatres, which has virtually a monopoly of the theatre situation on the West Coast.

ONLY NINE STATES NOT REPRESENTED

Operating in 39 states at the present time, Paramount maintains no theatre interests in Kentucky, Wyoming, California, Washington, Oregon, Delaware, Kansas, Montana, Nevada and the District of Columbia.

On the West Coast the company formerly operated eight theatres, in San Francisco, San Diego, Los Angeles and in the state of Oregon. These are now properties of Fox West Coast Theatres, giving Fox West Coast a virtual monopoly on the Pacific seaboard.

WELL MET. (Below) James Blakely, masculine lead in Columbia's "Mills of the Gods," arriving in New York for a vacation following its completion, and being greeted by his mother, Mrs. Grace Hyde, and Barbara Hutton Mdivani.

ARRANGE DISTRIBUTION. Al Lichtman, vice-president and sales executive of United Artists, and Leon Garganoff (seated), producer of "Thunder in the East," as they signed for the release of this production by United Artists.

WARNER WITHDRAWS 301 HOUSES FROM ERPI'S SERVICING SYSTEM

Company Takes First Step Toward Establishing Own Sound Servicing Facilities; Erpi Starting General Equipment Service

Film Company's Action Is Exercise of Settlement Clause Permitting Voidance of Compulsory Servicing of Its Theatres

On New Year Day, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., withdrew its 301 motion picture theatres which have been serviced by Electrical Research Products, Inc., from this arrangement, and took first steps in the establishment of sound servicing facilities of its own.

This action is in sequel to the legal dissolution last June of the Western Electric-Warner "partnership" which some eight years ago brought sound to the theatre screen.

Erpi Expands Servicing

The Erpi servicing structure was further changed this week when the management, of which John E. Otterson is the head, finally decided, after a year's experimentation, to expand its present form, which heretofore has been concentrated on the servicing only of sound reproducers, to embrace a general equipment service for the entire theatre, supervising, in an advisory capacity, the maintenance and operation of power, projection, light, heat, sound, building maintenance and other engineering functions of the theatre.

Withdrawal by the Warner Brothers of their theatres from Erpi servicing established a precedent in the electric's rigid policy of compulsory servicing of the 5,500 Western Electric reproducers installed to date in theatres in this country. The move came with dramatic suddenness, wholly unexpected by the industry, and was made legally possible through the workings of some of the secretly-held phases of the agreement by which Warner and Erpi effected a settlement last June of the seven-year battle over sound royalties claimed by Warner as its share of the profits for participating with Western Electric in the commercialization of sound through Vitaphone.

The only terms of the agreement which were made public in the summer were those mentioned in an official dual statement which said: "The settlement clears accounts of the parties outstanding at various dates, and, in addition, provides for the surrender by the Vitaphone Corporation to Electrical Research of Vitaphone's right to participate in future royalties. In addition to clearing the accounts, Electrical Research pays Warner Brothers $2,500,000 in cash, $1,300,000 in negotiable promisory notes and an amount not to exceed $200,000 payable on certain contingencies." Warner was variously reported as having estimated its royalty claims at $50,000,000.

One of the important parts of the settlement which had not been revealed by either party was a clause in the agreement which gave Warners the right to void the compulsory servicing clause of its theatre reproducer licenses any time between the date of the settlement in June and January 1st, 1935. It was agreed that if Warner did arrive at such a decision both parties would first participate in friendly discussions with the point in view of negotiating a new blanket servicing contract. These discussions were held, in utmost secrecy, over a period of weeks.

Electrical Research Products finally submitted a new proposal, economically more favorable than the existing one, but Warner Brothers rejected it on the ground that while it did give certain price concessions and was not out of proportion to the service to be performed, the Warner management could save considerable by doing its own servicing.

The executive offices of Electrical Research in New York unofficially expressed the belief Wednesday that there was still a possibility of adverting the withdrawal by Warner of its theatres from the servicing arrangement. The Warner home office, however, did not hold the same opinion.

Continues as Erpi Licensee

Warner Brothers will remain an Erpi licensee, continuing in use the Western Electric recording system at its California studio at Burbank, and the Western Electric reproducers in the 301 theatres of the circuit's 400 houses. Installed in the remaining 99 theatres are reproducers of RCA Photophone, Pacent Electric and some 18 machines manufactured and installed by Warner's own United Research Corporation, a development which Warner has been quietly nurturing for some two or three years.

There is no intention at the moment on the part of Warner Brothers to develop its United Research sound equipment manufacturing subsidiary to the capacity of turning out reproducers on the wholesale to replace the Western Electric reproducers now installed. This, they held, would be economically unsound.

The Warner move is not by any means a victory for that minority exhibitor group which has expressed itself variously in vigorous tones against the policy of compulsory servicing, and which apparently exerted some influence in causing RCA Photophone to abandon the policy in favor of servicing by voluntary decision of the theatre,

Because the 400 Warner theatres are not too widely separated, the time element of emergency servicing will not interfere with proper supervision and maintenance of the reproducers. Some 70 per cent of the company's exhibition properties are concentrated in the comparatively geographically-limited area embracing New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and New Jersey.

Electrical Research charges theatres for servicing from $15 to $40 a week, depending on the size of the theatre, the volume of the equipment and the number of hours per week during which the house operates. Striking an average of $26 per theatre weekly, Warner's service bill from Erpi would approximate $400,000 yearly.

The new Erpi servicing structure will comprise three forms: (1) Ordinary servicing of the equipment, parts extra per piece; (2) Repair and replacement, through which Erpi agrees to service the reproducer and supply parts, at a cost slightly higher than ordinary servicing; (3) General supervision over all engineering facilities and factors, including, as previously mentioned, power, sound, projection, light, heat and building maintenance, for which an additional increase in the ordinary servicing fee will be made. Some 3,000 theatres are now serviced on "Repair and Replacement" contracts.

The new form of complete theatre engineering service will function out of Erpi headquarters in New York and in Chicago and Los Angeles, in charge of H. M. Wilcox.

Unique Censor Bill Up in N. Y. State

Senator John T. McCall (Dem., New York City) has introduced in the state rights ture a bill which would establish a unique form of censorship.

"At present," Senator McCall explained, "all that the motion picture censorship law attempts to do is to censor a picture before it is distributed. The exhibitor, when he purchases a picture, has little knowledge of its character outside of the title. The bill I have introduced provides that the director of the censorship board shall adopt rules and regulations to maintain a standard of morality and decency in the production of motion pictures, to cooperate with civic and religious organizations in the prohibiting of the exhibition of pictures that offend morality and decency; to prescribe forms of contract between distributors and exhibitors; to approve a synopsis of the story in each film, which synopsis is to be furnished by the distributor to the exhibitor to classify motion pictures into three groups: (A) suitable for adult showing, (B) suitable for the entire family, and (C) suitable for juvenile audiences."

Furthermore, Senator McCall explained, the rules would provide that all advertising matter shall contain a statement that the film proposed for exhibition has been approved by the censorship board as suitable for adult, family, or juvenile exhibition. The classification of pictures would not legally prohibit children from seeing an adult picture, but is intended as a guide to the public.

All distributors and exhibitors would be licensed, distributors paying a fee of $50 a year and exhibitors $10. The distributors would be required to file a $5,000 bond, exhibitors $1,000.

'LIBERTY' NAMES TOMORROW'S STARS

The era of sophistication in Hollywood is a thing of the past and it's back to down-to-earth pictures, according to the current issue of Liberty Magazine, in an article presenting "The Stars of Tomorrow," a running commentary on the prospects of ten of Hollywood's young actresses, who, according to the publication and the author of the article, Clara Beranger, will supplant the film great of today.

"Hollywood, which serves as a barometer for public taste in stars, has sensed the new trend," says the writer. "Hollywood was quick to realize that the pendulum had swung away from artificiality and sophistication toward honesty and sincerity, away from sex appeal and glamour toward sweetness and natural charm."

Vincent Lynch Dies

Vincent Lynch, well known exhibitor in Chicago, died last week after a long illness.

U.S. To Rule on Czecho "Ecstasy"

The United States Government this week, through the Treasury Department, entered the motion picture business in a role somewhat similar to that of the Production Code Administration in Hollywood. The occasion was the previewing of the much-discussed Czechoslovakian prize-winning film, "Ecstasy," which created a furore in Europe last summer and which Eureka Productions is seeking to import to this country.

Dubbed "the most audacious picture of modern times," apparently because there is a maximum of nudity involved, "Ecstasy" nearly caused a split between the Pope and Mussolini last year, when Italy's dictator planned to award the film a medal as the year's best film after the Pope had condemned it. Eventually, Il Duce's award went to Gaumont British's "Man of Aran."

In addition, the husband of the film's heroine—known in private life as Hedy Keisler—is an Austrian munitions magnate and is reported to have been spending huge sums to have the film suppressed all over Europe.

The film was privately shown in a New York theatre last week before an audience including Ely Frank, counsel for the Customs Division; Herbert Oliphant, U. S. Treasury counsel, and Hunting Carns, morals advisor to the Treasury.

If the film is banned it would be excluded under the indecency provision of the Tariff Act.

Reorganizing Plan of Pathe Detailed

Pathe Exchange, Inc., this week formally issued its plan of reorganization, which is to be submitted to an extraordinary meeting of the company's stockholders on March 4 at the Pathe home offices.

According to the plan, the new corporation will be authorized to issue collateral secured notes limited to the aggregate principal amount of $4,000,000 at any time outstanding. These will bear interest at such rates and will be convertible into common stock of the new company under such terms and having such other provisions as the board of directors of the new company shall determine.

The notes may be issued from time to time by the board to retire all or any part of the $2,027,500 principal amount of the outstanding 7 per cent sinking fund debentures maturing May 1, 1937.

Under the plan, the $7 convertible preferred stock of the new company without par value shall be entitled to dividends cumulative from the date as of which the shares are issued and will be convertible into common stock of the new company at the option of the holder at any time at the rate of five shares of common stock of the new company for each share of $7 convertible preferred stock.

In addition to the shares of common stock of the new company to be presently outstanding, as stated, 17,600 shares will be reserved for issue at a price of $6 per share and 2,490 shares will be reserved for issue at a price of $40 per share.

F IT'S A PARAMOUNT PICTURE IT'S THE BEST SHOWN IN TOWN

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Publication by Covici, Friede of Gene Fowler's "Mighty Barnum" motion picture script for public digestion in book form caused A. J. Liebling to reminisce a bit about the days when the novel and screen writer Fowler ran the New York Morning Telegraph, Broadway racing sheet, for six months, and caused the general level of newspaper wages in New York to be raised about 150 per cent—much to the consternation of the town's publishers.

The Daily Telegraph was in need of a hypodermic and, unknown to his boss, Mr. Fowler went out and hired every reporter he considered competent, at a salary $200 a week more than the reporter was receiving at the time. He lined up a staff including Ring Lardner (at $50,000 a year for four stories a week), Ben Hecht, Charles MacArthur (listed as a 'cub' reporter), Martha Ostenso, Lois Long, Nellie Revell, S. Jay Kaufman and Walter Winchell (incognito to avoid contractual complications). These he topped off with David Belasco, Maria Jeritza and a couple of dozen others.

One day Mr. Fowler assigned his whole staff to a very small-time prize fight, each star to cover a single round. Lardner was to write the sixth, Mme. Jeritza the seventh, Belasco the eighth—but, "one of the bums went into the tank on the fifth, so Lardner insisted on writing the sixth round anyway, because he said the evening was killed." Westbrook Pegler wrote round one.

At about the same time Joe Moore, publisher of the Telegraph, noticed he had a payroll as large as a federal budget—and Gene Fowler's newspaper publishing career ended on the spot.

Antoinette Cellier, actress daughter of Frank Cellier, went to Hollywood some time ago under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Young Antoinette had had considerable stage and film experience in London. However, after sitting around in Hollywood for three months, doing nothing, at a fat salary, she began to wonder whether she would ever act again. Came the day when David O. Selznick, Metro producer who personally had signed her, while in London, ordered that Miss Cellier be brought to his sanctum. Heart in mouth, hopes high in anticipation of the big chance for a Hollywood part, Antoinette arrived at the Selznick office. "Hello," he greeted. "Hello," replied Antoinette. "That's all," he said, "I just wanted to see what you looked like."

Antoinette Cellier came back to New York and is now appearing on the New York stage, where, if Hollywood custom holds, Mr. Selznick will one day "discover" her all over again and announce that he has made "a sensational find."

Wealthy Howard Hughes, whose interest is about equally divided among oil, aviation and motion pictures, is supposed to be secretly engaged at the moment in the construction in Los Angeles of a mystery airplane, estimated to cost $250,000, in which he expects to race from California to New York in seven hours, a la "Hell's Angels."

The Supervisor's Assistant . . .

by JESSE L. LASKY, JR.

—Thanks to the Hollywood Screen Guild

I CAME into the inner-sanctum of the Third Assistant Supervisor. He was completely alone, a couple of murdered scripts lay in their own blood in the corner, a half-smoked cigar lolled out of his mouth. He had been going over a production schedule, and looked as though he didn't want to see me.

"I don't want to see you," he said.

I clung to the woodwork, and tried to resemble a mural. Then he saw it, that yellow, half-born thing under my arm, a new script.

"What you got there?"

I tried to tell him, but my voice faltered, so he took it from me.

Fiercely his eyes pierced into my young hopeful. I knew something terrible was wrong. He glared at one page, until I thought he might bite into it, and chew up the offender.

"What the hell's that?" he said.

"What the hell's what?"

"That word!"

He stared it down, shook ashes upon it, kicked it with his foot. "Arrogant!" he exploded. "You think the general public are going to know what that means? You think Tom, Dick, Harry and Moses, and all the people in Squehatchet and Peuw River will know the meaning of the word 'arrogant'?"

I was silent. I felt that he was right.

"Pick up the telephone," he snapped.

I obeyed. The operator's voice tinkled up, a friendly, polite, familiar thing.

"Number please?"

"Ask her if she knows what 'arrogant' means," he said through his teeth. "I'll bet only one in a hundred will know."

"Do you know what 'arrogant' means?" I asked the operator fearfully. There was an awful pause . . . then her sweet voice rippled up again.

"Why, yes sir. It means proud, conceited."

I hung up.

"Well?" he grouched at me, "What did she say?"

"She said it means proud, conceited."

"You see . . . one in a hundred. . . . One in a hundred will know."

No British exhibitor would hesitate to buy Metro's "Merry Widow" musical after reading in London's Film Weekly *the editor's stirring and dramatic account of the extent of Metro's lavishness in production. Erich von Stroheim, now near 50, sadly bowed his head in a Los Angeles courtroom the other day and, according to the Associated Press, admitted that he's broke, possessing only $11.31 and a single pair of shiny trousers, unable to pay $5 a week for the support of a son.

Mr. von Stroheim, Viennese, lavished $1,100,000 on the silent motion picture "Foolish Wives," $675,000 on "The Merry Widow," $1,400,000 on "The Wedding March" and $930,000 on "Queen Kelly."

Write your own scenario—or, Carl Laemmle, Pat Powers and Joseph P. Kennedy will collaborate, without charge for their services.

Movie observers of Portland, Oregon, especially some of the city's leading physicians, in scanning la Garbo's new "Painted Veil" at the United Artists, are said to have reacted with horror to the scene where Herbert Marshall, as a physician, stalks into a room in which the previous doctor on the job died of the dreaded cholera. Marshall gathers up the clothing of the deceased in his bare hands and hurls it across the room into a group of onlookers, with the command: "Burn these!" It makes a fine piece of dramatics, the Oregonians hold, but, considering the virulence of the epidemic, it would have scattered enough germs to wipe out the whole Hollywood movie colony. And, so, we promise to talk to Mr. Mayer for so carelessly throwing cholera germs around.

In pre-repeal days, to hear Victor Shapiro tell it, purveyors of contraband spirits gave production and studio managers plenty of headaches, and not from imbibing therein, either. Later came swarms of insurance agents, antique salesmen and physical culture trainers to hold further high carnival on the studio grounds. Production suffered accordingly. But, the other day, a bright young publicity writer for Samuel Goldwyn's Russian Anna Sten provided the straw that broke the camel's back, announcing as he did in a notice to the newspapers that Anna was in the market for a new automobile. An army of ambitious auto salesmen was soon camping on the United Artists' lot, and such a trivial thing as making motion pictures for exhibitors was out of the question.

Then came the exasperated Sam Goldwyn's ukase, to be immediately adopted by every other studio in Hollywood. In the future, he said, any reference to a star's intention to buy a house, dog, car, new suit, flock of birds, bonds or babies, "must be included OUT of all publicity."

Adolphe Menjou was once a motion picture producer, with Amedee J. Van Beuren, in the late 1910's, so he told Broadway Lou Sobol the other day. Menjou and Van Beuren had to go to Chicago and engage the old Rothacker studio to work, because Ernest Truex, their star, was playing in a show there. Whenever the two ambitious producers needed extras they would rush over to the old Colosimo Cafe and round up the girls. Mr. Colosimo's husky bodyguard, one Al Brown, frequently had to aid in the roundup. Brown got to like the show business through this "forceful" participation therein, but he stayed in Chicago and entered other fields as Al Capone, present guest of the federal government at Alcatraz.

Choosing the moment when Frank (Bring 'em Back Alive) Buck was on the high seas bound for Singapore, a performing mouse broke away from his trainers and ran wild the other day at the New York studios of Van Beuren.

To hear Mr. Van Beuren's company tell about the incident, the trained mouse broke out of a toy house, and "with a blood-curdling roar," dashed into an adjoining room, where, "terrified at the animal's ferocious appearance," some ladies screamed loudly and long. "A few minutes fast work by ARMED keepers," said the announcement, "returned the vicious mouse" to its house.

FILM SHARES $106,614,125 HIGHER IN MARKET VALUE THAN YEAR AGO

Motion Picture Issues Also Play Noteworthy Part in Strength and Activity of Bond Market; In the Curb Upswing Also

by THE ANALYST

Motion picture stocks and bonds made the best showing of any individual group of issues on the New York Stock Exchange during 1934, appreciating in value some $106,614,125, bringing the net gain for the film issues since the end of 1932 up to $237,949,250. Some of the film stocks gained as much as 20 points during the year. In contrast with the irregular performances of industrials, rails and public utilities at the end of 1934, film shares were universally higher, and the prospect of continued improvement in the nation's general business brightened the 1935 outlook further for the motion picture securities.

Market Value Rises

The total market value of motion picture shares on the New York Stock Exchange at the end of 1934 was $457,773,125, against $351,159,000 at the end of 1933, and $220,201,875 at the close of 1932.

Equally remarkable was the vigorous part that motion picture issues played in the general strength and activity of the New York Stock Exchange's bond market during 1934. This was due chiefly to improvement in capital structures of film companies and rehabilitation of corporations recently in financial difficulties. The New York Curb Exchange, also, witnessed an upswing in its handful of motion picture stocks.

The continued rise of motion picture shares outstripped the Stock Exchange's industrial groups in scope. Brokers reported that the buying of film shares, while not exceptionally large in most cases, was of the kind that Wall Street calls "informed" and much of it comes from the industry itself.

Most Highs Late in Year

The majority of motion picture issues touched their 1934 highs in the latter half of the year, when a large increase in public purchasing power pointed toward continued gains in box office receipts and when solutions of the problems raised by a religious anti-film campaign appeared to have been found.

Completed reorganization of Paramount Publix Corporation was a strengthening factor to the industry in general. On the Stock Exchange bonds of the company and affiliates that had been in receivership since early in 1932 gave a notable demonstration of strength. Paramount Publix 5½s, due 1950, and Paramount Famous Lasky 6s, due 1947, showed net gains of about 32 points, each rising above 65.

The Paramount reorganization revived hopes of early similar action for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, although it appeared such a development might be delayed considerably longer by diverse views of some major RKO creditors.

Columbia Pictures was comparatively the best performer of the industry's listed stocks, reflecting a demand based on the company's establishment of the best depression earnings record of any unit in the business. Voting trust certificates for the stock advanced about 15 points to around 39, having touched a high above 41 early in December. Loew's, of course, continued to be a favorite. At no time were profits below $2 a share and the company declared an extra dividend of 75 cents a share in the final quarter. With a sound financial position and capital structure, the company was exepected to show for 1934 recovery of at least 40 per cent of the ground lost since the record year of 1930. Common stock of the company rose 6 points to a final of near 35, while the preferred showed a net gain of more than 32 points at above 104.

Largest Gain by Eastman

Due to its large outstanding stock and relatively high price, Eastman Kodak showed the largest gain in stock market valuation, rising $78,750,000 in this connection to a total market value of $281,250,000.

A development that at first glimpse threatened to have severe financial repercussion on the industry was the U. S. Supreme Court's upholding, early in October, of the validity of William Fox's Tri-Ergon sound patents. While resulting in a threatening maze of litigation, however, it gave no indication of becoming an unusually disturbing factor.

Other Stock Exchange gains made by the securities companies in the motion picture industry and by companies affiliated with the business, included a rise of 3⅜ points in the stock of Consolidated Film common; 9⅞ points in Consolidated preferred; 16½ points in Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred; 6 points in Loew's, Inc., common; 8 points in affiliated MGM preferred; 4 points in Pathe Exchange "A"; 20¼ in Universal Pictures preferred, and 5¾ in Warner Brothers preferred.

Only two Stock Exchange issues of motion picture interests ended the year lower than at the end of 1933. These were Pathe Exchange common, down three-eighths of a point, and Warner Brothers common, off five-eighths of a point.

Wall Street looked for a gradual return to a pre-depression level of motion picture profits, although it recognized some of the problems facing the industry at the year end, including dual billing, relatively high studio costs and increased radio competition.

Double billing in Wall Street opinion was likely to be a boom to independent producers but at the expense of the major units. Regarding studio costs estimates of film budgets ranged in some financial circles from 10 to 20 per cent over a year ago.

The New York Times annual survey, of 40 groups as of December 1, placed amusement industries well up in the lead in appreciation of stock values. While autos and accessories gained an average of $1.09, amusement shares were credited with $2.75 gain.

Ludington Starts 1st Division Films

Nicholas S. Ludington, president of First Division Productions and vice-president of First Division Exchanges, left New York for Hollywood last week to inaugurate the company's production program, which will get underway shortly after the 15th of this month.

The company's schedule calls for from four to eight feature pictures annually, in addition to the four Hoot Gibson western films already announced, and to which Mr. Ludington will devote the next three months.

In New York, John Curtis, vice-president of both First Division companies, announced the appointment of Henry Hobart, former RKO and Paramount production executive, as a vice-president in complete charge of all production activity. Mr. Hobart is now on the Coast.

The Hoot Gibson westerns will all have dialogue written by James Gleason, and the first, tentatively titled "The World Owes Me a Living," is from an original by Paul Scofield.

"It is the aim of First Division Productions to make entertaining pictures," said Mr. Curtis. "Such a purpose necessitates comedy and action. Fortunately, insofar as our westerns are concerned, Mr. Gibson is one western star who, in addition to his acting and riding ability, is one of the screen's most enjoyable comedians.

"After completion of the four Gibson westerns the company will start a series of from four to eight pictures.

"We believe we can maintain a consistently high standard of product and can more quickly and successfully establish the name 'First Division Productions' in the minds of exhibitors and audiences by limiting the number of our productions."

Mr. Curtis, who was largely responsible for the acquisition by First Division Exchanges of the distribution of Time magazine's "March of Time" reel, to be released nationally the end of this month, leaves for Hollywood January 6.

"Barretts" Wins "Ten Best" Poll

Some 425 newspaper critics of motion pictures voted MGM's "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" the best picture of the year in Film Daily's annual contest. "The House of Rothschild," United Artists, was a close second followed, in order, by "It Happened One Night," Columbia; "One Night of Love," Columbia; "Little Women," RKO; "The Thin Man," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; "Vica Villa," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; "Dinner At Eight," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; "Count of Monte Cristo," United Artists, and "Berkeley Square," Fox. The selections do not necessarily include the pictures with the greatest grosses.

Now Comes Mystery in Adams' Tilt with Hecht and MacArthur

Ben "Crime" Hecht and Charles "Passion" MacArthur
In their Hechtic Adventure Drama,
"Lost In The Shrubbery!"

The mystifying photograph received by Roy W. Adams as an episode in the "Crime Without Passion" matter, now adorning the lobby.

"'WHAT the Hecht—We were Only Fooling,' say Charlie and Ben." With this caption Roy W. Adams of the Mason theatres at Mason, Michigan, offers what he styles "Episode Two of the Great 'Crime Without Passion' serial."

A further element of mystery is the latest addition to the controversy which had its origin in a reply by the author-producers, Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, to comment by Mr. Adams in a report to "What the Picture Did For Me" department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, all of which Mr. Adams fashioned into a lobby collection.

Last week Ludwig Sussman of the Adelphi theatre in Chicago and Louis Charninsky of the Capitol theatre in St. Louis reported how they had heard a cheerful ringing sound from the direction of the box office after applying shrewd showmanship to the picture.

But now comes a new Adams letter, with photograph and copy of a mystifying bit of correspondence. And, to continue the complete record, there follow further reports from exhibitors and sundry other communications, one from H. E. Jameyson, district manager of Fox Midwest Theatre Corporation, Kansas City, Mo; another from Al Zimbalist, advertising and publicity director of St. Louis Amusement Company.

The letter to Mr. Adams seems to have been addressed by one "Janus Q. Sheetes" (?) and follows:

HECHT MACARTHUR INC.
Astoria, L. I.
November 28th, 1934

Roy W. Adams, Esq.,
Mason Theatre,
Mason, Michigan.
Dear Mr. Adams:

Your request for photographs of Mr. Hecht and Mr. MacArthur to hang in your lobby received, and I am forwarding one under separate cover. Unfortunately, as neither Mr. Hecht nor Mr. MacArthur ever grants autographs, I am unable to fulfill your wishes in this respect.

Cordially yours,
(Signed) Janus Q. Sheetes(?),
Secretary to Mr. Hecht

Mr. Adams adds this note:

"I confess I couldn't see much connection between this communication and mine of November 26th which it was supposed to answer, but I suspected some satirical meaning too deep for a nit-wit exhibitor to catch, and the enclosed photograph, received a few days later, seems to confirm that suspicion. Both the letter and the original photograph have been added to the interesting collection of Hecht-MacArthur memorabilia in my lobby.

"I have had several letters from exhibitors whose experience with 'Crime Without Passion' was similar to mine—that is, concerning audience reaction. One publicity expert wants me to book a return date on the picture and he will do the exploitation gratis, but I still fear my people wouldn't like the picture any better than they did the first time, no matter how much ballyhoo we feed them. When I sell tickets to an attraction I want them to stay sold."

From H. E. Jameyson, of Fox Midwest Theatres at Kansas City, Mo., come these observations:

"An erudite partnership labors, groans and finally whelps: 'Crime Without Passion' is given to the world.

"'A monster!' declares a nitwit exhibitor as he observes the financial consequences of erudition.

"'Great art!' screams the parental twain.

"We have long since decided we are unfit to run one theatre, let alone twenty-five. The mere fact we know the definition of erudition and a couple of other two syllable words has seemed to contribute to our unfitness—an inhibiting factor so to speak.

"But what about this 'great art' stuff of which Messrs. Hecht and MacArthur speak so dogmatically?

"A few years ago you could have bought a gross of Watteaus for a hundred bucks—the other day the Metropolitan paid a cool quarter of a million for one. What is art?—time lapse?

"And take that other great artistic partnership—Currier & Ives. There's one of them in the Chic Sale Annex of my vacation retreat. I hope some snooping (or cramping) connoisseur doesn't get to it before I do—there's money in them thar prints.

"If 'What the Picture Did for Me' column, and if forthcoming royalty figures prove to 'the great artists' that they are wasting their fragrance on the desert air, let them take hope—posterity is always around the corner."

"Under the title of 'They Can't Take It' on page 14 of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of December 15th, I read your scathing remarks anent 'Crime Without Passion'—and the public's response.

"Without a doubt, 'Crime Without Passion' is not the industry's best box office bet—but following through its results in various communities throughout the United States and particularly St. Louis, it is doing a pretty good business. It is a piece of movie merchandise which must be brought to the public's attention as being good movie entertainment. We are doing just that.

"I don't know what approach you used in selling this picture to your patrons. The press sheet was inaccurate as far as our campaign was concerned.

"The picture brought enthusiastic plaudits from the press and from those who have enjoyed the picture — remembering, however, that in every situation it was on a double program, that being the present policy here.

"It is being sold as a number one picture!

"The fact that you display Messrs. Hecht and MacArthur's letter in your lobby together with your own preface, tends to lessen public favor towards pictures. It is a problem of the motion picture industry's goodwill being torn apart. Bad enough we have crusades throughout the country. But you added insult to injury when you made such an attempt. Supposing, as you intimate, that the picture was a 'stinker.' It was made with an honest attempt to provide entertainment for every audience in the world. It was made under the auspices of men who are considered genii in our industry. I think you made a bold, bad mistake criticizing a product which was built primarily to give you profits, but most important to make friends of your patrons.

"Do you remember this: 'A bad carpenter always blames his tools.' How did you sell the picture? Was an honest attempt made? Did you present proper facts? Did you try to sell it with a sneer on your face Or did you try to sell it properly?"

Mystery Added To Picture Tilt

The following report to "What the Picture Did for Me" is from William A. Clark of the Garden Theatre at Canton, Ill.:

"One of the least liked pictures we have ever screened. Title means nothing and what few saw the picture didn't appreciate what it was all about. It was without beauty and no comedy relief and the introduction would give you the shivers. We took a nice loss on the picture and informed the Paramount people we would exercise our cancellation privilege on the balance of the Hecht & MacArthur releases. This expresses our opinion of the picture in dollars and cents. Their letter to Mr. Adams really shows Hecht & MacArthur's idea of entertainment and I can assure you the dear public won't accept it.

"Exhibitors, let's have a general opinion on this picture, so that in a way the producers will have an idea what we think of pictures from a box-office standpoint. Some producers are nit-wit from an entertainment standpoint. A picture should have a good story, a good star, and be well told by the director, in the acting of the stars. Good comedy relief is like seasoning in your diet. A picture that is over the heads of the average patron, so to speak, is usually one very badly directed or one with story material not suitable for a picture. Did you ever hear a party tell a story that fairly knocked you off your feet, then hear someone else tell it and it would fall as flat as a pancake? That's the difference in directors.

"We want pictures that appeal to the masses and that are smooth understandable entertainment. A good story well told is entertainment, while badly told is of no interest. When your patrons ask you what it was all about, something is wrong with the picture. An exhibitor just can't put over such a picture, with brains or no brains."

And the controversy goes merrily on!

Smalley Loses in Compliance Council

No violation of the code was involved in the acquisition by the Glove City Amusement Company of the Hamilton Theatre, Hamilton, N. Y., formerly operated by William C. Smalley, according to a unanimous decision reached last week in Washington by the National Compliance Council following a hearing on the case December 20.

The controversy arose through the acquisition of the house by the amusement company while Smalley was negotiating with the owner for renewal of his expiring lease.

In Chicago, one of the bitterest contests ever to agitate that sector was raging on the question of banning premiums.

The Code Authority legal committee this week was working on an amendment covering selective contracts.

Although no plans for revising the motion picture code officially have been projected, according to NRA executives entrusted with the task of supervising its operation, such steps may originate through a general meeting of the National Industrial Recovery Recovery Review Board in Washington on January 9, when future policies of the NRA

EXHIBITOR SAYS IT WITH SPADES

G. C. Blackmun of the New State Theatre at Olivia, Minn., with small town and rural patronage, takes "Crime Without Passion" as the starting point for his contribution to "What the Picture Did for Me," and he minces no words. So:

"This is my first contribution to this department, but I cannot help but let other exhibitors know what an atmosphere lingered in my lobby last night after playing this picture. It is the worst piece of merchandise I have had the displeasure to run in many a moon and my audience did not waste any time telling me about it. One day was more than enough for this one."

Hearing Jan. 11 on Operators' Pay

A schedule of minimum projection room pay costs to theatres in the metropolitan area of New York, ranging from 75 cents to $6 an hour, submitted by the fact finding committee which for months has been investigating the question, will be discussed at a public hearing called by Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth for January 11.

An agreement as to the scale, which fixes minimum rates of pay for motion picture machine operators, was reached at a conference in New York last week, and the hearing is to receive objections or suggestions.

The proposed schedule, which will be inserted in the code by amendment of Article IV, Division C, Part 1, Section 6, by adding it as Paragraph (e), follows:

RKO Half Year Net Is $231,348

A net profit from operations for the first six months of 1934, which amounted to $231,348, after all charges, except federal income taxes, this week revealed to the industry the progress being made by the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation on the road to ultimate discharge from its bankruptcy status. The profit was revealed last week in the final report of Irving Trust Company as the RKO receiver.

Gross income of the company from Jan. 1, 1933 to June 30, 1934, amounted to $68,873,884, the report stated. It also set forth that for the 12 months of 1933 the company had a net loss of $4,384,064 on a gross income of $45,040,791. For 1932 the loss was $10,695,503 on a gross income of $61,078,722.

$4,977,000 Cash on Hand

The Irving Trust report said that on Dec. 31, 1932 RKO and its subsidiaries had $2,798,000 in cash, exclusive of approximately $414,000 held by subsidiaries which subsequently went into receivership or bankruptcy. On the termination of the receivership on June 30 of this year, the cash on hand was approximately $4,977,000, or an increase of about $2,179,000 over the cash on hand at the end of 1932.

During 1933 the fixed indebtedness was reduced by $1,802,233 and interest on indebtedness was paid in the amount of $2,173,509.

RKO's receivership status ended June 30th when the company went under Section 77-B of the new bankruptcy law for reorganization. Irving Trust since has been acting as temporary trustee in bankruptcy and within the next few days is expected to file an accounting of the year's operations. It was said last week that a loss probably would be shown for the 12 months of 1934 but that it would be greatly reduced in comparison with the 1933 figures.

Irving Trust has not as yet filed a petition for allowances, but it will undoubtedly do so immediately upon the filing of its report for the full year of 1934. Income taxes were not included in the receivers' report, because under the changed law these cannot be consolidated with subsidiaries and the year's total income is not yet known.

$35,766,416 in Claims

Claims filed during the receivership totaled $35,766,416 and hearings on claims totaling $25,866,454 have been held by special master Thomas D. Thacher, although no decisions have been rendered. Some claims have been dismissed, some allowed and hearings on others are pending.

In discussing operations of subsidiary RKO companies, the report said:

"During the year 1932 RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and RKO Pathe Pictures, Inc., and their subsidiaries showed a combined loss of $5,381,051.18. During 1933 operations resulted in a loss of $1,290,685.48, an improvement of over $4,000,000. Substantially all this loss was incurred during the first six months wherein a loss of $1,212,947.07 was sustained. During the same six-month period of 1934 operations resulted in a profit of $275,783.74, before Federal income tax. The combined cash balances of these companies increased from approximately $330,000 on Dec. 31, 1932, to approximately $2,086,000 on June 30, 1934.

"The 1932 operations of Pathe News, Inc., resulted in a net loss of $134,830.78. During 1933 this loss increased slightly to $141,233.64. However, considerable improvement is indicated by the results of operations for the first six months of 1934, which show a net loss of $33,793.55, compared to a net loss of $82,192.29 for the same period in 1933."

Charlie Chan in Paris

(Fox)

Detective Mystery

While this is another of the several in the Charlie Chan series of crime mystery shows, it is so different in theme and atmosphere that it seems like another idea. Several novel twists and features are to be found. One that should prove good showmanship material is the presentation of Chan's son, who helps in solving the mystery. For years Chan has been talking about his family. This is the first time one appears on the screen.

The locale is Paris, where Chan has gone for a vacation. When a case of forged hot bonds baffles the famous French police, his assistance in ferreting out the perpetrators is solicited. Many of the familiar old adventures befall him, but the menace of the criminals is so skillfully developed that the situations seem to be appearing for the first time. While dramatic mystery is the principal motivating medium, comedy crops out in both expected and unexpected places. In this it is noticeable that there has been quite a shortening up on the philosophical oriental quotations, but those used are decidedly to the point.

Love interest, too, instead of being more or less aside business, is more an adjunct to the basic plot. Both are so bound together that each is necessary to the other.

For Charlie Chan fans this picture appears to be right in line with just what they want. For the regular run of the mill fans to whom the show is the thing, it offers intriguing entertainment with plenty of surprise in both its comedy, romance and drama, as well as the mystery.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Lives of a Bengal Lancer

(Paramount)

Adventure Drama

A gripping and important picture this, with double values in those essentials of entertainment and showmanship—novelty and story, fascination of strange locale, romantic adventure, comedy, spectacle, heroism and sacrifice—to name only a few of the many interest-stirring qualities. To the tune of an ever increasing tempo, with enough excitement for half a dozen pictures, it carries its theme to a smashing climax.

There are those who maintain that shows without a heroine for love interest are doomed before they start. But so much shrewd showmanship has been inserted in "Lives of A Bengal Lancer" that the application of similar shrewd showmanship in its exhibition should, in this case, refute that argument. For in this tale of heroism, this story of the three modern musketeers, three British officers living vivid pages of life on England's wildest and most dangerous frontier, the Khyber Pass, there is oodles of romance to thrill the heart of any woman.

There is a woman in the picture, but her part is inconsequential. The interest in the story centers around three men. One, McGregor, a figure out of Kipling's host of soldiers—a soldier trained to live and fight and die like a man. Then a swaggering devil-may-care Lieutenant Forsythe, a ribbing, kidding demon, and lastly a kid, Stone, just out of England's West Point, expecting and getting no favors from his commanding officer father—cracking under the strain but redeeming himself.

Unique color makes the sequences devoted to the portrayal of army post life something more than a prosaic thing. Always there is a feeling that the picture is building to a big thrill and that element comes in the concluding sequences. The three comrades-in-arms, taken prisoner by the natives who have ambuscaded the regiment's ammunition train, and confined in a dungeon, contrive to free themselves. McGregor gets hold of a machine gun and plays havoc with the enemy, while Forsythe and Stone explode the ammunition supplies. McGregor dying valorously, the others clear the way for the Lancers' thrilling charge. Then there are medals for the living and the dead, tributes to the courage and patriotism that have made British history glorious.

In every way "Lives of A Bengal Lancer" is the kind of attraction that permits a brand of exploitation not frequently usable. It easily can carry an indorsement assuring patrons of its production importance and entertaining merit. It permits no shopworn methods, rather it demands a quality of showmanship comparable to that which motivates the picture. As it is a courageous departure from stereotyped formula, it necessitates more than the usual quota of aggressive salesmanship to net the returns its value justifies.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Best Man Wins

(Columbia)

Adventure

As the title only vaguely hints, this is an adventure picture. It's a yarn of deep sea diving and divers, dressed up with a little conflicting romance, vivid revelations of how smugglers bring in their contraband, the story of a friendly enmity, all of which supply the ground work for the show's thrill—the underwater stuff.

The major appeal being toward the action-adventure fans—there being comparatively little of interest to women—the production makes easy the adaptation of much unusual attention-arresting exploitation.

Nick and Toby are commercial divers, rivals for Anne's affections. On one job, an attempt to dynamite a derelict, Nick rescues his pal Toby, who suffers the loss of an arm. The friendship in work is severed, Nick joining the police force and Toby becoming associated with Dr. Travers' smuggling gang. After sequences demonstrating the smugglers' undersea tricks, ex-diver Nick is assigned to break up the ring. The friends are now on the other side of the fence, each seeking to outsmart the other. From a police boat, Nick sees Toby go down. Donning his diving suit, Nick follows. In an undersea battle with a shark each saves the other's life, Toby finally sacrificing his own life that Nick might be saved.

An average attraction, this picture provides the thrill devotees with all the action and excitement they seem to like, to be sold on the premise that it is that kind of entertainment without any effort to build it into an unusual feature.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Romance

Here's a picture so full of worthwhile entertainment quality as well as potential commercial assets, that its audience presentation should be a pleasure. A wholesome picture, novelly different its hilarity the result of well applied homey hokum, this up to date yarn of young love is packed with romance and laughter and bubbling over with life and joy. Not a musical picture, there are, however, one or two hum-able thrum-able tunes. With all the ingredients—romance, drama, comedy, suspense, charm in the well-developed situations and their accompanying dialogue—that make for satisfactory amusement, the shows atmosphere is that of all's swell that ends swell.

"The Gilded Lily" is made up entirely of understandable stuff. Its time is today, the principal locales are New York and London. Claudette Colbert is a stenographer. Like millions of today's girl, whom everybody knows, she dreams a fabulous dream of grand and thrilling romance. Her pal is Fred MacMurray, newspaper man. Their delights and pleasures are those of workaday people. Fifth Avenue bus rides, eating popcorn during lunch hours on the famous Library steps, hectic excursions to Coney Island. In a subway rush hour jam she meets the idol of her dreams, Ray Milland, incognito scion of British nobility. Gay as their romance is, it turns semi-tragic for her as Milland just fades out of the picture.

Then the colorful fun really begins. Through a series of newspaper articles and much to the fear and amazement of the demure stenographer, MacMurray transforms her into a glamorous creature of Mazda lane, princess of Broadway night clubs, the toast and boast of New York. Sensational in New York, London calls for her. A triumphal tour arranged, again she meets Milland and the spark of love flames again. She is glorious always, in a seventh heaven of rapture; MacMurray suffers the agonies of an almost hopeless purgatory, until the old English reserve again asserts itself as Milland's final fadeout shatters the girl's air castles. The climax is where the picture started, Miss Colbert and MacMurray eating popcorn on the Public Library steps, but now there is no other man, visionary or real, standing between the two who discover they really love each other.

Claudette Colbert's popular appeal is increasing by leaps and bounds. She sets the pace and establishes the spirit which MacMurray and Milland grasp enthusiastically, which all the supporting cast reflect. With Miss Colbert's name serving as the peg, the picture is a natural for smart advertising copy lines and tricky exploitation gags. A little brain work probably will be necessary to select the leads that will have the most effective local appeal. But if the advance is so keyed that a big audience is present at the opening showings, word-of-mouth advertising undoubtedly can be depended upon to create a desire for this attraction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

White Lies

Drama

Strong drama, verging closely on tragedy, this is hardly family material, dealing as it does with murder, vengeance, and the tragedy of human error which is the direct result of the passion on the part of the publisher of a newspaper for a headline and sensationalism, and his unyielding refusal to sacrifice a good headline no matter what may be the result.

A shade too melodramatic on occasion, the story is nonetheless well told, and effectively performed, chiefly by Walter Connolly, able as usual, in the unsympathetic role of the publisher. In support are Fay Wray and Victor Jory, principally, while Leslie Fenton and Irene Hervey should be familiar names.

There is controversial significance of "The Front Page" variety in the story, and with that as a basis, there appears an opportunity to stir patron curiosity. Perhaps, too, there is a chance of interesting the local newspapers in comment on the picture's theme. The title gathers its story significance from the sequence in which the publisher's daughter is involved in a murder, and could have been saved the horror of trial for her life, if the police officer had neglected to hold her, as was his duty.

Connolly, dynamic and relentlessly sensational publisher, is incensed when a traffic policeman, Jory, refuses to accept a bribe and arrests him when Connolly tears up a summons. He is about to have the man fired, when his daughter, Miss Wray, convinces him of the unfairness of such an action, and Jory is promoted instead. Connolly is bent on publishing the story of Fenton's theft of money from the bank of which he is cashier. Fenton has replaced most of the money stolen, and is about to restore the balance. But Connolly publishes the story, and Fenton comes in and threatens him. Jory accidentally walks in and disarms Fenton, for which Connolly again has him promoted. At the trial, as Fenton is sentenced, he escapes, after wounding Jory.

Miss Hervey, sweetheart of Fenton, comes to Miss Wray to enlist her support for the fugitive, and Miss Wray, sympathetic, helps the girl by finding her an apartment, using an admirer and his automobile as moving van. Fenton finds them together in the new apartment, Miss Hervey not yet arriving, and kills the man, making it appear that Miss Wray is guilty. She calls Jory, and he, refusing to listen to the pleas of Connolly, arrests Miss Wray, with whom he is in love. At the trial, Connolly breaks down, admitting that he himself, by his thirst for a headline, is the real culprit. Jory, meanwhile, pursuing his own clues, tracks down Fenton and brings him to court in time to save Miss Wray. The conclusion finds the Jory-Wray romance satisfactorily concluded, and the promise of aid for Miss Hervey, Connolly presumably having learned a much needed lesson in publishing and justice.—Aaronson, New York.

West of the Pecos

(Radio)

Western

Here is something with ace attraction possibilities in the weekend action position on the program. Not only is it a wellknown Zane Grey western story of action and romance in the old west, but the star is Richard Dix, who made some of his greatest successes when garbed in chaps and sombrero, and armed to the teeth. His name should mean much to the motion picture patronage, and the yarn has its full quota of the riding and shooting which is expected in this kind of material.

The novel twist in the story, of the feminine lead playing the part of a boy, under the pressure of circumstances, adds considerable to the good humor of the film, while this same situation has opened the way to considerable entertainment which is cleverly handled in dialogue, bringing more real fun to the film than is found in the usual western picture.

In the cast, in addition to Dix, are Martha Sleeper, who is attractive and effective in the feminine lead; Fred Kohler, as the menace; Sleep 'n' Eat and Louise Beavers, colored couple.

Samuel Hinds, Southern colonel in the Civil War, returns home to find his wife dead. With his daughter, Miss Sleeper, and their two faithful colored servants, he treks west. Arriving in San Antonio, Texas, Miss Sleeper suddenly realizes that in this rough and ready west a woman is in the weak position, and she takes care of that difficulty by cutting her hair, donning a western outfit, and looking like a 15-year-old boy. When Dix backs out of a saloon after having killed one of two dangerous brothers in self-defense, he bumps into Miss Sleeper, and when she refuses to untie his horse, he kicks her into obedience.

The father and daughter are taking their newly bought cattle west when Dix catches up with them, and recognizes the "boy" when she evens a score as he stoops in the saddle to retrieve something. Dix rides with them in the colonel's employ. En route, when Miss Sleeper refuses to go for a swim with Dix, he pushes her off her horse, rescues her and discovers she is not the man she pretends to be, but he keeps his own counsel. She fires him, but he reappears when they are established on their ranch, with an offer of help.

From that point things move rapidly, as Kohler, cattle thief, brands Dix a rustler, offers to prove it to the colonel, and takes him to Dix's supposed hideout. Indians attack, and the colonel is wounded, saved only by the flanking tactics of Dix, as Kohler runs away. When Kohler later confronts Dix, the colonel, recovered, makes clear to the posse who is actually the cattle thief, and short work is made of Kohler. Miss Sleeper dons her feminine dress, and Dix and she conclude the film as expected.

Good western material, and worth a little extra exhibitor effort for the action spot on the bill.—Aaronson, New York.

Murder in the Clouds

Action Drama

There is plenty of action in this mystery and action drama which borders closely on the melodrama, with most of its activity confined to the modern scene of action, the air. There is romance and some comedy added. The film's Vitamin A (action) is the best selling bet, combined with the perennially effective element of mystery, which although not especially mysterious or obscure, nonetheless serves to add a dash of additional excitement and suspense.

The pace is well maintained, and although the story itself is not particularly outstanding, it is adequate in serving its melodrama and action purpose. The cast is only fair in drawing power but several of the names are sufficiently familiar and popular to warrant marquee space. Lyle Talbot has the lead, supported by Ann Dvorak, Gordon Westcott and Charles Wilson.

It is a yarn of the air transport service, and the way may be open for tieup exploitation in that direction, since the film demonstrates the ability and resourcefulness of the transport flying corps. Since the names are not of the strongest, while the title is an attention-attracting line of the action variety, it looks as though hitting the action-mystery angle will be the wisest course.

Talbot, a crazy stunt flier but the best under Wilson's command, is in love with Miss Dvorak, air transport hostess, and she is in love with him, but cannot agree to marry him unless Talbot gives some evidence of settling down. Westcott and her brother, played by Robert Light, are co-pilots. George Cooper, as a mechanic, supplies the comparatively little comedy offered, while Arthur Pierson is Wilson's assistant. Talbot and Light are ordered on a special flight, to carry a noted inventor and his latest powerful gunpowder to Washington. Talbot, attacked in a restaurant, fails to make the airport on time, and Light and Westcott go up. En route the plane explodes, and supposedly all are killed. The government surrounds the area to recover the powder, which was in a fireproof container.

Then it is revealed that Pierson, in the office, and Westcott, in the air, were working for a group seeking the powder, and that Wescott had parachuted from the plane just before a time bomb exploded aboard. The gang capture Miss Dvorak, intending to use her to decoy the container of powder across the Mexican border, and a story is fabricated to induce her support. But she learns that her brother has been killed, and manages to signal to the searching Talbot. Then follows fast action, as border patrol planes land, capture the gang, and Talbot and Cooper pursue the craft in which Westcott has escaped with the powder, and with Miss Dvorak as hostage. Talbot forces Westcott down, captures him as he tries to escape, and Miss Dvorak and the invaluable powder are saved, with Talbot considerably more interested in the girl than the powder.

It looks like good weekend action material, which might serve as a welcome change from the western or the like.—AARONSON, New York.

Bella Donna

(Gaumont-British)

Drama

With a title value based on the Robert Hichens book as well on the J. B. Fagan dramatic version, this picture has star assets through inclusion in the cast of Conrad Veidt, Cedric Hardwicke and Mary Ellis, while its plot material offers an opportunity to play up the East versus West idea reflected in a white woman's infatuation for an Egyptian to whom she is just a plaything.

It is possibly woman's material, with its insistence on this angle of an English engineer's wife so carried away by the spurious romance of the East that she plans the murder of her husband. However, it has to be remembered that the woman is, all through, an unsympathetic character.

Against the advice of his friends, and particularly of Dr. Isaacson, a famous doctor, Nigel Armine marries Monta Chepstow, "Bella Donna," and takes her back to Egypt with him when he returns to his duties as an engineer. News that his brother has had an heir reaches them and shows Bella Donna that her hopes of wealth are unlikely to be realized. She falls victim to a rich Egyptian, Baroudi, and at his instigation begins to administer poison to her husband. Isaacson comes on a visit from England, displaces the incompetent local physician and, after he has restored Armine to health, tells him the truth. Bella Donna goes to her Egyptian lover, but he turns her away, and when she returns to Armine's bungalow it is to find the shuters closed in her face.

The Eastern atmosphere is a selling point, but Baroudi is presented without disguise as a sensualist who leaves the white woman for the dancing girls in the lowest kind of dive, and does not trouble to hide from her that she is only one of many. Isaacson's discovery of the truth and his battle of wits with the other doctor are cleverly presented.

It is an adult attraction—ALLAN, London.

Comedy

This is simple material of the farce-comedy order, slight in story texture and depending for success on appreciation of the drollery of Leslie Fuller and on some well devised humorous situations.

Fuller appears as a quack doctor who travels the fairgrounds as Professor Pippin, selling cure-all pills. He is educating his son to be a real doctor and in due course the boy qualifies and gets a post at a local hospital. He does not know his father's real occupation, believing him to be a salesman.

In love with the daughter of the hospital chairman, the young man incurs the rivalry of another student. The latter accidentally discovers the identity of Professor Pippin and persuades the son to take part in a raid on the quack's booth at the fair. Pulling off the professor's hat and mustache, the mischief maker reveals him to his son, but the son quickly knocks his rival down, while the chairman opportunely reveals that the hospital owes its existence to a donation of £5,000 from the "Professor."

For exploitation here there is the personality of Leslie Fuller, shortly to be seen in America in comedies directed by Ralph Ceder, and the considerable humor of individual incident, which the fair-ground atmosphere very well puts over.

The situation of a medical student whose father is an irregular practitioner can be exploited but the material is very light and should not be treated too seriously. There are possibilities in drugstore tieups.—ALLAN, London.

Produced by British International Pictures at Elstree, London, and distributed by Wardour Films, Ltd. Directed by Norman Lee. Story and script by Clifford Grey, Syd Courtenay and Lola Harvey. Sound, A. Geary. Camera, Brian Langley. Running time, 75 minutes.

Child of Mother India

(Central)

Travelogue

While the theme of this three-reel production by Central Films is ostensibly a delineation of the tragedy of child marriage among the natives of Trinidad in the British West Indies, it is essentially a travelogue, and a study of the ceremonies leading up to and including the actual marriage. The evils following the marriage are dismissed with a silhouette of the child crouched in the hut of her adult husband, "broken in body and soul" as the narrator, Don Beddoe, styles it. As a matter of fact, the over-dramatizing of the background dialogue is a handicap to an otherwise interesting travelogue.—Running time, 30 minutes.

How Am I Doing?

Amusing

The well known and popular vaudeville comedy team of Chick York and Rose King are the chief value in this comedy, one of the Marriage Wow series produced by Al Christie. York, continuously fighting with his wife, undertakes to assist a vaudeville team in distress, by filling their spot on a theatre bill. His partner refuses but finally relents and the two go on. Their familiar routine on a horse-drawn sleigh is often genuinely amusing, and their names should be a drawing factor in the playing of the subject.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Two-Gun Mickey

(United Artists)

Entertaining

An entertaining number of the perennial Mickey series, with the redoubtable rodent in this case a heroic cowboy, defending his sweetheart, Minny the cowgirl from the pursuing big bad bandit who would steal the money she has and kidnap her. Mickey's extremely pliable horse is of major assistance in routing the bandit and his multitudinous henchmen, who are caught in many an amusing position. A good cartoon.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Bounding Main

Vocal Novelty

One of the Song Hit Story series, this features the excellent-voiced Norman Cordon, in a group of sailors' and seagoing songs, aided by the Singing Mariners from the Seaman's Church Institute in New York, the Four Diplomats, Fox and Deschry and the six Moutain Melodeers. The songs are effectively rendered in the fo'c'stle of a ship, with scenes aboard a large sailing ship as a pictorial accompaniment to the singing. It is entertaining material.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Sunshine Makers

(RKO Radio)

Vividly Colorful

A color theme, done in Cinecolor, and colorfully done, "The Sunshine Makers" is a cartooning of a battle of the Laughs and the Glooms, the second of the Van Beuren Rainbow Parade series. Sunshine, fired by the bottle from cannon, shells all the blue out of the Gloom's village, with the aid of Winston Sharbels' music, the march of the Sunshiners and the dirge of the Glooms being particularly likable. Burt Gillett and Ted Eschbaugh directed. —Running time, 8 minutes.

Jack's Shack

Entertaining

An entertaining Terry-Toon cartoon, being a play on the old "House that Jack Built" story, this should be appreciated by the youngsters and enjoyed by the adults. The mouse, the cat, the dog, the cow with the crumpled horn, the milkmaid all forlorn and the annoying farmer are there, and when he disturbs the budding romance between the maid and the scarecrow, the animals and the birds rally about to save the day.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Gentlemen of the Bar

Fair Comedy

Ernest Truex, diminutive comedian of the stage and screen, provokes laughter on occasion in this yarn of the unsuccessful lawyer, who becomes involved in a topsy-turvy divorce case, is crossed and double crossed, but finally comes out the winner, with the aid of his smart secretary. When a woman comes to him, just when he is about to give up, wanting a divorce, the trouble starts. Running time, 18 minutes.

FRANKLIN CASE SEEN IMPORTANT PRECEDENT

Ruling Awaited in the Suit on "Throwing the Bull" Short Subject; Evidence Is Heard

by BEN HOYE

Motion pictures are constantly referred to as being in their infancy. The term is used in the nature of a reproach and yet every step that the screen takes towards maturity is hampered. Even the law is called upon to prevent motion pictures from growing up. It was only within the last few years that the courts decided that newsreels were to enjoy a semblance of the freedom-of-the-press accorded to the daily papers. Today the motion picture industry is faced with the possibility that screen productions which act as commentators in the nature of weekly and monthly magazines are to be obliterated, or at least reduced to puerile entertainment through legal restrictions.

Topical short subjects dealing with almost every human activity are made by all the larger motion picture producers and by many smaller companies and by individuals. The future latitude of these magazines of the screen—and perhaps the freedom of expression now enjoyed by periodicals and other publications devoted to comment—is bound up in the outcome of litigation pending before Justice John F. Carew of the New York supreme court. His decision is awaited with no small anxiety because of its tremendous importance as a precedent.

The case in point is the attempt of Sidney Franklin, a Brooklyn youth who achieved considerable fame in Spain as a bull fighter, to collect damages from a motion picture company for the inclusion of his picture in a screen review of the sport in which he gained celebrity, coupled with a humorous comment pertaining to his work.

One of a Series

The short subject in which Sidney Franklin appeared was called "Throwing the Bull" and was one in a series entitled "World of Sports," released by Columbia Pictures. These shorts are in the nature of magazine articles which treat their subject matter as visual education and also humorously, just as many of our national non-fiction publications do. "Throwing the Bull" covered the field of bull fighting throughout the world wherever that institution is tolerated. As an American who made good in the art of bull fighting, Sidney Franklin was naturally included. The actual short footage in which Mr. Franklin appears was obtained from a newsreel made by Fox Films. The short included similar shots assembled from many sources relating to as many phases of bull fighting practiced in Madrid, Portugal, France, Switzerland, and Mexico, Japan's equivalent for bull fighting, and the historic and colorful free for all bull fight which is staged yearly in Pomplona, Spain. The nearest approach to bull fighting permitted in this country, an American rodeo, completed the continuity.

Mr. Franklin objected to the use of his picture in the short because permission for its use in that specific connection had not been given. He also objected to the language used by the commentator, Ford Bond, who referred to Mr. Franklin as the greatest Spanish bull-thrower to come from Brooklyn, and then corrected himself and said "I mean bull-fighter." This remark, as all the comments throughout the reel, was in keeping with the mood of the title and was made with humorous intent. It is of the same nature as would be used by any columnist and in magazines such as Life, Judge, Punch, Time and New Yorker.

All Evidence Heard

The two circumstances constitute the basis for a demand for $300,000 as balm for invasion of Mr. Franklin's privacy and dignity. All evidence has been heard and also oral argument, and Justice Carew has both under consideration and is expected to hand down his decision in the course of a week.

Among the points raised in opposing Franklin's demand for more than a quarter of a million were the following:

Every professional sportsman, politician, educator, scientist or other public personality who permits and invites exploitation in the press and on the screen and whose success is largely due to such exploitation will be in a position to jeopardize both press and screen in event Franklin's claim is allowed. He freely posed for newspapers and newsreels, employing descriptive language concerning himself similar to that used by commentator Bond in the short subject now under attack. As a corollary, "Babe" Ruth would be in a position to collect millions in damages, and the same is true of any number of public figures. The possibilities in this direction are staggering, for it is the practice of commentators to "kid" every popular figure in the sporting field, regardless of the high esteem in which the performer and the sport, alike, are held. In contrast, the subject of the pending litigation, bull fighting, is forbidden by law and by public opinion, alike, in every nook and corner of the United States.

Under all previous decisions the popular form of non-fictional or non-dramatic screen entertainment known as newsreels or educational or magazine shorts has been accorded a status somewhat similar to that enjoyed by the press. Should Franklin's claim be upheld, that he has suffered an encroachment upon personal and private liberties, it is possible that every individual whose face appears in such pictures, and whose cupidity prompts him to yield to the urge, may contribute to embarrassing the motion picture industry with an unprecedented avalanche of litigation. It is hardly to be expected that a newly created nuisance capacity inherent in such a situation will be overlooked by those who regard the motion picture industry as a shining target.

Webb Chairman Of First Division

Stuart W. Webb, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., last week was elected chairman of the board of First Division Exchanges, Inc., and First Division Pictures. At the same time Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division, announced the appointment of Amos Hiatt, former secretary and treasurer of Pathe News, as a vice-president of the company and assistant to the president.

Mr. Webb's appointment to the chairmanship of the First Division board is considered the natural result of Pathe's participation not only in First Division financing but also in the association of the company with Time magazine for the distribution of Time's newsreel, "The March of Time," the first issue of which will be released before the end of this month.

Mr. Webb said over the week-end that "there is nothing mysterious or secretive about it," referring to his election.

"Harry Thomas continues as head of the company and can take my advice or leave it as he sees fit."

Mr. Webb is a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of Harvard. For a time after leaving college he was connected with the City Trust Company in Boston, becoming assistant secretary. Following this he was assistant secretary of the Old Colony Trust Company, also of Boston, later becoming chairman of the board and in 1922 he was made chairman of the board and president of the Eastern Manufacturing Company, a paper manufacturer. In 1929 he entered the Pathe picture.

Amos Hiatt went to RKO Radio Pictures in 1928 as assistant treasurer. In 1931 he became secretary and treasurer of RKO Radio Pathe Pictures, and had remained in that capacity ever since.

Papers Increase, Ayer List Shows

There were 129 more newspapers published in the United States and Canada during 1934 than in 1933, according to the 1935 edition of N. W. Ayer & Son's Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals, just published. In 1933, 212 fewer newspapers were published than in 1932.

The record indicates a total of 14,091 newspapers, of which 2,197 are dailies, an increase of 38, and 11,856 are weeklies, semi-weeklies and tri-weeklies, an increase of 89. The United States has had an increase of 123 newspapers, of which 33 are dailies, and Canada an increase of six, of which five are dailies.

Eighteen of the new papers are in New Jersey and 18 in Texas. The south has shown the greatest sectional gain, with 39. The 6,546 trade and class publications listed indicate a decrease of 327 compared with the previous years, with the greatest loss in the Midwest, where there are 116 fewer publications.

15,645 Theatres Wired in Europe, Lange Estimates

The total of sound theatres in 20 countries of Europe as of December 1, 1934, is estimated at 15,645 by Fred W. Lange, Continental general manager for Paramount, in New York last week on his annual visit. Germany, leading, has 4,674 wired theatres, and France is second with 2,714. Next in order, according to Mr. Lange's compilation, are: Spain, 1,528; Italy, 1,079; Sweden, 800; Czechoslovakia, 777. The Baltic countries have a total of 185, of which Lettland has 77; Estonia, 56; Lithuania, 52.

Theatre conditions on the Continent are generally bad, according to Mr. Lange, and only outstanding pictures are showing profit. In Germany the business is better than in any other Continental country, said Mr. Lange. However, he foresees better conditions for the 1935-36 season.

French producers are turning out approximately 200 features for the current season, a slight increase over 1932-33, it was estimated by Mr. Lange. Theatre construction is virtually at a standstill, he declared. Paramount is considering the production of two to three pictures in Sweden, in addition to the eight planned for the Joinville studio near Paris. The Swedish films are planned for this season, with a native producer to handle production for Paramount. It has not been determined whether or not Paramount will engage an outside producer for the Joinville studio, but in any case the series will be produced under the supervision of Ike Blumenthal, head of the studio. The company does all its French dubbing at the Joinville plant, actual production having been negligible during the past few years. Outside companies in the individual countries dub in Germany, Spain and Italy.

RCA Merges Two Subsidiaries

In the interests of economy and convenience of operation, and as a final step in the process of centralization under way for some time, RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc., has been formed and chartered at Dover, Del., as a consolidation of the RCA Victor Company and RCA Radiotron Company, the two wholly owned manufacturing subsidiaries of the Radio Corporation of America.

The present officers and management of the two companies will be continued, and the factories at Camden and Harrison, N. J., will continue operation as at present. The present trade marks of both companies will be maintained, according to the announcement from David Sarnoff, president of RCA. E. T. Cunningham will be president of the new company, and Mr. Sarnoff chairman of the board. Two divisions, RCA Victor Division and RCA Radiotron Division, will be formed within the RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc.

Falsity of Star Rating Reflected By Low Marks on Box Office Films

It was one of those ardent and outspoken hotel room conferences during the Charlotte convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, when the glasses in hand were being considerably neglected for heated remarks anent this and that in our provocative industry. There Charles Picquet and Roy Smart and Bob Kincey and David Palfreyman, the professional listener, were passing the remarks about quite lively. Then up rose Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to make remarks on one of the favorite annoyances — the star rating system of fan publications and newspaper reviewers. "Let me have that in writing," the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD requested—and so here it is.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

"In further reference to our conversation in Charlotte regarding fan magazines and others, such as Liberty," began Mr. Kuykendall's letter.

"First, I want to say I am convinced that the fan magazines keep thousands away from the theatres because of their attempt to classify pictures, and because they try to expose the mechanics of production, thereby destroying the illusion that used to have a tremendous appeal, and patrons find themselves sitting in the theatre figuring out how this and that scene was faked, and losing the very thing for which they paid their money—imagination and make-believe.

"As to magazines like Liberty, they make terrible mistakes in rating pictures, and in many instances have rated very low pictures that were great box office. But I suppose they also attract patrons to the theatre, through their reviews.

"Also the fan magazines would probably help if they left off the above mentioned expose of the mechanics. Taken as a whole, I believe the magazines should content themselves with describing the picture, and pass up the criticism, as they really only represent the opinion of one person, which in many instances is questionable.

"You are rendering a great service to the industry. May you continue to serve and prosper and may the New Year bring you increased success."

Fox West Coast Setup Due Shortly

The new setup of Fox West Coast, assets of which were allowed for sale last week to National Theatres Corporation for $17,000,000 by the Los Angeles federal court, is expected to be completed before the end of this month, it was indicated Monday in reports from the Coast.

Unless an appeal by the Marshall Square Theatres of San Francisco and Harry L. Hartman of San Diego from approval of the sale order by United States District Court Judge George Cosgrove holds up the circuit's reorganization plans, it was considered as definite that the Fox West Coast group will be operating under the new setup by the end of January. As yet George and Spyros Skouras have not signed their 10-year joint operating contract.

In addition to taking over the assets of Fox West Coast, National Theatres will acquire all Wesco subsidiary units, including Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midwest. These two latter units are expected to be taken out of bankruptcy by the end of March. New companies already have been formed to replace them, Associated Theatres supplanting Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midcontinent replacing Fox Midwest.

It was announced in New York last week that filing of a plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, scheduled for last Thursday, by the bondholders' committee would be effected on January 9.

Penn MPTO Re-elects Pizor

Lewen Pizor was re-elected Friday to the presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. Mr. Pizor had been out of office for six months and succeeded Charles Segall, who followed Mr. Pizor into the office a year ago.

Ben Fertel was elected financial secretary and George P. Aarons and Mike Lessy were re-elected secretary and treasurer. Vice-presidents are Mike Egnal, Harold D. Cohen and Joe Conway. The directorate is composed of Mr. Segall, Ed Jeffries, Abe Sablosky, Leonard Schlessinger, Luke Gring, Morris Gerson, Fred Leopold, Morris Handle, Mort Lewis, I. Hoffman, Lew Felt, Norman Lewis, Forman Corbett, Arthur Smith, Joseph Schwartz, George Gravenstine, George Kline and Ben Amsterdam.

At the Philadelphia meeting each member agreed to purchase independent film several days each year. A committee was appointed to confer on consolidation with the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, which this week started a membership drive.

Allied States Association also began a member campaign throughout the South, coincident with the laying of final plans by the MPTOA for its annual convention in New Orleans in February.

The MPTOA, it was reported this week, has 25 units in the country and Allied 21.

PARAMOUNT HEARING REOPENS JANUARY 10

Creditors' Counsel Given Time To Examine Reports; Saenger Reorganizing Plan Approved

Paramount Publix Corporation's plan for financial reorganization and discharge from bankruptcy was submitted to the United States district court in New York Thursday. After two days of hearing, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe adjourned the sessions to January 10 in order to give creditors' attorneys an opportunity to examine reports filed with the court during the second day's testimony.

Opposition to the plan was voiced by only two representatives of small creditor groups—Samuel Zirn, who consistently has opposed various phases of the company's operations and official set-up since it went into bankruptcy in March, 1933, and Archibald Palmer. Mr. Zirn is said to represent less than $40,000 of Paramount debentures, while Mr. Palmer is counsel for stockholders and bondholders of Allied Owners Corporation, one of the largest creditors.

The Saenger Theatres reorganization plan was approved Wednesday by Referee John A. Joyce and Federal Judge Coxe in New York. It still awaited the formality of approval by the federal court in New Orleans.

Zirn Is Overruled

The first objection of the Paramount hearing was made by Mr. Zirn, who moved that Judge Coxe refer hearing on the plan to Federal Judge Murray W. Hulbert, who is presiding over the current bankruptcy term in the New York district court, on the grounds that Judge Coxe, presently assigned to motions term, lacked authority to preside at the hearing. Judge Coxe overruled the motion and Mr. Zirn took an exception.

The plan was submitted by Alfred A. Cook, counsel for the debtor, who also is counsel for the stockholders' protective committee which holds 54 per cent of the company's 3,220,900 shares of the stock. There are more than 37,000 Paramount stockholders.

Mr. Cook made special mention of the part played by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in the plan's formation. He said Paramount's bank creditors had suggested formation of the bondholders', stockholders' and bank group committees, and had recommended the chairman and members of those committees and their counsel.

Defends Settlement

Mr. Cook explained that it had been at this point that the bank committee called on Kuhn, Loeb & Co. to draft a plan of reorganization, which the former Paramount bankers did after retaining Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood as counsel. Subsequently Kuhn, Loeb developed several different plans, aided by its counsel for the committees, but when the financial house recently was named in an application of the Paramount trustees for leave to bring suits for recovery and accounting as a result of activities in connection with the operation of a Paramount employees' stock purchase plan from 1929 to 1932, the banking house withdrew from activities in connection with the final reorganization plan. Its representatives, Mr. Cook said, resigned from the Paramount directorate and it completely disavowed representation on the board of the new company until the trustees' actions have been disposed of.

Mr. Cook defended the settlement, as provided for in the plan, of the $13,200,000 bank group indebtedness; the Paramount Broadway reorganization plan, which was attacked by Archibald Palmer, and the $2 assessment on stockholders. In making his defense of these provisions, Mr. Cook anticipated the main points which Mr. Palmer later advanced in opposition.

The Paramount counsel said that the $5,000,000 cash payment to the banks provided in the plan was justified because it represented repayment of a loan which had been designed to finance production, thus keeping the company "on its feet" in 1932. The stock assessment he defended because, he said, new bank money would not be available to the reorganized company. This assessment is intended to raise $6,500,000.

Austin Keough, secretary and counsel of Paramount, was the first witness. He revealed that Paramount has 8,000 exhibitor customers out of a potential 13,000 total in the country. Mr. Keough also said that 25 per cent of the company's distribution revenue comes from its own theatres and that "uncertainty in the minds of non-contract employees over their future because of the company's bankruptcy created a problem in morale throughout Paramount" that made a speedy reorganization essential.

Palmer Attacks Bank Loan

The objections to the plan by Mr. Palmer included the assertion that the Paramount Broadway should not be included in the plan because the building is steadily losing money and would saddle the new company with an unnecessarily heavy burden. He also attacked the bank loan and stated he favored definite limitation of the number of banking men on the new directorate.

Mr. Palmer criticized the lack of warranties by the trustees or the reorganization committees for the financial statements contained in the plan and attempted to show that without them the statements were no more than unofficial estimates. Walter B. Cokell, Paramount treasurer, who was being cross-questioned on this point by Mr. Palmer, said some of the statements concerning assets were estimates based on probable receipts from companies such as Saenger and Olympia, as a result of their impending reorganizations.

Mr. Palmer then asked the court's authorization to call the trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson; Percy Johnston of the creditor bank group; Duncan Harris of the bondholders' committee; Robert Goelet or Robert Dowling of the Paramount Broadway bond committee, and Duncan Holmes of the stockholders' committee, for questioning as to why they believed the plan to be a good one for the company. Judge Coxe denied the application.

$17,000,000 Cash on Hand

Following the second day's testimony, during which it was stated the company currently has approximately $17,000,000 cash on hand, Judge Coxe made his adjournment order to January 10. Reports filed during the proceedings had included one on the status of pending litigation begun by the trustees against former directors and officials of the company; one of the status of the claims filed against Paramount, and a report on executory contracts of the debtor, Paramount Publix. Mr. Palmer considered these reports so pertinent to the reorganization proceedings that he asked a 30-day adjournment. Nathan Burkan, counsel for the merchandise creditors' committee, also asked for a 30-day postponement, and committees favorable to the plan requested one week.

Papers in the suit of Paramount's trustees against officials and former Paramount directors, were filed in U. S. district court, New York, last week, and more than half of the defendants named have been served and will be required to file answers within the next few weeks. The trustees also instituted separate actions for recovery of salaries or bonuses in excess of a reasonable amount against Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Sam Katz, Ralph Kohn and Sidney R. Kent.

Other defendants already served in the stock purchase suit, in addition to Mr. Zukor and Mr. Kent, include Jules E. Brulatour, Harold B. Franklin, Sir William Wiseman and Eugene Zukor. Associates of Kuhn, Loeb, in addition to Sir William, are also being served in connection with the actions, which ask for accountings of actual or potential profits in connection with the stock purchase plan and any resultant loss which Paramount may have incurred.

Lowell Sherman, Actor, Director, Dies in Hollywood

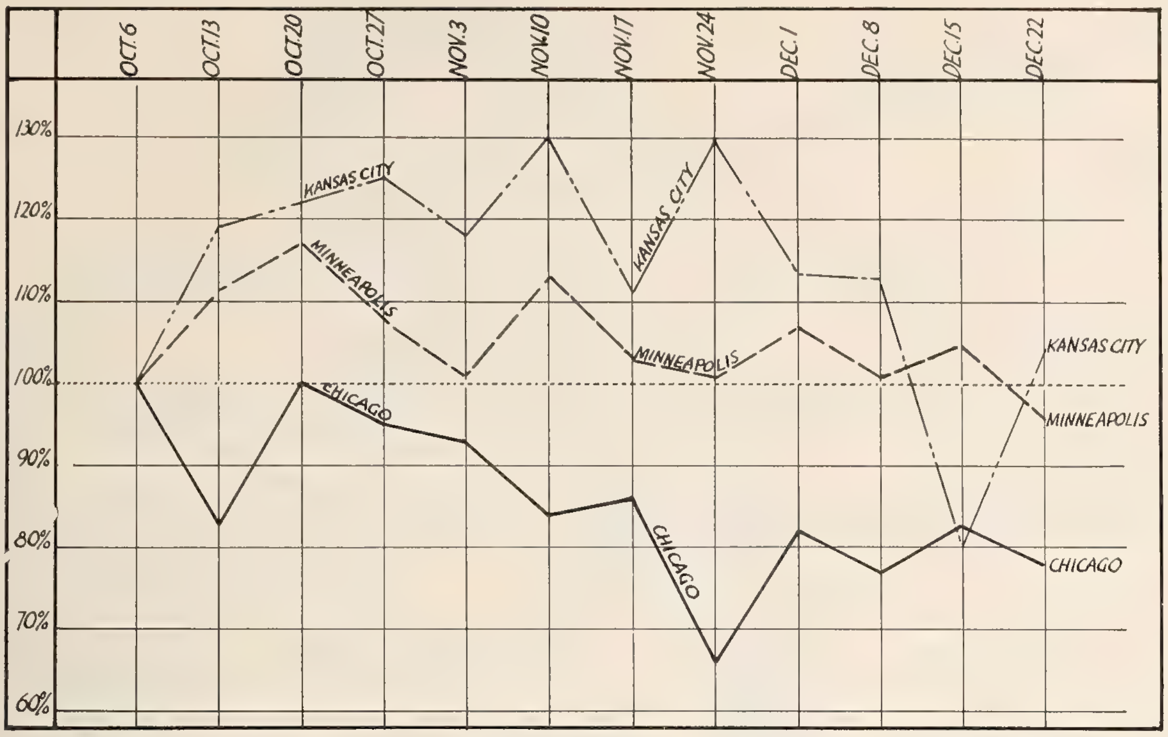
Lowell Sherman, widely known motion picture actor and director, died at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Hollywood, late last week of pneumonia. He was 49 years old. His latest films were "She Done Him Wrong" with Mae West, and "Morning Glory," with Katharine Hepburn. He was in the midst of the direction of "Becky Sharp," all-color feature for Pioneer Pictures, an RKO release, when he was stricken. Having suffered from laryngitis for the past year, he had all but lost his voice. His resistance was low, and when pneumonia set in, he was unable to withstand the new complication.

Most familiarly known, in recent years at any rate, for his work as director and player for the motion picture, Mr. Sherman was also widely known and had notable achievements to his credit on the legitimate stage as well. Both his grandmother, Kate Gray, who had played with Booth, and his mother, Julia Louise Gray, who left the stage when he was born, transmitted an aptitude and a natural liking for the stage, but he had no need to borrow on their reputations. His father was a theatrical manager.

Born in San Francisco on October 11, 1885, Mr. Sherman was educated in New York and made his debut in a John Mack vaudeville sketch. He played stock later, with such as Jane Cowl, Lenore Ulric, Pauline Lord and Ruth Chatterton. His first real success was in "The Commuters," many another successful play following. One of his first films was "Way Down East," the D. W. Griffith success, in which he played the villain and Richard Barthelmess the juvenile. As a villain of the old school he appeared in many following pictures. He played the man of the world when the talking technique came to the motion picture then became a director. Another of his more recent efforts as a director was "Night Life of the Gods," for Universal, which is soon to be released.

Mr. Sherman was married three times, each marriage ending in divorce. He is survived by his mother. The body was brought to New York for burial.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box-office grosses, shows the business done in three Midwestern key cities during the twelve-week period from October 6 to December 22, 1934. The gross for the first week of the period in each city is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

Film Foundation Declares Program

The Motion Picture Foundation of the United States, which three months ago declared its intentions of producing "films for the family" exclusively, this week issued an announcement to the lay press—excluding the trade press from its publicity mailing lists—detailing five different types of films which will be made by its production staff. The production staff was not made known.

The report, sent to the newspapers from the Foundation's headquarters at 247 Park Ave., New York, lists its picture production program as follows:

"Family pictures, which will be promoted particularly for use at the increasingly popular week-end family shows, and for which exhibitors are making demands.

"Historical productions, showing the development of States and cities and emphasizing the democratic basis upon which our country has made unparalleled progress.

"Instructional pictures, as an aid to teachers in classrooms, supplementing and visualizing the subject matter of textbooks.

"Music in pictures, which will increase understanding and appreciation of fine music through the dramatic pictorial interpretation of musical masterpieces.

"Pictures on international goodwill and friendship, showing the necessity for world unity and international cooperation."

AMPA Meets January 17

The first open meeting of the New Year of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York will be held January 17. First Division executives and officials of Time magazine will be guests of honor.

Order Claims of Art Cinema

Stockholders of Art Cinema Corporation will have until January 12 to file in chancery court at Wilmington claims against the company in the matter of the bill for appointment of trustees in dissolution.

Lucchese Dead In Philadelphia

Anthony Lucchese, well-known independent Philadelphia exchange man, died at his home on Sunday night after an illness of several months. The funeral was held Thursday.

Mr. Lucchese was one of the first men in the film business to open offices in Vine street, which today is the film row of Philadelphia. He operated the Gold Medal and Majestic exchanges in Philadelphia and Washington.

Sonin, Metro Official, Dies at Johannesburg

Carl J. Sonin, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's South African manager, was found dead at Johannesburg on New Year's Eve. The remains were cremated. Mr. Sonin, who was about 40 years old, was New York exchange manager for Metro seven years ago and later was tranferred to the foreign division.

Cleveland Clearance Agreement Is Ended

The Cleveland protection agreement, entered into between local exhibitors and all distributors for a two-year period, expired on Monday and it is understood no efforts are being made to renew the pact. First run exhibitors, however, are said to have requested that distributors continue to sell under the same protection plan as set forth in the agreement.

U. A. Acquires "The Battle"

United Artists this week closed a deal with Leon Garganoff, producer of "The Battle," for distribution of the film in this country, retitled "Thunder in the East."

New Trans-Lux Opens

The first Trans-Lux theatre opened in Philadelphia this week, with the established policy of newsreels and short subjects.

A Film Preview Above the Clouds

What is probably an all-time high for motion pictures was scheduled for New York on Thursday when two parties of newspapermen, explorers and film executives were to go 12,000 feet above the city in an Eastern Airlines Douglas passenger plane to view Martin Johnson's animal picture, "Baboona."

The first party was to leave Newark in the Douglas, piloted by famed war ace and commercial pilot Eddie Rickenbacker, who recently broke all records for transcontinental flying when he piloted the same plane from Los Angeles to New York in 12 hours, three minutes and 50 seconds.

Cruising nearly two and one-half miles above New York City, the interior of the mighty airliner was to be changed into a tiny motion picture theatre, the passengers to be treated to the novel thrill of watching the first "air-showing" in the industry's history.

The two air jaunts, the second to leave the flying field at 5 o'clock, are part of the exploitation campaign being conducted on the picture by Roger Ferri of Fox, which is releasing the latest Johnson animal epic. The film, incidentally, was photographed in the main from an airplane in Africa. Eastern Airlines had installed a Simplex projection equipment and complete Western Electric sound appartus. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, Arthur Brisbane and others were scheduled to be among the passengers.

On Wednesday Mr. Johnson spoke to Admiral Richard E. Byrd on a two-way broadcast to Little America. They discussed the respective merits of being the first two explorers to photograph a complete motion picture from the air and to fly over the South Pole.

Music Code Is Law This Week

P. A. Murkland, NRA deputy administrator, this week advised John G. Paine, chairman of the Music Publishers' Protective Association that the code of fair competition for the music industry will become effective by the end of the current week.

The code will be approved by the NRA executive committee, but the fact that the publishing industry employs less than 50,000 persons makes it unnecessary for the music code to receive the President's signature.

U.S.S.R. Will Make Foreign Film Awards

The government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics announced from Moscow last week that it will make awards to foreign producers for the best features and short subjects shown in the U.S.S.R. during the past year. The awards will be made at the World Cinema Festival, to be held in Moscow about the middle of February.

40 STORIES BOUGHT; SCHEDULES FILLING

Only Six Stage Plays Purchased in December, 19 Originals, and 19 Books and Novels

The producers in Hollywood have virtually completed the accumulation of story material for 1934-35 feature schedules, purchases of books and plays in December having dropped to 44, from the 70 in November, 51 in October and 75 in September. The dramatic stage continued to be an inconspicuous source of material, only six plays having been purchased in December, compared with 19 original stories and an equal number of books and novels. December purchases by companies follow:

| | SOURCE OF MATERIAL | | | TOTAL |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| COMPANY | ORIGINAL | BOOK | PLAY | FOR MONTH |
| Ambassador | 8 | .. | .. | 8 |
| Chesterfield | 1 | .. | .. | 1 |
| Columbia | .. | 2 | .. | 2 |
| Fox | .. | 2 | .. | 2 |
| Goldwyn (U. A.) | 1 | .. | .. | 1 |
| London (U. A.) | .. | 1 | .. | 1 |
| Metro | 4 | 5 | 3 | 12 |
| Paramount | 2 | 3 | 1 | 6 |
| Radio | 1 | 3 | 1 | 5 |
| Universal | 1 | 3 | .. | 4 |
| Warners | 1 | .. | 1 | 2 |
| TOTALS FOR DECEMBER | 19 | 19 | 6 | 44 |
| TOTALS SINCE SEPTEMBER 1 | 113 | 99 | 28 | 240 |

One of the unusual December purchases was a block of eight original outdoor stories by James Oliver Curwood, acquired by the independent Ambassador Pictures for a new series of westerns to star Kermit Maynard.

Again, during the month, producers in Hollywood made some noted story purchases to serve as the basis for new product, several of the acquisitions presenting in their literary or stage form good possibilities for motion picture box office attractions.

Metro purchased talker rights to Jacques Deval's wellknown "Cardboard Lover" musical, for Maurice Chevalier's next, and also got "The Life of Cecil Rhodes," for Charles Laughton. Two other plays, "No More Ladies," by A. E. Thomas, and the Selwyn-LeBaron "Something to Brag About," were bought, besides Booth Tarkington's "Rennie Peddigoe," Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities" and "Wild Oats," the novel by Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements.

Universal was strongly represented among December story buyers, acquiring the popular Frank Merriwell adventure stories for a serial, and E. Phillips Oppenheim's "Great Impersonation."

Fox bought Dana Burnett's "Shining Adventure" for Shirley Temple, and Radio negotiated Sir James M. Barrie's "Quality Street" for Katharine Hepburn.

The sources and authors' names of all properties purchased during the first half of December were reported in previous issues. Titles of books and plays and the names of authors of acquisitions made in the last half of the month follow, together with recapitulations of purchases by companies:

(Week Ending December 22nd)

| | SOURCE OF MATERIAL | | | TOTAL |

50 Executives See Improved Industry

Fifty of the foremost executives of the motion picture industry, in expressing last week the usual observations of conditions and trends in the business at the turn of a new year, held these varying viewpoints:

> The average quality of production is higher today than in years, giving effect to definite demands of the public for a higher standard in the intelligent expression and moral tone of the art.
> The difference in the gross between really good pictures and mediocre product is widening.
> One of the important steps to be taken next in the scientific development of the motion picture is the inclusion of color in production.
> Industrywide cooperation among all branches is essential to a complete return to normalcy.
> Theatre grosses are steadily climbing, the motion picture audience having been increased by thousands, reflecting both a wider appeal of the screen and improved business conditions generally.
> Closer contact between sales divisions and studios has brought about a type of product with more popular appeal.
> Double bills are being faced by the large companies as a serious problem.
> Admission prices must be raised to assure a continuance of quality product.
> The Legion of Decency movement was said to have been a favorable influence on the industry as a whole.
> More "internationalism" is needed in some American pictures in order that Hollywood may continue in its dominant position abroad.
> The trend in Hollywood is generally away from "mass" production.

The foregoing opinions of the motion picture industry as it stood at the end of 1934 and the relation of that position to its possible progress in 1935 were among those expressed in statements made by the following leaders:

Myron Scudder, National Board Treasurer, Dies at 74

Dr. Myron T. Scudder, for many years treasurer of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, died at his home in New York last week at the age of 74. He was president of the Scudder School for Girls. Born in India in 1860, Dr. Scudder was brought to this country at an early age, attending school in various states. Throughout his life as an educator, he devoted much time to various phases of social service.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

WOMEN IN HIGH STUDIO POSTS
GIANNINI EXPLAINS OPTIMISM
LITTLE THEATRE GUILD ON COAST
SEVEN FILMS START, FOUR FINISHED

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD has now turned an interested and respectful eye in the direction of filmdom's feminine contingent and their gradual influx into the executive ranks.

Heretofore, with one or two exceptions, women have directed their talents in paths histrionic, costume designing, editing and on down the film scale to the lesser but important clerical duties. Today, particularly within the last year, women have been assigned positions as consultants on motion picture production and often have the final word before the completed film is shipped to the exhibitor.

Dorothy Arzner, at one time the only woman director in the studios, has been elevated to an associate producer at Columbia by Harry Cohn. Miss Arzner probably also will take a hand in direction.

Mrs. Wallace Reid, another pioneer director, now holds an executive post with Monogram. Mrs. Reid formerly financed and produced her own pictures.

Leontine Sagan Latest Assigned

The newest recruit is Leontine Sagan, director of "Maedchen in Uniform," who recently was imported from Germany and placed under long term contract by MGM. Miss Sagan's first directorial assignment will be "Cecil Rhodes."

Theresa Helburn, one of the founders of the New York Theatre Guild, arrives on the Coast the first of the year to step into an executive post with Columbia. Miss Helburn recently procured a leave of absence from the studio to work up new Guild productions.

Another recent entrant into the production field is Lillian Albertson, for years in the legitimate field. Miss Albertson last week embarked for Honolulu with her own troupe, where she will film a picture independently financed.

Lois Weber, who also was a pioneer in the industry, has renewed activity in films and is now producing.

Wanda Tuchock, a writer at RKO, recently was elevated to a director post and has turned out "Finishing School" under the Radio banner.

Frances Marion, one of Hollywood's foremost writers for the screen, immediately was placed in charge of preliminary work on "The Good Earth," on the death of her husband, George Hill, who had been handling the picture.

A checkup of studio contract lists shows at least fifty women holding long term scenario writing contracts.

Giannini Sanguine

Doctor Attillio Henry Giannini, Hollywood banker, speaking:

"What difference does it make if some of the internal workings of a company run into snags every so often The thing that counts, in fact the only gauge of a company's efficiency, is its profit and loss statement. That summary shows if the public takes, wants, and attends their pictures.

"Things may have been tough for some film companies during the depression, but while I had oil companies, fruit growing corporations and every conceivable business enterprise for sale during the bad years that have passed, never during this entire period did I have a film company for sale.

"Why shouldn't I be sanguine and optimistic for the future? Well, I am. Figures tell the story."

Hathaway Among the Elect

Henry Hathaway, youthful director of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," which caused no small stir at a recent preview, has been catapulted into the circle of the directorial elect, and next to discovering genius, Hollywood revels in recognizing one.

A Little Theatre Guild

Despite the fact that there are no less than a score of little art theatres plus several more store room theatres spotted around the town, a group of representative stage and screen personalities, feeling the need for a major theatrical guild patterned after the New York Theatre Guild, have banded themselves together and under the direction of Curt Cox, playwright, are organizing what will be known as the Hollywood Theatre Guild.

Others now actively associated are Willy Pogany, artist studio art director. Irving Pichel, Donald Campbell and Edward L. Cooper.

Nat Levine has taken a long term lease on the entire studio properties of the Mack Sennett plant and beginning January 10 it will undergo general remodeling and will be known as the Mascot studio. An additional sound stage will be erected.

WRITING SCENARIOS FOR CONGRESS NOW

Franklin D. Roosevelt once aspired to be a scenario writer just as Al Smith once wanted to be an actor.

As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the youthful aid to Josephus Daniels sent many an original scenario to Paramount, all plots of which centered around the activities of the U. S. Navy.

At that time it was Eugene Zukor's job to maintain the entente cordiale with Washington, and though Paramount produced "Old Ironsides" in the interest of accuracy, it must be reported that none of Franklin Delano's creative efforts ever saw the light of a projection machine.

Well—neither did Al Smith ever become an actor.

Will Hays, with his son, arrived here last week and spent the holidays hunting at the Hernandez ranch. He will remain here for another two weeks.

Frank Borzage suffered a broken shoulder while trying out a new polo pony given to him as a Christmas present by his wife. He is recovering nicely at the Queen of Angels hospital.

Lacking only a few votes from its class "A" members necessary to ratify the Screen Actors Guild with the A.A.A.A. the organization will hold a mass meeting for its entire membership January 16 to inform them of details of the agreement.

Warming up for the production spurt scheduled to inaugurate 1935, major studios started seven new pictures; only one major feature was completed, while the independents checked in three.

New product credits Warner, Columbia and Paramount each with two pictures and MGM a singleton. On the completed side, Warner, Atherton, Invincible and Monogram each have one.

Looming important on the Warner activity program is the start of "Midsummer Night's Dream." The cast which eventually will include practically every name on the lot, plus a host of outside talent, currently lists James Cagney, Dick Powell, Joe E. Brown, Jean Muir, Ian Hunter, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh, Anita Louise, Victor Jory, Mickey Rooney, Veree Teasdale, Eugene Pallette, Ross Alexander, Grant Mitchell and Otis Harlan. The other feature, "Caliente," has Doroles Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell, E. E. Horton, Phil Regan and Winifred Shaw.

Probably the more important production started at Paramount is "Now I'm a Lady," starring Mae West, supported by Paul Cavanaugh, Gilbert Emery, Tito Coral, Fred Kohler, Sr., Monroe Owsley, Dewey Robinson and Grant Withers. On the list, also, is "Car 99," the cast for which includes Fred MacMurray, Guy Standing, Ann Sheridan, Frank Craven and William Frawley.

At Columbia "Mistaken Identity" was started, with Conrad Nagel, Florence Rice, Geneva Mitchell, Robert Allen, Raymond Walburn, Oscar Apfel and Irene Franklin. Starting simultaneously, "Devil's Cargo" features Wallace Ford and Marian Marsh.

The MGM activity, "Shadow of Doubt," will present Ricardo Cortez, Virginia Bruce, Betty Furness, Constance Collier, Isabel Jewell, Harvey Stephens, Arthur Byron and Ed Brophy.

"While the Patient Slept" is the Warner completed feature. Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee are in the lead roles.

Atherton (Sol Lesser) completed shooting "When a Man's A Man." The cast presents George O'Brien, Dorothy Wilson, Paul Kelly, Jimmy Butler and Richard Carlyle.

At Invincible, "Symphony of Living" was finished. Al Shean, Evelyn Brent, Gigi Parrish, Charles Judels, Albert Conti, John Darrow and Richard Tucker will be seen.

Completing the list is Monogram's "Mystery Man," the cast including Robert Armstrong, Maxine Doyle, Henry Kolker and LeRoy Mason.

Attention of the Manager

Gentlemen:

As fairly regular patrons of your theatre, my wife and I are hopeful that the new "The March of Time", which is to be released by Time, Incorporated, for showing during January, can be obtained and shown at your house.

Time's radio programme has appealed to us and to our friends as one of the best on the air, and it seems to us that they would turn out a very interesting picture.

We are going to see this new release wherever it is shown in this vicinity, and we sincerely hope it will be possible to view it at your theatre.

The Editor of Time

Sirs: -

I am elated at your announcement of the new news cinema feature "The March of Time." I append a list of greater Boston movie houses to whom I have sent the following letter:

"THE MARCH OF TIME, the new news movie is available in January.

I shall want to see it and shall recommend it to my household (5), to my office staff (25), to my friends (hundreds), and to my clients (more hundreds).

I shall recommend it in the Journal 'Private School News' which I send to all private schools (1000) suggesting that they recommend it to their pupils (100,000).

The radio 'MARCH OF TIME' has been the best and most meaningful entertainment on the air. I have confidence the editors will make their twenty minute reel equally interesting and valuable."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 255.—(A) What is the effect if the picture is too small for the distance of the screen from rear seats? (B) What is your idea of minimum and maximum picture width for theatre pur poses? Give your reasons. (C) What is the practical effect of picture size increase? (These are not questions to be answered briefly. There is room for a display of considerable knowledge of various effects from the viewpoint of the theatre patron.)

Answer to Question No. 249

Bluebook School Question No. 249 was: (A) Wherein lies the real evil of picture distortion known as the "keystone effect"? (B) Assume you are employed to take a position as chief projectionist in a theatre under construction. The exhibitor shows you the blueprints and asks what size of picture you recommend and why you recommend that size; also what kind of screen surface you suggest. He directs you to put your ideas in the form of a letter. Just what kind of letter would you write? We will assume the blueprints show the screen to be located on a stage 10 feet in back of the proscenium; that there will be 130 feet from the screen to the rear row of seats, and 23 feet from the screen to the front row of seats. The seating space will be 47 feet wide. There is a balcony. Projection angle is 16 degrees.

I find very few good answers, some that are mediocre, and very many that I just cannot pass, advising the men who sent them to get busy and study the problems presented by the last question. To avoid embarrassment I think I will omit all names this week and proceed at once to print the best answers received.

H. Edwards says, "Many projectionists (or at least men who have adopted that title—without just warrant, it seems to me) with whom I have talked, have the mistaken idea that if the sides of the screen image are made parallel by distorting the projector aperture, the fault is wholly remedied. I have followed your teachings many years, Brother Richardson, and hold you to be correct in saying that is not the truth. The real evil of distortion caused by a projection lens located above the center of the screen is that everything in the screen image is distorted with relation to everything else.

"If, for instance, there is an upright board on a building of equal width throughout in actuality, in the screen image resulting from anglar projection, the bottom of that board will be wider than the top. That, surely all will agree, is inevitable. Likewise, an actor's feet will be too large as compared with the head. If we select a point at the center of any object as representing normal width, then everything below that point will be too wide and everything above it too narrow.

"The real objection to keystone effect is that it distorts all objects in the screen image out of their proper proportions as to width. But that is not all, for two other evils follow; namely, everything in the screen image would also be 'stretched' vertically. That is to say, all objects would be made to appear taller than they really are. The actual distortion then would be both horizontal and vertical. Secondly, such a condition means that at only one vertical point of the screen can the sharpest focus of the screen image be obtained, since the forward conjugate foci point of the projection lens is fixed, and with a projection angle, every vertical point of the screen is a different distance from the projection lens than is every other vertical point, under which condition it is very plain that while a properly corrected projection lens may give fairly sharp focus all over the screen, still the point of greatest sharpness of focus will be only at one vertical height."

Now, gentlemen, suppose you all look that over carefully, examine your own answer and see just wherein you did not make good. That is not intended as a "roast," mark you well, but as an admonition to you to stop, look and listen before attempting an answer to questions.

(B) I think we must admit that our old friends, R. and K. Wells, have done themselves proud on this one. I could not improve on their answer very much myself. They say, "We would answer thus:

"'Mr. T.H.E. Exhibitor: We have to the best of our ability considered the questions you asked us to give you answers to and believe the following to be best:

"'First, the seating space is 47 feet wide and it is 23 feet from the screen to the front row of seats. The persons seated in the front end seats therefore would see the screen, especially its farther side, at a heavy angle, and unless the screen surface be of such nature that the light from the projection lens would be widely diffused, there would be very heavy fadeaway at these seats.

"'We therefore recommend a (1) white surface in order to secure the highest possible brilliancy to theatre patrons per watt of electric power applied; (2) that the surface be sufficiently diffusing in character that the fade-away at front end-row seats will be reduced to the least possible amount.

"'We recommend that the screen image size be kept as small as possible and provide persons in rear seats with comfortable viewing conditions. This, Mr. Exhibitor, is a problem not very easy of solution, for the reason that theatre patrons have been educated by exhibitors to expect a large picture, and people usually do not like too much change in something that has become more or less a habit.

"'If we examine the thing on the basis of real merit we know that it is possible to have a very comfortable view of picture details of a picture 12 feet wide at 130 feet, provided the picture be well illuminated, and reduced picture area enables increased brilliancy of illumination as compared with a picture of larger size. Also a 12-foot picture would be very much better in every way from the front end of the seating space—especially from the front rows of seats.

"'However, we do believe that 12 feet would be too small, not because it could not be viewed comfortably from the rear seats, but because it would be too radical a departure from the general practice. We believe, everything considered, that a 16-foot-wide picture would be a minimum size, an 18-foot one a maximum size. We therefore suggest a picture width of 17 feet.'"

I regard this answer as most excellent and can heartily endorse everything said.

Plans Ohio Theatre

Theodore Lindenberg plans construction of a new 600-seat house at Columbus, Ohio, to be known as the Bexley. The theatre will be in the nature of a laboratory for a new sound system, the Lindenberg, which is said to differ radically from any now on the market.

'REEL' HEART PROBLEM AT CAPITOL

Hollywood producers have a "heart problem"!

When Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer cast both Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery opposite Joan Crawford in "Forsaking All Others," it was considered a brilliant casting idea. But when the time came to decide which of the two should win Joan in the final fade-out the worry started.

The two men represent distinctly different types of screen leading men. Gable is the rugged, outdoor hero, and Montgomery the brilliant, witty but none-the-less sincere society man.

There are film fans who rave about Clark Gable, and others just as ardent in their admiration for Bob Montgomery And that's something you have to keep in mind when you're making a film, or you'll hear about it quick.

Some Gable fans didn't like the fact that their idol lost out in the final clinch of "Manhattan Melodrama," and Montgomery fans have been clamoring that it's about time their favorite gets a "break."

It looks like a real problem for Beatrice Fairfax. Joan's decision is being kept secret until the film is unreeled at the Capitol, where it is now being presented—and Hollywood is anxiously awaiting the fireworks that are sure to follow in the fan mail from the camp of the loser.

Which type does the American girl think would make the best husband? Which one would she accompany to the altar and forever after be content in "Forsaking All Others"?

The producers wish they knew the answer

CLARK? — GIRLS, HELP JOAN CHOOSE A REEL MATE! — OR BOB?

CLARK GABLE
He's the rugged, outdoor hero playing opposite Joan Crawford in "Forsaking All Others."

SUAVE SOPHISTICATION ...
Robert Montgomery, who is wooing Joan Crawford in his ardent scene, represents the class of man with polish and ballroom manners. BUT—

VERSUS RUGGED INDIVIDUALISM
This is a typical Gable-Crawford love-making scene, which raises the question as to which type Joan should marry in reel and real life.

ROBERT MONTGOMERY
Will he win Joan? Or does she prefer Gable's type. It's a tough decision.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Walter Connolly, Winnie Lightner, Mona Barrie—A very good program picture. Holt is always good. Wish someone would put him in a big picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—A fair picture for a double bill. Good enough cast with some O. K. action shorts. My customers found it rather hard to follow so advertise time it will be shown. Carroll as the lead will get a little money. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones, Cecelia Parker—This western is okay. Attendance better than I expected. A few shots in this picture looked similar to some in a previous Buck Jones from this company. In this neck of the woods a western would please more and draw better crowds if there was more music in it. Running time, 58 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: George Breakston, Jackie Searl, Frankie Darro, Jimmie Butler, Lois Wilson—Sold as a special and worth half the price I paid for it. Plenty of squawks on this one and the crowd conspicuous by its absence. So far have had only two specials out of six bought.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera Hoiuse, Leith, N. D. Small town patronage.

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—This is a very good picture of its type, but the business drawing ability is missing. It is a drama told against the background of the Russian Soviet revolution. It is the story of two people in love and their affections conflicting with their duty to their cause. It is good entertainment, but the fighting scenes kept many patrons away. Business very poor for two days. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 20-21.—J. J. Medford. Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis, Dorothy Burgess—A swell comedy liked by everybody that saw it. A few said they got a bellyache from laughing so much. Running time, 63 minutes. Played December 14-15-16.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Very good, swell entertainment and this Josephine Hutchinson has what it takes. She is not a raving beauty but has a fine personality and a great little trouper in this role. Me I'll take more like her, that shows some brains in her acting. Altogether you can gather that I am strong for her work in this picture and given the right roles and good support she should build into a box office star. Her first appearance and the audience reaction was very favorable to her and commended her work as I do in this report.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theaare, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Played it Thanksgiving. A swell picture. Powell has a story and sings a couple of clever songs. A pleasing picture from start to finish. The rave over the new star won't mean anything but they will like Powell and there are some swell lines of comedy. Frank McHugh funny as ever. Running time, 86 minutes. Player Nov. 28-29.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small two and country patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Lyle Talbot—This is a very good picture that pleased all of my patrons. It is a dramatic romance and the story has been produced many times before. It is strictly a woman's picture as it tells of a woman's life—her tragedy and finally her triumphs. This is strictly adult entertainment. The trailer sold the show for us and we played one day to very good business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—Have seen better Brown shows but this one will please his fans. Played November 4-5.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—A good comedy. A little far fetched at times but the good old Joe Brown fans don't mind. Any of Joe's antics are oke with them. Fast moving and a good story. It can't help but please. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 18-19-20.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—A different kind of musical that everyone enjoyed. It goes to show that a musical does not have to be a leg show to be enjoyed. Attendance small for this one. No fault of the picture, however. Played November 29-30-December 1.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera House, Leith. N. D. Small town patronage.

Fox

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Charles Boyer—Another evidence of the fact that if independent producers are smart, they will realize that the old line producers are mentally in Europe and that the field is left clear for American productions with American stars in American scenes. Like all similar Hungarian goulash, this was a flop.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Charles Boyer—To Erik Charell and the Fox Organization, I congratulate you upon the production of "Caravan." I expect we are both disappointed in the gross. However, I signed it up with the combined Women's Clubs here and did not do bad. I think it is beautiful, the music glorious, and the people liked it. There's no apologies to offer for a picture of this type; it won't make us rich financially, but people who do not get this type of production in the flesh should appreciate it from the screen.—Howard F. Matthews, Roxy Theatre, Ontario, Ore. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—A fine picture; one of the best. It deserved fine business but failed to get it at the box office.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers, Louise Dresser, Marian Nixon—A repeat engagement with another feature, but it was Will who brought the customers. A swell picture for all its age, that runs his new hits a close second for humanness of character. If you can get a good print, Will Rogers will bring 'em in on a repeat and turn 'em out happy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster, Hugh Williams, Gilbert Roland—Poor business. Don't mean a thing at the B. O.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: I will confess that I booked this with some fear that it would not go over. It is intensely interesting throughout. It goes from the year 1905 throughout the World War. Much of the photography is poor as was expected for many shots were taken a long time ago. Many famous men of the past—Wilson, Teddy Roosevelt, Kermit, that was killed in the war, and F. D. himself as a young man. Also Thomas R. Marshall, that came from this town. It will take exploitation, but fortunately for us, the first night we ran it, two Legionaires recognized the Commander and his own company in a shot in London and that helped the picture. The best spot is Friday and Saturday, is my opinoin. Thrilling shots of the submarine war are shown and there is no doubt but what they are authentic.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Colombia City, Ind. General patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien, Irene Bentley, George E. Stone.—This is a good western picture that should please all western fans. It is full of action, thrills, comedy and a good love story. Although this is a little old, it is one of the best pictures O'Brien has made. Here's hoping there are many more as good as this one. Played one day (Saturday) to very good business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Either the picture or Cohan's failure to get into the swing of things, but you're gambling when you play this one. Played December 8.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre,, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Jimmy Durante, Alice Faye, Cliff Edwards, Gregory Ratoff—Good, but played too old to do any good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Not big enough for Baxter, but a pleasing action picture and the customers liked it. Played December 15.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town potronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro, Ralph Morgan, Herbert Mundin—Plenty of thrilling action, air shots and a fair story of brave men who know fear. Good casting in old setting, but handled well. Played on Sunday against stiff competition and did business. Should go well where customers crave excitement. Baxter is well liked here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 9-11.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—Not entertainment. Don't play it.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—This is very poor entertainment and you will do well to cancel it. This is just another poor story with two good stars to fool the patrons in. Fox calls this a special. After seeing it, you will agree with me that it is a special—the worst special ever produced by any company. More bad comments on this that any picture ever played before. Business poor and everyone displeased. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 17-18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Dorothy Peterson, O. P. Heggie, Jackie Searl—Did a surprisingly poor business. Sol Lesser is the smartest producer in Hollywood and has a better sense of show values than any other two men in the city of fuddled heads.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—This is a very good picture of the comedy drama type, but has no drawing power. The picture is localed in Sweden and the story deals with a wealthy girl who, fed up with the social set, goes out into the world to earn a living. Miss Gaynor turns in a splendid performance as do the entire cast, but for some reason it did not draw business. Played two days to below average business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 10-11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER! Shirley Temple, Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, James Dunn, Sylvia Froos, John Boles, "Aunt Jemima"—No good for me. But had only one walk-out (that was me!) It was fairly good entertainment, so says my wife, who was selling tickets and couldn't leave. Made a little money for the express company and film exchange but the picture left me contrary to its ending song, "Out of the Red." Well, all pictures can't be good and I guess I have to use my part of the bad ones.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—A truly great production, fine characterizations by the entire cast in a story so real and human as to make it immemorial. Will need plenty of advance advertising in small towns, but the returns will justify any expenditure. Pleased both young and old. Some attended matinee and came back the same night. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 16-18.—Martin S. Lane, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—This is one of the best westerns I've ever run. I highly recommend it to any fellow exhibitor that uses westerns. Good story, plenty of thrills, comedy and some good music and singing by Gene Autry and his band. This is the kind of western that pleases my patrons. Running time, 7 reels. Played December 21-22.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—Excellent picture, but not what small town people want. Metro's big special sure flopped at my box office.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—This is a very good picture of its type, but here it did not appeal to the men. It is a great love story, tender and human. The locale is England and most of the picture takes place in the Barrett home. It is a typical English picture, being entirely too slow-moving and too much talking. We had quite a few walkouts on this also. Played two days to good business. Running time, 110 minutes. Played December 13-14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—A few more like this and Gable might just as well fold up.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Madge Evans, Robert Young—Fair program picture. Played on Cash Night so it went over. No comments from patrons. Highly implausible baseball feats, with last minute home-runs, etc. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 7.—John H. Forester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—All right as mystery pictures go, but after baseball season was closed, thanks to the swell protection that is being given the larger cities. No business? They should have held it off till the spring training season, then it might have had a chance. It's like playing a football picture the Fourth of July.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly—A special, not entertainment. Walkouts and no business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Harlow, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—An extra good small town picture. Pleased everyone and I used it on Cash Night only. James Dunn a favorite here. Ought to be good for two days in any small town. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 14.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier Jeanette MacDonald—This will be a real small town disappointment nationally. To be honest, I thought the title a good one when Metro first announced it. However, the cast headed by Chevalier and the director, whose technique while fine is thoroughly out of step with modern America, precluded its success. Besides it's really an operetta and let me again assure the producer that the public won't stand for operetta, let alone opera. Will somebody kindly send some steamer tickets to Vienna, Budapest, London and Rome and Paris and ask the producers to come back to America, and all will be forgiven. Here is a great country, even if its writers are decadent and gone to seed, and its producers European-minded.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Another Metro special that failed to clock at the B. O. Walkouts.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—This and "Queen Christina"—the only two Garbo pictures I have ever personally liked. Garbo does not go into any strange interludes. She is human and looks her best in the "white outfit." Please stay down to earth with us in the future as you have done in this one, Miss Garbo. Played November 6-7.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—Poor picture to poor business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patonage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Jimmy Durante—Good entertainment. Durante better than usual, not so loud. While nothing sensational, it is pleasing entertainment after it gets started. Played December 13-14.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marion Marsh, Ralph Morgan—I have nothing but praise for this one. Would suggest, however, that if you book it, to get some fast or peppy shorts to balance it, as it is a trifle slow. A picture that no one could kick about on moral grounds. I believe if it had been played here at a different date that both Monogram and myself would have made some money. However, with church programs, community Christmas tree, etc., I lost plenty and Monogram merely got their guarantee. Played December 22-23.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST, A: Marian Marsh, Edward Nugent, Louise Dresser, Ralph Morgan—A picture for the entire family from the youngest to the oldest. A small town natural. Every character fits his part perfectly. This picture outgrossed "Little Women," and in my opinion is a far better picture. The majors were sure asleep on the job when they let Monogram get this one. Played December 16-18.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh—This picture will click. While it isn't the picture it could have been, it still will draw in those that you seldom see and that's always welcome dough. Comments were all favorable and will please with engagement. While gross was below expectations, it did almost the same as following entire week. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Dec. 11-12-13-14.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—This is only fair entertainment and did not please my patrons. This is a comedy with music, but not of the musical comedy type. This presents a story of a mythical kingdom and a princess in trouble. She is rescued by a New York salesman and all ends well. This is excellent family entertainment. Played on a late Saturday Night show to only fair business. Running time, 66 minutes. Played December 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—Thought this picture fair, but people here don't seem to like Mae West. Business was the poorest in months. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1-2.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—Lots of money spent. Giant settings created. Gorgeous robes on beautiful women. Swimming pool scenes. Good performances by William and Wilcoxon. It takes 100 minutes to screen it but that doesn't mean money at the box office. It may do some business but not for me. Patrons' reactions were not so hot. Running time, 100 minutes. Nov. 11-12-13.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack.—Drew the biggest first day gross of any picture we've used in three years. Second night nearly half first night, and third beat second night. A wow of a comedy-musical. Songs snappy and tuneful. Joe's song to his duck had the house in tears from laughter. Oakie extra good as usual. Step on this one sure. Had a good number come back to see it twice. Will get the money in big way. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 16-17-18.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner—Your Joe Penner fans will be out to see this. Two good songs. The cheering section dance affair is novel and entertaining. Picture moves rapidly and will please. Joe Penner does well with his type of comedy and will not disappoint his fans. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 16-17-18.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and conntry patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Put it on day early, cold—they still came. I believe this one of the best Fields has made, if not the best. Had the house laughing all the time he was on the screen. Drew extra well for three days. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 11-12-13.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft—I personally don't care for these foggy pictures set in England, but audience report was favorable. Raft once had a good following here but needs something to help him before long to keep him from slipping. They still remember him in "Scarface." Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 15.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—A program mystery that did all right considering the season.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—A murder mystery that is a mystery. Nothing big and minus star value. It will satisfy your action play dates. Running time, 57 minutes. Played November 30-December 1.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Pauline Lord—An unusually good small town picture. We exploited the rural districts and they came to see it. Pauline Lord exceptionally good. Zasu Pitts a scream as always. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Dec. 7-8.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, Zasu Pitts, Evelyn Venable, W. C. Fields—This is one of the distributor's answers to clean pictures that will get by the Legion of Decency. It is the old classic filmed again with a modern cast. I ran it ten years ago silent and strange to say, it attracted above average business but you will have to hand it to Pauline Lord for putting everything she had into the part of Mrs. Wiggs. The lead boy is good too but Pauline Lord is the whole show and all credit is due to her for what success it had at the box office. She is a fine character actress with a nice easy voice. Perfect in a difficult role to put this old one over. W. C. Fields in one short sequence, but that was enough. Another actor like Jimmy Durante that has only one line. The same old stuff in every picture nearly. Pauline Lord must be an old trouper. She shows stage training in this picture or I miss my guess. Certainly they could not have picked a better actress to fill this role and the audience was of the same opinion as the writer. Much comment on her work.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—A picture that drew extra business and pleased a majority of them. Ideal for small town. Easily tied up with schools and enjoyed both by young and old alike. Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 28-29-30.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard—As far as drawing power is concerned this takes the cake. No need to say any more.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—The much heralded "Bundling" hit! Not much hit at box office for me although personally enjoyed. Fair returns. People here shun anything in costumes. Played December 2-3-4.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—This picture light and airy and spends entire footage working up to a climax of Puritan "bundling." Joan Bennett and Lederer in this ten minute sequence are marvelous. Lederer's smile and beaming personality in this scene does away with any objectionable squawks. Lederer perfectly cast. Ruggles comedy is good. See it and then book it. Running time, 74 minutes. Played November 25-26-27.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Pretty light fare, but the young people liked it. Certainly nothing heavy about this one. Played December 19-20.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—A bust. Had it in on midweek and played to good crowds who let me know in no gentle way that they disliked the picture. It has not one redeeming feature. Refunded as well as passes to next change to take off the worst of the grief. A burden any way you take it. Even the trailer is poor. Running time, 68 minutes. Played November 2-3.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Opened this on a Saturday Midnight and played Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. I've found that westerns that have a story and some effort made to produce them mean plenty of extra coin at the b. o. and spot them in my best spots with extra paper, talking trailer, etc. Business exceptional. Small town exhibitors can all profit in the same manner, I believe. Paramount can make the good westerns. Running time, 60 minutes. Played November 4-5-6.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Morgan, Helen Mack, David Holt—A very fine program picture that didn't do business due to the fact that there was a lot of opposition at the high school. This David Holt is an up and coming kid star—but—not a Shirley Temple by any means. Lee Tracy the weakest part of the picture. Business below average account of high school competition. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Dec. 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

RKO

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Frances Dee, Billie Burke, Bruce Cabot—Just the picture for small towns; plenty of comedy and action and pleased both the young and the older people. Played Dec. 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—Very fine entertainment to extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Frederic March, Constance Bennett, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—Pay for it and let 'em keep it. Not a small town picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Started out swell—then slowed down to nothing. Another old one glad to get rid of. Had it scheduled three days but pulled it second day. Colman just can't break even here. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 9-10.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldren, Ark. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Tied up with this attraction with the Women's Club. They liked it. I liked it. Best one we've played here in a long while. A picture that is well worth playing. Played December 15-16.—H. C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss—Excellent picture—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—A good program picture for Friday and Saturday.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—Inspired by the headlines of today and that was the lead catch line on the film. Very good and it is right down the alley for a small town theatre for it is the experience that most of the farmers have gone through the past year. There is a bad technical mistake in the scene where they let the water into the corn after the drouth had gone some time. The director did not know his corn or he would have known that stalks with just two or three leaves on as the field was shown was far past any help. Not even an ear showed and in a previous shot it was eared out. Also the picture dragged with too much footage digging the ditch to much pick and shovel work, I mean too much footage given to this part of it. Title must have hurt the picture or the Christmas slump.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Stuart Erwin, Marjorie Rambeau—One I had left over. Played to Saturday crowd but not very satisfactory to either by patrons or to the box office. Too much "Durante." Played December 8th.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny, Sydney Howard, Mitzi Green—Very fine entertainment.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

Universal

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull—An excellent picture and it pleased those that saw it. Suggest a school tieup in order to get any money out of it in a small town. Played November 2-3.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Warners

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—Probably classed by Warners as a programmer. Probably classed in the larger centers as a filler, but the small town exhibitor that gives this picture his best days, works it and uses Warner's talking trailer can be sure of good business and oh! how they will enjoy it. It is one of those pictures that are often called "sleepers," but every small town exhibitor would not call it a sleeper, but a natural. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 21-22-23.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—This is good entertainment of the mystery type and pleased all who saw it. This is rather different from the usual mystery story and has plenty of action, thrills, comedy and romance. Warren William portrays Perry Mason, a famous criminal lawyer, and turns in a splendid performance. The trailer sold the picture for us and we played one day to very good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 19th.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—Ideal action, murder mystery for your Friday, Saturday. It rated good with my people and pleased them from start to finish. A good story, cast does well with it and a bang-up climax that makes for good entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 12-13.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Miss. Small town and country patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Regular scheduled picture had set for this date did not arrive. Glad it didn't as this was a wow. Pleased everybody and made money. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 5-6.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

I AM A THIEF: Ricardo Cortez—A good action mystery. Oke for midweek, Friday and Saturday. Picture well made and while not big still will please. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 19-20.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—Another one of those Warner pictures that may not be big but will satisfy your audience. Fast action and a whirlwind story. Well made, well cast and it gives. Running time, 70 minutes. Played November 7-8.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney—Good action comedy. Typical of Cagney. Played December 11-12.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney—Good old Jimmy. This picture following "Here Comes the Navy" has set this star up in a big way. "St. Louis Kid" is action and comedy. Picture is paced with fast comedy and good story. It is oke for Sunday in anybody's town and the Warner trailer sells it. It's good. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 9-10.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MICKEY'S COVERED WAGON: Mickey McGuire Series—This is a very good comedy featuring Mickey McGuire and his gang. This is one of the best series of shorts on the market and should please both young and old. Columbia is producing as good Gang comedies as Metro and some of them are better. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLIDAY LAND: Color Rhapsodies Series—This is a very good cartoon comedy all in beautiful color, and should please all. This is our first issue of this series and we hope the others will be as good. Book this one and you are sure to get your money's worth. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KATNIPS OF 1940: Krazy Kat Kartoon—This is a very good cartoon comedy that is sure to please everyone. Plenty of laughs and one of the best of this series. Here's hoping Columbia products many more good cartoons that will please the public. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

MICKEY'S COVERED WAGON: Mickey McGuire Series—An excellent comedy with plenty of laughs and some music mixed in. My customers can hardly wait till the next Mickey McGuire gets around. Running time, 2 reels.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town patronage.

STABLE MATES: Sidney and Murray—A very good comedy. Audience got a big kick out of two city fellers trying to harness a horse. All the Sidney-Murrays have been good. Running time, 20 minutes.—

Educational

CAMPUS HOOFER, THE: Frolics of Youth—Fairly amusing but there won't be many ribs broken.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GOOD LUCK-BEST WISHES: Musical Comedies Series—The Pickens sisters' singing is the only bright spot.—Glenn Caldwell, Prince Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

NIFTY NURSES: Musical comedy series—At last a pretty good short from Education. Silly but amusing.—Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Arora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHY MULES LEAVE HOME: Terry-Toons Series—This is a good cartoon comedy that pleased all who saw it. This series of cartoons are not as good as many of the others, but they seem to improve with every issure. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MGM

BIG IDEA, THE: Musical Revues Series—Supposed to be a musical, but mostly Ted Healy. Got the laughs and pleased. Running time, 2 reels.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN OF POLISH: Musical Revues Series—Nothing extra and only clocked one general laugh. Running time, 2 reels.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—One of the best "Gang" comedies I've ever played. Plenty of laughs and "Spanky" is a whiz. Would make another great child feature picture star. Running time, 2 reels.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

PRO FOOTBALL: Oddities—Of interest to all football fans. Shows the Chicago Bears performing some of their plays.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TAKING CARE OF BABY: Oddities—Fairly amusing. Just wondering when Pete will be showing us how to hang out the weekly wash.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Auora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THEM THAR HILLS: Laurel and Hardy—Another extra good one from Laurel and Hardy. This team goes over big here. Running time, 2 reels.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BABY BLUES: Paramount Varieties Series—Good. Clever and got a number of laughs. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

CAN YOU TAKE IT: Popeye the Sailor—Ok Popeye cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN, THE: Paramount Varieties Series—Extra good shots of world's nerviest women. Well liked here. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

PETTING PREFERRED: Harry Langdon—Ok slapstick comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Betty Boop—Extra good. Will please any audience. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE ROOF: Anson Weeks and Orchestra—Another good orchestra reel. Well liked. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHE REMINDS ME OF YOU: Eton Boys—This is a very good cartoon comedy with some excellent singing by the Eton Boys. This is the type of entertainment the public likes and the producers should give it to them. Let's have more of these. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

SUPERSTITION OF THREE ON A MATCH: Paramount Varieties—Nothing to this. This type of short does not go over. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small time patronage.

WATER RODEO: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Good action of water sport thrills. Well liked by patrons. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

Universal

NIGHT IN A NIGHT CLUB, A: J. Harold Murray, Buck and Bubbles, Martha Raye, Elaine Arden, Harry Rose—Very uninteresting. Wish Universal would quit these Broadway Brevities and make comedies. Two reels of film wasted. Running time, 2 reels.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

OLD KING COLE: Silly Symphonies—A good color cartoon. Have played better. Running time, 1 reel.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

COME TO DINNER: Broadway Brevities Series—This is very poor entertainment and not up to the average Broadway Brevities. It is a burlesque of "Dinner at Eight" and has some very good characters, portraying the original stars. Very poor entertainment.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

GOOD MORNING EVE: Leon Errol—This is excellent entertainment of the musical comedy type. There are plenty of beautiful girls, pretty costumes and excellent music. It is done in color and this adds much to the entertainment of the show. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MASKS AND MEMORIES: Lillian Roth—This is purely a musical and the laughs are not so many but this is made up otherwise. It is best to run this with a comedy feature. Running time, 30 minutes.—Martin Teker, Leith Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town patronage.

RICHARD HIMBER & HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Master Series—This is a very good one-reeler presenting Richard Himber and his orchestra playing several popular tunes. The singing of Joey Nash is great and the lovely dance at the finish is wonderful. Play this and listen to your patrons praise it. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SMOKED HAMS: Shemp Howard, Daphne Pollard—This is very poor entertainment of the slapstick variety. You will benefit by not playing this one. I am rather surprised that Vitaphone should produce such shorts as this and hope the others will be much better. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

SO YOU WON'T T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates—Good slapstick comedy—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WILL OSBORNE & HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—This is a very good one-reel musical featuring Will Osborne and his Famous Orchestra playing several popular tunes. We had many patrons come to see it two or three times. Vitaphone certainly produces the type of entertainment the public wants. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. P. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—This has been the best serial I have ever shown. Has held interest all the way through and brings them back. That's the purpose. Running time, 2 reels each.—John H. Forrester, Pine Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE NEWS OF 1934 PASSES IN REVIEW

Passage of the year 1934, without any inundating tide of regrets, yet with a happier feeling in the industry than was the case when the year first limped into view, saw definite movement forward in several directions. A return to profits was reflected, from the field of distribution as well as from exhibition. There was further progress in reorganization of companies which have been in receivership; Paramount's reorganization plan was before the court, and hearings already had begun. The Motion Picture Code machinery began functioning; on the other hand, there was a complete breakdown of the clearance and zoning system. Improvement of product was marked; the Production Code Administration went into action July 15; the Legion of Decency movement got underway. Very few were the changes among important personalities in the business. The story of 1934 in highlight, revised from a compilation by Motion Picture Daily, follows, by months and dates:

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Aransas Pass, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

As soon as the Nimrods and Izaak Walton boys up north and northeast read the heading on this letter they will say, "Gee-my-nently-kraught," but wouldn't I like to be down there with the Colonel?" That Aransas Pass is better known throughout the sporting fraternity than any other town in Texas. There's a reason for this. It is the place where the boys come to catch tarpon and shoot the ducks and geese that got away from John Pillar of Valley City, North Dakota, and Herb and Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, although there weren't many got away.

Jaysee, Please Don't!

Then when you are in Aransas Pass don't fail to go and see the Rialto theatre, operated by Mr. Paul, and when you see both of them we will bet you will say "to —— with the tarpon and ducks, I am going back to the Rialto." But speaking of ducks. We have been invited out to eat turkey, and they say that these Texas turkeys are awfully good to eat. We ate a turkey one time and we haven't liked turkey since, but those red fish they catch down in the Gulf would just about fill out our dinner properly. When you boys are shoveling snow off the walks up north just think of us down here in our shirt-sleeves hooked onto a big sea bass or a tarpon and hollering for help. They tell us that a negro hooked onto a sea bass the other day that yanked him into the Gulf and he hung on and didn't strike land again until he came up in Cuba. There is no use in trying to beat these Texans. The only one we know who could hold a candle to 'em would be H. J. Longacre of Glenwood, Minnesota, but he's a little out of pratice now. But then there's Art Miller of Atkinson, Nebraska, he could keep these Longhorns busy.

Irvin Speckles, who runs the Cozy theatre at Schulenburg, is no relation to Claus Spreckles who runs the sugar business of this country, although they both say "Nix-come-arouse" to a Mexican when he says "Me No Savvy." Schulenberg, Texas, is just like Shullsburg, Wisconsin, except that it don't have street railways and broadcasting stations, neither does Shullsburg, Wisconsin, and Schulenburg, Texas, don't have a guy by the name of Lee who runs a theatre of nights and bakes doughnuts for the unemployed in the daytime, and both keep him busy while Irvin has time to go bullhead fishing in the Red river of the South. Well, anyhow, the Cozy is a swell theatre managed by a swell chap in a swell town, and what more could the public want?

Lillian McElroy operates the Coles theatre at Hallettsville, and when we called to see her two years ago she said, "Well, you old reprobate, what are you doing down here?" We said to her, "Sh-h-, keep quite, the Warden hasn't missed us yet." This time she shook hands with us, just like a lady ought to, and besides that she has a beautiful theatre and a beautiful sister who was giving a music lesson to a beautiful girl on a beautiful piano, and—well, anyhow, Lillian says she isn't a Polander, by birth or marriage, although we doubt if she has ever been married. Moral: Be sure to go to the Coles theatre when you are in Mallettsville.

Theatre Is Balm in Gilead

Mrs. W. H. Allen runs the Gilead theatre in Gilead. We have thought the matter over pretty thoroughly and have come to the conclusion that there is no doggone sense in loading a town down with that kind of a name, and if it wasn't for Mrs. Allen the town would have never grown a particle. As it is, it is a right smart village with plenty of room to grow. Mrs. Allen hopes business will get better. Yeah, we do, too, but what's going to make it better? Jidja-ever think of that? Oh yeah, we forgot about that "Shelterbelt" proposition. Wait until they get that going.

Henry Hall at Beeville is the owner of a circuit of theatres, known as the Henry Hall Industries. We know because Mr. F. D. Nance, his assistant, gave us renewals of HERALD subscriptions for nine of the theatres. Mr. Hall was remodeling another theatre in Beeville when we called. He was recovering from a severe auto accident and was able to be around and superintend operations at his new house. If Texas was made up of such men as Mr. Hall we can see no reason why she should ever go Republican, but maybe she won't (again).

Mr. Nance impressed us as a man who knew his business, and we give it as our opinion that the Hall Industries is operated about as it should be operated and that's the reason why this string of houses is well and favorably known throughout this southwestern country. They told us they were going to build a yacht for fishing at Aransas Pass and invited us to come down next summer and go deep sea fishing with them. Oh gosh, gee-whiz, didja hear that?

CALLS 50% OF TRAILERS HARMFUL

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am anxious to find out if other exhibitors are as dissatisfied with "trailers" as I am?

For a long time I gave them up altogether. Now I order them on all features, but censor them all at rehearsal and find I reject about 50 per cent because I feel they will do more harm than good. This means I pay a large sum away yearly for no return, and, what is more important, lose what should be the most valuable advertising medium. Why? It would appear that "trailer-makers" are instructed to concentrate on all the smutty and sexy parts of a feature possible, prolonged love scenes, bedroom stuff, etc., and yet nine times out of ten the feature itself proves entirely free from same, the trailer endeavoring to sell the "nasty" angle, and so giving an entirely false idea of the coming theme. To what end? I am convinced that 80 per cent of the average audience are decent-minded, and looking for clean, not suggestive stuff that will make them feel uncomfortable.

The compilers of "trailers" appear to me to be brothel-minded! And figure an audience the same. Maybe I am the one who is wrong, but how often have personal friends said to me, "The picture was good, but if you hadn't personally told me so, I'd not have come. That trailer thing you showed of it put me off. Why do you show them? They mostly give a wrong impression."

Countless times this has happened, so there must be many others affected who I do not come in contact with. Recent examples are: "One Night of Love," a lovely picture, but first we had the rotten title to overcome, then a silly bedroom trailer. "The Cat and the Fiddle" ditto. The "Another Language" trailer concentrated on the sex angle, whereas the picture had very little of it. My wife said, "That is one of my favorite pictures and that disgusting trailer gives an entirely false impression." My daughters (adult) said, "If it's all mush like the trailer we don't want to see it," so off it comes, which means no advertising.

How does it strike you and your readers? It seems to me that whether I am right or wrong, the subject is a very important one. My personal idea of a trailer should be: less stupendous adjectives, and longer scenes from the real high lights, not just the clinging embraces, etc.—G. G. BAISS, The Capital Theatre, Duncan, B. C.

Trustee to Distribute Skouras St. Louis Fund

J. Porter Henry, attorney, has been named special trustee for the fund of $20,962 deposited in the First National Bank, St. Louis, under the name of the "Skouras Employees Mutual Aid Association," by Circuit Court Judge Green. Mr. Henry will determine to whom the fund is to be paid.

QUIGLEY AWARDS

Even the splendid news that additional Awards are to be given in the second year of the Competitions must take second place to the last moment report from the West announcing yet another promotion due to the Awards, that of Howard Sweet, February winner, who for some months now has occupied his new post. How representative exhibitor-executives regard the Quigley project may be summed up in the words of E. C. Beatty, of the Butterfield Circuit, in commenting on the winner's advance:

". . . We felt that any man whose ability was recognized by your Committee should also be recognized by us. . . . I am happy to say the results of your judgment are being fully shown by Mr. Sweet's success in his new position."

With the above announcement, the number of Quigley promotions now total five, and there is reason to believe the score will mount even higher in the not too distant future. This is indeed cause for gratification.

And additionally gratifying are the sentiments pertaining to the Awards expressed by industry leaders and theatremen, set down on following pages. It is heartening to know that in one short year the Competitions have accomplished enough to earn such sincere and widespread approbation.

There is every reason to anticipate that in 1935 the Quigley Awards will do even a brighter job of spotlighting the efforts of the man in the field.

QUICK THINKING

Round Tabler Tom di Lorenzo, of the Tivoli, in Jersey City, generously suggests an extra bow for Manager Dan Lee, of the United States Theatre, in nearby Hoboken, who when fire broke out in his projection room, according to page one stories in the local press, mounted the stage and calmed his patrons while directing them to the fire exits. Says Tom:

"Many qualities are required of a man to qualify him for the position of theatre manager. Ability to profitably operate a theatre is necessarily first. But the ability to handle an emergency is equally as important."

With which we agree entirely. It is reassuring to know that quick thinking in emergencies is a part of the stock in trade of so many of the industry's Dan Lees, praise be. That patrons take this so much for granted is a fitting tribute to the theatreman whose mind is geared to do the right thing and do it immediately in times of danger.

A SENSIBLE RESOLUTION

We shall eschew the conventional resolutions appropriate to the season, but one. And that is—let the exhibitor resolve to back up his manager(s) with an adequate advertising and exploitation budget to put over the 1935 shows. That in itself would prove a perfectly swell gift for a whole flock of seasoned showmen harassed by the lack of the few necessary dollars to do their stuff properly.

With everyone being delightfully optimistic over the box-office prospects of the new year, your manager really should be allowed an opportunity to endorse these sentiments. But he cannot unless he has something besides his fingernails to work with. There is much too much of thumbs-down on exploitation.

Undoubtedly, the new product is greatly improved. But the fact that pictures are better won't alone sell standing room. The buyers have got to be told.

THE ARAB AND HIS CAMEL

The fan club movement is spreading. Long dormant, the idea is taking hold rapidly not only in this country but also across the water to the extent that an international federation is reported to be in process of formation. It may be supposed that the progress of any such ambitious plan will depend to some extent on the cooperation, official or otherwise, of theatremen and studio heads.

Within certain limits such participation is not to be discouraged. Apparently the desire of fans to band together in support of certain players has its obvious box office advantages. But experience teaches restraint in accepting the aims and purposes of volunteer organizations that have to do with any part or parcel of the motion picture—even those desiring only to champion the stars.

There is rather a thin line between defender and critic. There is also the fable of the Arab and his camel.

Taylor Myers promoted a flock of ducks for a street bally on the recent Joe Penner picture and afterwards served the quackers as the main dish of his Sunday dinner. Hungry managers who may have occasion to use an elephant on "Barnum" are advised that pachyderm steaks are rather indigestible.

PROMOTION RECEIVED BY QUIGLEY WINNER

Sweet, Who Won in February, Now Reports Advance Some Months Back to Bigger Job

Managers' Round Table Club takes pleasure in announcing to the membership the promotion some time ago of Howard G. Sweet, winner of the February Award, from the State Theatre, East Lansing, to a larger and more responsible situation in charge of the Franklin Theatre, Saginaw, Michigan, both houses of the Butterfield Circuit.

That the advancement of this member was due to his success in the Quigley competitions is affirmed by E. C. Beatty, General Manager, Butterfield Circuit, who under a Detroit date line, writes this department as follows, in answer to a request regarding the fortunes of the Quigley participant. Writes Mr. Beatty:

"I want you to know that the Award was appreciated by this office and we felt that any man whose ability was recognized by your Committee should also be recognized by us, and accordingly Mr. Sweet was switched to a more important position. I am happy to say the results of your judgment are being fully shown by Mr. Sweet's success in his new position."

With the unofficial announcement of a second promotion for another Quigley winner, the total of advancements accredited to the Quigley project may now be counted as five, and it is our understanding that there are more to come.

Sweet has been in his new post for some time, but inadvertently neglected to notify Headquarters of his good fortune. He won the February Award for his campaign on "Queen Christina."—A-MIKE.

Myers Promotes Radio "Don Juan" Broadcast

Taylor Myers at Loew's Broad, Columbus, Ohio, used a man in football uniform with appropriate copy on his back to act as his street bally on "The Band Plays On." Imprinted heralds were distributed in office buildings, restaurants and beauty parlors in advance of opening.

On "Don Juan" a radio dramatization was broadcast and leading hotel plugged a specially concocted "Don Juan" cocktail. The four Doug Fairbanks' "Keep Fit" articles were planted in newspaper and movie magazines promoted from local distributor were handed out with theatre stickers attached.

Co-op Page Coloring Contest Put on for "Judge Priest"

George Delis, though busy taking care of four towns for Inter-State Theatres, in Ohio, takes a few moments to report some recent activities put on with Manager Keith Chambers, at the Palace, Canton. Among these was a different sort of a co-op page on "Judge Priest" embracing a coloring contest, full page banner calling attention to the idea with drawing of Rogers in center of page. To qualify for prizes of passes, entrants had to color or paint the drawing and also one picture from each merchant's ad on the page, then mail or bring the entries to newspaper. Winners were posted in lobby and announced in paper.

Animated cutout of Rogers on judge's bench was used, arm with hammer moving up and down. Another animation was on "Cat's Paw" with shadowbox arrangement, inside of which was picture advertising. Outside was cutout of black cat lifting paw up and down, and also two holes topped with pair of Lloyd spectacles above which was "Stop" copy.

In addition to having demonstrations and contests on "The Continental" at leading ballrooms, George and Keith also worked out another interesting animation on "Divorcee" by having Astaire and Rogers doing the dance in the lobby, movable display worked by small motor.

De Petro Goes After Kid Patronage on "Mrs. Wiggs"

Philip De Petro, manager and Harry Goldberg, assistant at the Modern Theatre, Boston, Mass., centered most of their "Mrs. Wiggs" campaign around the schools and children patronage angle. Parent Teachers magazine which had endorsed the picture was contacted for a message to theatregoers. They replied with wire which was blown up and used in lobby and from which midget telegrams were reproduced and delivered house to house by messenger boys.

Letter received from Chairman of the Boston School Committee endorsing picture was blown up and used in front of theatre. De Petro sent complimentary tickets to principals of schools for distribution among teachers and radio announcements were made during run.

Heralds were placed in hotel key boxes, Liberty boys delivered cards with magazines and librarians cooperated by pushing picture.

Bridgeport Sponsors Premiere of 'Barnum'

Bridgeport, Conn., the home of P. T. Barnum, was obviously the spot to launch the world premiere of "The Mighty Barnum" and at the Majestic Theatre, supervised by division head Harry Shaw, Erle Wright, circuit publicity chief worked with Managers Morris Rosenthal, Matt Saunders, Sam Badamo, W. Phelps and Joe Flynn to put over a worthy advance.

One of the toppers in the campaign was the personal appearance of Adolphe Menjou, who played an important part in the production. Guest at a special luncheon at the Barnum Hotel, Menjou was welcomed with banners on the streets, theatre and hotel, and held a reception at the depot.

Every possible spot in town and drawing area was papered, store windows carried gummed snipes, circus heralds were distributed at schools and giant flood lights on top of building opposite theatre lit up front effectively. Heralds were given out from Cardiff Giant street bally truck, photo of which was run last week, and seven-foot sandwich man brought further attention to the gag.

Coast-to-Coast Broadcast Featured

Outstanding was broadcast from Barnum Museum on opening day, with long street parade in advance. Included in the march were a number of old timers who were with the Barnum show at one time or another. Steam calliope contributed proper circus atmosphere, and numerous circus acts carried out the idea further. Ushers and usherettes from all Loew houses marched in costume.

The broadcast reported to have received coast-to-coast coverage included talks by Menjou, Mayor MacLevy, the well known circus publicist, Dexter Fellowes, Vera Teasdale and Harry Shaw. Featured also was presentation of a scroll with names of stars by Menjou to the Mayor, miniatures of which were distributed after parade.

The lobby was in character with effective circus dressing, barker attired as ring master, etc., etc. Orchestra played circus tunes in lobby before the show, flares were burnt atop marquee, and in addition to other gags special p. a. was used to introduce celebrities. Invitation to the opening took the form of gold-coated cards illustrated by photo of the original P. T. himself.

Commendable was the amount of free publicity reported to have been run in the local press, the total said to be nearly 4,000 inches. Included in this was a special eight page co-op ad section and a front page smash showing Menjou starting newspaper presses.

Critic Interviews Grace Moore Over Telephone

An advance screening of "One Night of Love" for a selected list including critics was held by Don Nichols, Broadway, Charlotte, N. C., and through arrangements made with Columbia, Grace Moore in New York was interviewed over the 'phone by the Charlotte Observer critic. Photo of interviewer talking to Miss Moore was taken and used in paper.

Several merchants came through with attractive window displays, Grace Moore sundaes were featured and music stores plugged song hits.

NEW AWARDS ANNOUNCED FOR 1935; JUDGES NAMED

Rules . . .

A QUIGLEY AWARD, to be known as a "Quigley Silver", will be presented each month during 1935 for the campaign selected as best by the Judges from all those submitted to Managers' Round Table Club on pictures played between the first and last days of that month. . . .

A QUIGLEY AWARD, to be known as a "Quigley Bronze", will be presented each month during 1935 for the campaign selected as second best by the Judges from all those submitted to Managers' Round Table Club on pictures played between the first and last days of that month. . . .

THE QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD will be presented at the end of 1935 to the theatreman submitting, in the opinion of the Judges, the most meritorious campaign on any picture played between January 1 and December 31, 1935. . . .

THEATREMEN everywhere in the world are eligible. Campaigns may be on domestic or foreign product from major or independent producers. Entries from foreign lands are especially invited and will be accepted for consideration during the month they are received. . . .

VISUAL EVIDENCE must accompany every entry, such as tear sheets, photos, heralds, etc., etc. This ruling must be obeyed. . . .

EQUAL CONSIDERATION will be given every campaign. Theatremen with small budgets will receive the same break. Remember—"it's what you do, not how much you spend."

CAMPAIGNS should be forwarded as soon as possible. They may be mailed after the last day of the month on pictures that have played during the month. This includes attractions played on last days of month and first days of following. . . .

Two Grand Awards To Be Given at End of Year; Silver and Bronze Plaques for Monthly Winners; New Judges Include Exhibitors from Out-of-Town

by A-MIKE VOGEL

With a crescendo of enthusiastic praise from all over the industry, the Martin Quigley Awards sweep into 1935, as theatremen in every part of the world gird themselves for a bigger and better struggle in the second year of this unique and noteworthy showman's competition. Comment from the home offices and field is noted on next two pages. More of these next week.

No doubt of great interest to participants in this year's Quigley project is that the number of Awards is to be doubled. There will be a Second Grand Award in addition to the Grand Award given at the end of the year. There will be two plaques awarded each month — a silver and a bronze, for the first and second best campaigns received each month, respectively.

And sheepskins to the runners-up, the recipients of the First and Honorable Mentions. Incidentally, in the second year of the Awards, the number of the latter will be restricted to a lesser number than usually has been given.

The decision to change the new year's Awards was reached after careful examination disclosed that quite a number of 1934's winners had finished first by the shortest of margins. It was decided then to recognize the second man in a satisfactory manner, and a bronze plaque was chosen for the runner-up prize.

By the same process of reasoning, the first and second campaigns of the year will be similarly honored. Thus the number of yearly and monthly Awards is increased. At the same time it is felt that restricting the Honorable Mentions will make these even more desirable and of greater significance than they were in the past.

New Judges Are Added

In addition to many of the industry executives who served last year and have consented again to pass upon the various campaigns, a number of exhibitor-executives from out of town have been invited to act upon the Judging Committee if and when they are in New York during the judging periods. The desire to make the list as representative as possible prompted this extension, and every effort will be made to have these gentlemen serve during 1935.

The rules for the most part remain the same. The regulations are simple and aimed to attract the attention of showmen in every part of the world. Independent theatremen as well as the circuit managers are cordially invited to again enter the lists.

INDUSTRY UNANIMOUSLY ENDORSES

CARTER BARRON
Division Manager,
Loew's Eastern Zone, Washington, D. C.

If and when I am in New York, I shall be glad to serve on your board of judges. Many thanks for the compliment.

At the inception of the Quigley Award I envisioned it would provide a healthy incentive to showmen and result in true showmanship. I somehow feel that this early optimism, which was evidently shared by everyone acquainted with your project, has now become a reality. I sincerely feel that through this stimulus of the Quigley Award, 1935 will bring about a harvest crop of aggressive showmen.

Your decision to continue the Quigley Awards during 1935 is commendable.

It is an excellent stimulus for the industry in general as the manager in return for the effort expended receives the recognition he desires and the theatre benefits by his efforts.

MORT BLUMENSTOCK
Advertising & Publicity Director,
Warner Brothers Theatres

Will be very happy to serve as a Judge on the 1935 Committee for the Quigley Awards.

You may say I believe the Quigley Awards should be continued by your paper for another year and encouraged by everyone in the industry in order to give us all a chance to see who are the real showmen in this business.

H. D. BUCKLEY
Vice President - General Manager,
United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.

I will be very happy to again serve as a Judge (this time as a member of the 1935 Committee) in connection with the Quigley Awards for the most meritorious exploitation campaigns submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club.

In my opinion, the Motion Picture Herald has been doing an excellent job in presenting these Awards as they stimulate competition and effort among publicity and advertising men, and the result is reflected in better campaigns. . . .

AWARDS ENCOURAGE "FORGOTTEN MAN"

"The Quigley Awards serve three highly useful purposes. They encourage unusual and intensive exploitation campaigns; they bring credit and encouragement to that 'Forgotten Man,' the theatre manager; and they serve as a guide and incentive to other managers.

"I am honored and pleased to again serve on your Committee of Judges."

Arthur L. Mayer
Managing Director,

LOUIS CHARNINSKY
Manager, Capitol Theatre,
Dallas, Texas

You can tell the world that I think the Quigley Awards are the greatest thing that has ever happened in show business. It makes me work much harder. Although I have not been fortunate enough to win one, I'll keep trying in 1935 to get one. I am glad indeed to hear that you are going to continue same.

BEN M. COHEN
Manager, College Theatre,
New Haven, Conn.

You hit the showman's Bull's Eye when you started the Quigley Awards! It is excellent as an exchange of ideas and adds impetus to the individual campaigns.

I used the Quigley Awards as part of an argument for a couple of tieups. Can you just hear me saying: "Mr. Brown, you would like to see me win one of the Quigley Awards, wouldn't you? Well, let's go!"

Good luck and long live the Quigley Awards.

W. H. DECKER
Manager, Cambria Theatre,
Johnstown, Pa.

It certainly is good news to hear that the Quigley Awards will continue through 1935. Having been a participant in the Competitions, I wish to advise that I will be in their next session to try to knock off a few more. I think it is a great thing for the managers, inasmuch as it throws the spotlight on their efforts.

WALTER F. DAVIS
Manager, Orpheum Theatre,
Fort William, Canada

. . . I do not know of anything more inspiring to a theatre manager than receiving a Quigley Award. It is a goal that every manager should strive to attain, and twelve a year should be liberal enough to give every manager a chance. It lends itself to the highest commendable way in presentation of same.

HARRY DAVID
General Manager,
L. Marcus Theatres, Salt Lake City, Utah

. . . Naturally, we are very pleased to have our managers mentioned in connection with Quigley Awards, as it has a twofold purpose of creating energy and enthusiasm and consequent better results for our theatres, particularly when the Awards are accomplished by our younger managers.

Anything that stimulates managers is conducive to better results in our theatres, and I am heartily in accord with your procedure. It is with deep gratification that I find our managers are repeatedly receiving mention.

NED E. DEPINET
President
RKO Distributing Corporation

I shall be very glad indeed to serve on the 1935 Committee of Judges for the Quigley exploitation awards.

I have followed the progress of your monthly contests with considerable interest and I really think that they have stirred up the ambition of quite a number of managers and advertising men, resulting in a finer type of showmanship which is of great benefit to their theatres and to the industry in general. . .

I hope that from month to month you will find more and more exhibitors who will enter the competitions for the Quigley Awards. They constitute a high degree of trade paper service.

S. CHARLES EINFELD
Advertising and Publicity Director,
Warner Brothers Pictures

I shall be glad to serve again on the Committee of Judges on exploitation campaigns.

I think the idea of the Quigley Awards has been a great success and that the scheme is of value to all concerned. Certainly it supplies a wonderful incentive to men in the field; it has already opened the doors of promotion to some of them, and I am sure that departmental executives are keeping an interested eye on the men whose work wins the approval of the Committee.

JOSEPH A. DI PESA
Publicity Director,
State and Orpheum, Boston, Mass.

Personally, I am very happy to learn that the Award project is to be continued during 1935. While I confess I have been delinquent in my participation, you may rest assured that for the future you'll hear from us quite regularly. Competitive Awards of this nature have a decidedly stimulating effect on our efforts, which in turn keeps us digging all the time, not forgetting that one must keep alive and going to succeed in our business.

SECOND YEAR OF QUIGLEY AWARDS

HAROLD W. EVENS
Manager, State Theatre,
St. Louis, Mo.

The Quigley Awards are performing a great service in raising the standards of theatre advertising and exploitation, and I am very happy to note that you are to continue the undertaking in 1935.

EDWARD M. FAY
Fay's Theatres,
Providence, R. I.

. . . In reviewing the achievements of the Managers' Round Table Club, I believe it to be a public forum for the exchange of thought exceedingly helpful to the industry.

Your Club is a pioneer in developing original promotion and it is a pleasure to cooperate with you in accepting a place on the board of the Quigley Awards.

JOHN J. FRIEDL
Division Manager,
Minnesota Amusement Co.

As the first year of the Quigley Awards is drawing to a close and the constructiveness of this idea has been definitely proven, I would like to compliment the Managers' Round Table Club and yourself as Chairman, on the splendid results.

Through your efforts, theatre managers everywhere have been given an opportunity to get international recognition for their merchandising efforts. Non-winning managers have profited through the exchange of ideas. It certainly must be a source of gratification to you that through the Quigley Awards you and your Section have aided the advancement in this business of many deserving managers.

Count on me to serve on your Judges' Committee of the Quigley Awards.

EDWARD FINNEY
Advertising and Publicity Director,
Monogram Pictures Corporation

I shall be delighted to serve as judge this coming year on the Committee of Judges for the Quigley Awards.

Personally, I think this is one of the most constructive moves made in motion picture trade journalism for some time. It helps make the entire industry showmanship conscious, which is the best thing that can happen to the film business. . . .

W. A. FINNEY
Divsion Manager, Loew's Theatres,
Columbus, Ohio

Will be very glad to serve as a Judge any time that you may want me, providing I am in New York during one of the judging periods. I think that your Quigley Award idea each month is a splendid thing and should be of great value.

AMAZED ANY MANAGER PASSES UP PUBLICITY

"The writer will be happy to accept your invitation to act as a judge in the Quigley Awards for 1935. . . . It is amazing that so many good managers can see and execute ticket selling ideas for either a screen personality or story yet fail to realize the importance of publicity for themselves.

"When a manager fails to take advantage of the opportunity given him . . . in the Quigley Awards Contest, he definitely dissipates an asset of inestimable value to himself."

J. J. Fitzgibbons
General Manager,
F. P. Canadian Circuit

W. R. FERGUSON
Exploitation Director,
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

The writer will be glad to have his name included among the judges on the Quigley Awards Committee during the year of 1935.

This new idea inaugurated by Motion Picture Herald under your guidance has proven a great boon to theatre promotion and has been very helpful to the producers and home office executive personnel. . . .

JOSEPH FELDMAN
Managing Director, Earle Theatre,
Philadelphia, Pa.

I have read with great interest the advertising and exploitation made possible by the Quigley Awards during the past year, and the continuance of these Awards I am sure will be of great benefit to all concerned. I will, from time to time, be very happy to contribute some of our ideas for your columns.

E. M. HART
City Manager, Reade Theatres
Plainfield, N. J.

I think the Quigley Award project has done a lot of good in several directions and I certainly do believe it would be a good thing for all concerned to continue same throughout 1935. It has recognized the efficient work and exploitation of the men in the field whose efforts might otherwise have been un-noticed. . . .

In my own individual situation, I found that every employee in my department was pepped up during the campaign for Quigley Awards to such an extent that they were competing with each other in furnishing ideas that would help win the Award and it made all of the employees "efficiently conscious" and made their jobs more important, and their enthusiasm continued to hold forth during the season which helped increase our grosses. . . .

JAMES R. GRAINGER
General Manager of Distribution,
Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

I, of course, will be very happy to cooperate with the Quigley Publications on anything at all where I can be of help. Very happy to know that four of the monthly winners have been promoted to better positions. . . .

ROBERT M. GILLHAM
Advertising and Publicity Director,
Paramount Pictures Distributing Corp.

I will be very glad to act in the capacity of Judge for the 1935 Quigley Awards.

HAL HORNE
Advertising and Publicity Director
United Artists Corporation

I consider it a real privilege to be able to serve as a member of the 1935 Committee of Judges for the Quigley Exploitation Awards, which I consider the best stimulant of showmanship that this industry has seen in a long time.

LEO HENDERSON
Manager, Idaho Theatre,
Twin Falls, Idaho

I am indeed glad to hear that the Quigley Awards are to be continued next year. These Award Competitions are, to my mind, the finest and most sporting stimulus for old fashioned showmanship that anyone could conceive.

I have heard and read many times that "showmen were born, not made." This may be true, but intense training never hurt an athlete and with each Competition the manager finds it easier to think out and plan new and different campaigns. At least they may be new and different for the showman's particular locality. This mental exercise, if nothing else, is to be desired by every enterprising manager. And believe me, no Quigley Award has ever been won without strenuous mental gymnastics. . . .

Vice President,
Paramount International Corporation

I appreciate your invitation to have my name listed on the Committee of Judges for 1935 in connection with the Quigley Awards. The invitation is accepted with very real pleasure.

I have watched with great interest the manner in which you have carried the gospel of exploitation far and wide throughout the world, because not only does Motion Picture Herald reach this country, but it goes wherever live exhibitors are found. Moreover, it is the very nature of exploitation which serves to make these exhibitors infuse the breath of reality into the pictures which they have exploited and presented.

Musical Geography Contest Sells "Rhythm"

Cooperating with his newspaper and a market, Ed Prinsen, Palace Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, put on a Joe Penner Musical Geography contest and gave away 25 live ducks. Contestants were supposed to select a well known song the title adapted to designate some spot such as "Tramp, tramp, tramp Du Bois are Marching," Du Bois being the name of the town.

For his lobby display (see photo) Ed displayed the Penner pets with details on entering the contest.

Simons Uses Illusion Gag to Plug Pictures

As part of his teaser campaign on "Painted Veil," Jack Simons, Poli Theatre, Hartford, Conn., used a spigot hanging mid-air from which water ran (see photo). On each side of effect was column painted black, with question mark and copy "this water illusion may mystify you, but there's no mystery about the fact that Garbo will appear, etc, etc."

Following week Jack used the same gag, substituting a wine keg spigot with red ink used instead of water. Copy this time read "in Greek mythology the choicest wines were set aside for the Gods, 'White Parade' is the choicest picture of the year and is set aside for your supreme pleasure, etc."

Interesting Chatter

Gene Curtis, in charge of Sales Promotion, Famous Players-Canadian gets out a mimeographed bulletin containing lots of smart, late chatter from the studios on coming attractions, what the stars are wearing and doing, etc. The stuff goes out to all managers and is very useful in newspaper columns and radio programs where facilities for obtaining this information are limited.

Gates Stages Hunt For Kids on "Treasure Isle"

A treasure hunt for children was put on by Arnold Gates at the Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, for "Treasure Island," merchants donating prizes and kids starting from theatre with pirate hat, whistle and noisemaker. Costumed girls in lobby passed out glassine imprinted bags with "treasure" cake enclosed.

Arnold also planted treasure chest with a "look inside" copy, pasted on bottom being title and playdates.

Morrison Has Kids Eat Cereal in Front of House

Mel Morrison, Strand, Dover, N. H., doesn't tell us who cooked the cereal for him, but he staged a Quaker Oats eating contest in front of his theatre on Saturday morning before opening of "6 Day Bike Rider" with the idea that the kid who could eat one half pint of cooked oatmeal in the speediest time and next five, received money and passes as prizes. All kids had their hands tied behind them and a stop watch was used to determine winners. (Editor's note: Be sure to hold this contest outside the theatre.)

Drawing contest was held in public schools, photo of six foot postcard addressed to the Mayor, held by Joe Brown (see photo) and purported to have been signed by him was used as Mel's lobby display. Merchant bought ten tickets which were pasted on bottoms of Oats packages, planting sign in window reading "buy a package of Quaker Oats and win free ticket to see Joe Brown in "6 Day Bike Rider."

Memphis Hotel Stages "Sweet Adeline" Ball

Five page one breaks on successive days resulted from tieup engineered by Warner Southern division director Colonel Howard Waugh and Manager Bill Hendricks, Warner-Memphis with hotel and paper on "Sweet Adeline" Charity Ball, as advance for the picture.

All proceeds from the cover charge were donated to local Christmas Fund. Promoted prizes were offered for most novel costumes and for best quartet singing "Sweet Adeline." Musical hits of the gay nineties were played and two dance studios contributed talent.

Hurwitz Dresses Ushers as Pirates for "Treasure Isle"

One week prior for the "Treasure Island" date at the Rialto Theatre in Brockton, Mass., Alec H. Hurwitz, assistant, had the ushers dressed as pirates (see photo) for his street bally. Professional makeup artist did the job and the men, wearing bandanas, with theatre copy, attended football games and toured busy thoroughfares.

Gauntlett Invites PTA To Special Screening

In response to a request from the PTA of Seattle, Wash., to theatres for pictures suitable for children patronage, Vic Gauntlett, advertising director of the Evergreen State Theatres, engineered a holiday season tieup with that Association that promoted much goodwill. "Babes in Toyland" was booked into the Paramount and "Bright Eyes" at the Fifth Avenue.

All PTA groups and school teachers in Seattle were advised of bookings and invited to special preview of both films held one morning. Stunt proved so successful, Vic plans pulling the same thing at all school holiday seasons.

Scott Ties Newspaper On "Queen" Vote Idea

Recently terminated and reported successful was Boyd F. Scott's "Football Queen" contest at the Palace-Crane, Texas, a voting idea that ran for five weeks in conjunction with the local daily. Votes were given for every year's subscription to the paper, for each $5 display ad, for each individual admission to the Palace and for each coupon book of admissions.

Paper carried page one stories daily with standing of contestants, and also ran free display ads. Loving cup was first prize, presented from stage of theatre, second prize was block of 20 tickets, third, ten tickets. Cost of cup was split and paper printed vote coupons at half price. Boyd says it helped, and paper was willing to cooperate for the extra advertising and subscriptions. High school girls were eligible.

Reid Treats Patrons To Cake at Midnite Show

Local baker bannered delivery trucks and wagons for Ken Reid, Loew's Theatre, Canton, Ohio, on "College Rhythm" copy reading "All American spice cake, as spicy as College Rhythm." Cake on display in lobby was cut and served to patrons at Saturday night midnight show.

Accompanying photo shows five and ten set piece display of Penner with his duck. Soda fountain mirrors were lettered ten days prior and music department plugged tunes. Contest was held over air to determine best proxies to impersonate Penner and Ross. Auditions were held at studio and passes given as awards. Retail merchants held Christmas parade and Reid's sandwich man joined in the march and grabbed a position directly behind Santa.

Stoflet Stages "6 Day Bike Race" in Window

Harlan, Ky., sure knew about the "6 Day Bike Rider" when C. R. Stoflet of the Margie Grand played it, because $100 cash prize and gifts were awarded to a town boy who rode a stationary bike for six days in the store window of a furniture shop. (See photo.) Prizes were presented on stage and boy told of his experience. After completing his 144-hour pedaling, the chap used one of the beds in the window and with no further ado took a well-earned sleep for himself in view of interested spectators.

Same furniture store offered a bedroom set to person holding lucky number and presentation was made on stage with attendant publicity.

An Auction Stunt

Good returns are reported from L. J. Dandeneau, of the Park-Rockland, Me., on an auction gag wherein local market gives coupons called "bucks" with every purchase. On a given date, auction is held on stage between evening shows for prizes donated by merchants, "bucks" used as a medium for the bidding. Market takes advertising and distributes heralds to plug the stunt.

Commerce Chamber Plugs Return of Vaudeville

Wholehearted cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce distinguished the campaign for the return of vaudeville put on some time ago by Manager Larry Lehman and ad head Louis Mayer, at the RKO Mainstreet, Kansas City, Mo. President of the Chamber wrote to all members enclosing samples of stickers and inserts to be used in all outgoing letters and on packages. Members were asked to fill in self-addressed cards checking amount of each they intended using. Letter further endorsed project soliciting assistance in every possible manner.

Outside tieups were numerous and effective, such as passing out of promoted gum on downtown corners, copy reading—"Buy Gum! Vaudeville returns to the, etc." Hookins were made with cigarette chains, cosmetic stores and drug stores, and many prominent windows landed. Slugs were also supplied to downtown merchants for inclusion in ads.

Area around theatre was sniped with colored lights and arrows pointing on lamp posts, parking stations displayed shields, and Legion band played before theatre at opening, put on with all the fixin's of a premiere. Boy Scout parade was also put on, team of male singer and girl accordion accompanist made hotels, night clubs and lunch spots, and Western Union helped work the giant telegram gag, messengers carrying greetings through the street from Mayor to Lehman.

Army Tank Leads Parade On Sponsored Showing

Tying with the local chapter of Sons of the American Legion, Manager Oscar L. Gray, Academy and Colonial Theatres, Hagerstown, Md., staged a parade headed by decorated army tank (see photo) on "Birth of A New America" at the Colonial in that spot. Bugle and drum corps also marched as did delegation from local Order of Moose. Junior Legionaires received cut on ticket sales for participation.

Out of the ordinary were the ceremonies attendant upon the reopening recently of the Academy wherein local National Guard units took charge of the event with flag raising and 21-gun salute. Among other details reported by this member was a stunt on "One More River" in which a Santa-clad figure handed out cards with copy—"So many days until Xmas, but you can see, etc., etc."

Girl in Lobby Plugs "Loves Me" Hit Tunes

St. Louisans had first hand opportunity to learn words of "She Loves Me Not" hit tunes on stunt planted by Al Zimbalist, who promoted records played over p. a. with girl in lobby, dressed collegiate pointing to blackboard on which were words of the tunes.

Postal Telegraph cooperated for free wire give-aways and telegraph sets in lobby with girl taking messages. Bing Crosby shirt windows carried picture and playdate copy.

Rotsky Held Parades Nightly for "Agent"

Holding parades every night during the run was one of the stunts George Rotsky, Palace, Montreal, put over for "British Agent." Canadian Army Medical Corps, French Regiment, Engineers, Black Watch, etc., marched to theatre on different nights (see photo).

Because plot of picture was laid in Russia, George used this angle with special one sheet to sell Jewish patrons. Ciggie manufacturer tied up with theatre for broadcast and talent was secured gratis to put on radio dramatization. Department store featured studio styles and advertised Kay Francis in window display.

"Don Juan" Set Sketches Exhibited at Galleries

Distinguishing the New York showing of "Don Juan" at the Rivoli, was a special showing of the etchings from the drawings of the picture's sets at a prominent gallery. The exhibit was covered by art critics and editors and announcement cards including picture credits were mailed to patrons.

Special drive was made for the metropolitan Spanish colony with language one-sheets and cards planted in all clubs and societies. Letters also were mailed to members by individual secretaries. Other leading Spanish tieups included serialization in "La Prensa" a week ahead.

Numerous co-op ads were obtained on radios, furniture and men's clothes. Commendable additionally was radio contest with stills of Fairbanks and passes given to those sending in best answers to question—"Why I would like to see, etc., etc."

IN DEFENSE OF PRESS BOOKS

Monogram Advertising Executive Believes Press Books Today Are Useful and Serve Their Purpose

by EDWARD FINNEY

Director of Advertising and Publicity

In answer to the article appearing in your paper on press books, complaining about their value as practical showmanship aids, I should like to make the following comment:

Press Books Have Definite Value.

While there is some justification in the criticism of the material to be found in press books, I think for the most part they are decidedly helpful. I know from my own experience showmen who have used the ideas given in the press books and actually seen that they were put into effect in accordance with press book instructions have had very successful engagements on the pictures in question.

On the other hand, showmen who neglected to take advantage of these tie-ups or did not follow through properly in some cases did mediocre or bad business on the same pictures despite identical situations as to locality, playing time and type of audience.

I note that the manager who wrote the HERALD article said that there were some stunts carried in the press books which were beneficial. I think, however that he is being rather patronizing because I would say there is much more good material than bad in press books generally. In the large majority of press books there is enough constructive material to insure a first rate campaign.

Says Theatres Adapt Ads

What he says about ads not being adapted for every need is true. However, in going the rounds, I have yet to find a theatre that was not able to fit the material in the press books to local use.

Theatre art departments I have contacted take reproductions of the ads in the press books, paste them up in new arrangements with perhaps a little art work of their own to achieve a decorative and unified effect. Thus they are able to advertise the picture singly or on a double feature bill without any particular trouble and solely for the cost of a new line plate. This is possible, as the illustrations to be reproduced are already in coarse screen and made to be copied in a line cut.

Smaller Houses Can Use Stereos

In the case of the smaller theatres that feel they cannot go to the expense of making up these line plates, it is a simple matter for them to have stereos struck, the illustration they wish to use cut away from the rest of the ad, and their own type set up locally by the newspaper for their display.

In connection with the ads, I should like to say that while in some cases copy does run against a halftone background or other illustration, still there are a great percentage of cases where the copy is entirely divorced from the illustration. I know wherever possible we try to maintain this separation to make the ad of greater utility to all types of showmen.

Insofar as billboards are concerned, I think the majority of one, three, six and twenty-four sheet displays to be seen in front of picture theatres are one hundred per cent better than they have ever been. For the most part, they concentrate on one major box-office point, and, in general, do not result in the hodge-podge suggested. Look at the paper on "Broadway Bill," "Don Juan," "A Girl of the Limberlost," "Belle of the Nineties" or, for that matter, most of the MGM, Paramount and United Artists paper. I have looked over many press books and believe that the majority of poster layouts are very effective when displayed on the theatre walls.

Of course there is room for improvement, but I think as the press sheets stand now they are useful and practical and serve the purpose quite adequately.

Prof. Phelps Plugs "Barretts" for Walsh

That internationally known educator, William Lyon Phelps, of Yale, said to be the greatest living authority on the Brownings, wrote a personal endorsement on "Barretts" which Dave Walsh used for his campaign at the Paramount, North Adams, Mass. Local paper ran letter on theatre page, and letter was read in English classes at colleges and normal schools, teachers urging pupils to attend showing.

Open forums were also held by girl students in which picture was discussed, put on the play for student body and nearby C C C camps, these activities covered by local paper. Bookmarks were distributed at schools and libraries, stills and theatre cards also being carried on bulletin boards.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

Still UNIQUE

WHEN it was introduced in 1931, Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative was definitely a "new and different" product. And there is still no other film like it...no other has wrought comparable changes in motion picture procedure, or contributed as much to motion picture quality. It is only natural that this Eastman film should be unique, also, in the enthusiasm which it continues to arouse among cameramen and producers. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

HE'S FUNNY THAT WAY!

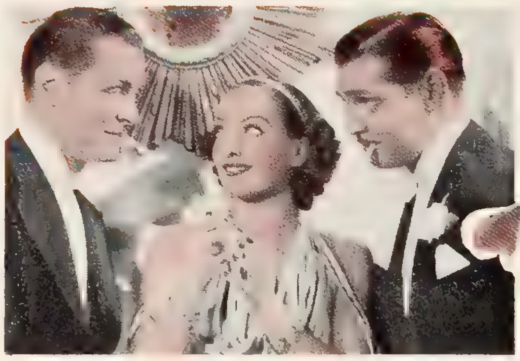
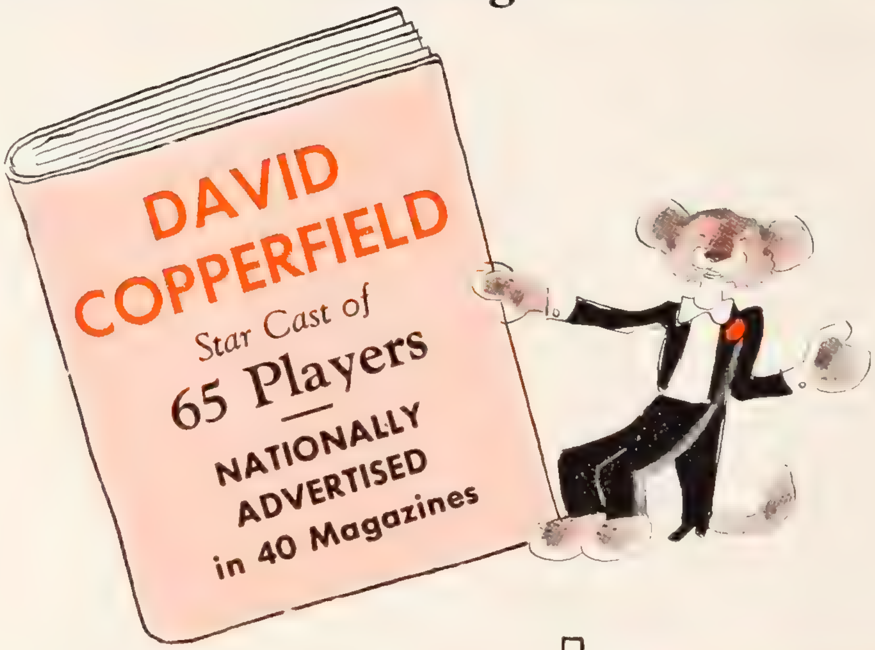
Just when the industry's all ga-ga about Leo's record-breaking hit, CRAWFORD, GABLE, MONTGOMERY in "Forsaking All Others"—





DAVID COPPERFIELD
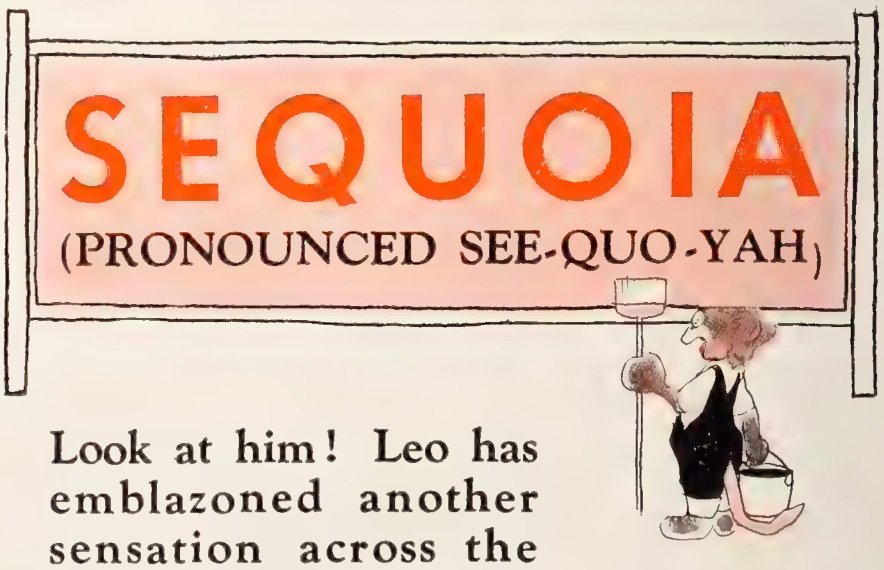
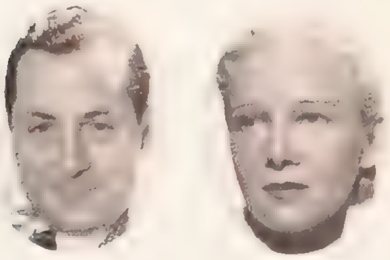
65 Players
NATIONALLY ADVERTISED
in 40 Magazines

—Leo drags out another BIG ATTRACTION that has the industry on its ear—and before you know it—



SEQUOIA
(PRONOUNCED SEE-QUO-YAH)

He goes on and on—



"Bless you my children." Leo remembers "When Ladies Meet" so he unites ANN HARDING and BOB MONTGOMERY again in the swell comedy "Biography of A Bachelor Girl."

Look at him! Leo has emblazoned another sensation across the nation, "Sequoia" a picture more remarkable even than "Trader Horn"—and then just when you think he can't keep it up, along comes

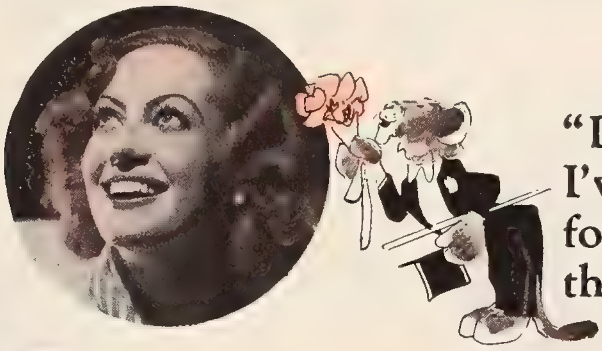
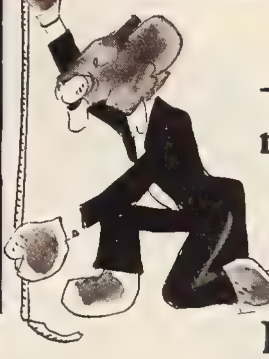
BANG! Leo knows just how to time the Big Shots. WALLACE BEERY in "West Point of the Air" is his biggest hit since "Hell Divers" and it's just as SPECTACULAR! But Leo's funny that way, he goes merrily on with—



"Dear JOAN CRAWFORD, I've never had a better vehicle for you than 'No More Ladies' the great stage romance"—



—and what's Leo up to now? He's measuring CLARK GABLE. Sure, Clark is the BIGGEST MALE STAR in pictures. His next, with CONNIE BENNETT is "After Office Hours."

No, Leo's not tired yet...He's watching a scene between JEAN HARLOW BILL POWELL in "Reckless" Franchot Tone and May Robson are in it too!

—And Leo is betting that the MARX BROTHERS in "A Night at the Opera" will be their most successful comedy!

Excuse Leo for walking out, but HELEN HAYES and BOB MONTGOMERY want privacy for that scene in "Vanessa—Her Love Story." Leo can't even wait to tell you about RAMON NOVARRO, EVELYN LAYE in "The Night is Young", and a flock of others. Leo's prize packages never come singly. He's funny that way!

"What do you mean — hornin' in when I'm talking to a lady? It makes me sick even to look at you. I found out what I want and I'm takin' it. I'm movin' up. From now on, if you know what's good for you, stay outta this place and stay away from me."

"Listen—you! I made you rich. I put those swell clothes on your back. Now — just because you got your neck washed, you think you're a gentleman. Nobody can make you that . . . You're riff-raff . . . So am I! You belong with me . . . and you'll stay with me!"

TREATING OF ADULTERY

INTELLIGENT and showmanlike dealing with the "Decency Movement" is exemplified in a bit of literature broadcast by the Fox California theatres in Fresno, Stockton and other cities of the region, presenting a quotation from a review of "Painted Veil" by America, a Catholic weekly. In part the quoted review said:

> . . . "Painted Veil," starring Greta Garbo, is a picture based on a wife's adultery. It is a film done with intelligence and taste. It has beauty not marred by the slightest touch of salaciousness. . . . To any audience it will drive home the truth that adultery is a cruel, unlovely, bitter and shameful thing. America is not content to merely say that "Painted Veil" is unobjectionable. It recommends the film as splendid. . . .

You might read that to the crying critics who allege that the Legion of Decency movement is demanding that the screen present nothing but sweetness and light.

THE motor car critics are doing their big annual reviewing job on the new productions from the Detroit transportation studios. Their unanimous chorus of approbation for all cars and all car makers and the neatly attuned ratios of editorial and advertising space in the newspapers all tend to remind us of how the motion picture fares in the same papers.

PENNY VAUDEVILLE

THE spectacle which the newspaper and newsreel photographers are making of the Lindbergh-Hauptmann case in the century old courthouse at Flemington in New Jersey makes one wonder how soon the cause of Justice will require the attendance of make-up artists and hairdressers on all trial sets. Currently it is reported, but not published, that a diligent New York newspaper is paying for the Hauptmann defense, as a piece of promotional showmanship shortly to be brought to flower in an "exclusive and authorized" story of the defendant's life, serialized and wagon sheeted. It's penny vaudeville.

"BET ON WRONG MONKEY"

"WE need a biological new deal," bitterly observed Professor Ernest A. Hooton of Harvard to the American Anthropological Association. "Intelligent artificial selection should replace natural selection. . . . The social engine has stalled . . . there is the possibility that some one has watered the gasoline."

The question of what is the matter used to bother us, too. But we scientifically consulted a scientific consultant, our favorite authority on radio, sound and kindred maladies, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, who is himself a reformed professor.

"The problems of the race," profoundly propounded the eminent and suave Dr. Goldsmith in his most doctorial manner, "are never to be solved, but may be simply stated—the fact is that in considering the evolutionary plan the Creator bet on the wrong monkey."

NOTHING BUT THE STORY

AFTER some two years of labours and travail Paramount has brought to the screen a production of curious interest and high promise under the title of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

The picture has achieved certain qualities of special merit in the face of opportunities and temptations to go wrong of a character which Hollywood has rarely resisted.

With all due respect for the writing of Major Yeats-Brown, the author of the book, it has supplied for this picture little more than locale and title. "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" is not a translation of a novel to screen, for there was no story to translate, but it is rather a thrill tale from the hills suggested by the Major's volume.

The story that it was elected to tell is a man's tale, a story of devotion and respect and loyalty, between single men in barracks, with thematic colorations from the stern traditions of the British army and the unwavering cause of empire, with complications contributed by the far submerged relations of father and son. All this is played against the backdrop of the Khyber Pass region of the savage northern border of India.

The election to create such a story by Hollywood in the heat of movie making is surely a repudiation of its record for gilding the banal obvious. And in the telling on the screen the picture has the crisp restraints and salty directness of Rudyard Kipling at his best. In "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" Hollywood has attained a story of the East, with interludes of the cloying splendors of a princely harem without a single close-up of a dancing girl's navel, without a tint or taint of taking the spectator beyond the story into an eye-debauch. Hollywood has done a story which requires that a young man become enthralled by a beautiful woman spy, and finds it possible to tell it without a glimpse or hint of lingerie, boudoir or tall grass.

The result is as poignant a narrative of high strung swift action tragedy drama as the screen is likely to see in a decade—with the remarkable quality of telling one story perhaps beyond the appreciative capacities of the movie millions in the vehicle of another simple enough for the dumbest of the serial consumers.

THIS WEEK - - -

PCA APPROVED

Since July 15, when the Production Code Administration went into action, 299 features and 497 shorts have been approved. Of the total, 255 features, 257 shorts were approved in Hollywood and 44 features, 240 shorts in New York. Twenty-three features, 33 shorts were the December totals on the Coast. . . .

VAUDEVILLE PLAN DELAY

Delay in organizing vaudeville units by the American Federation of Actors, to be sent into towns minus stage shows, last week was laid to inability to negotiate playing terms with exhibitors. Exhibitors seem unwilling to raise admissions, the AFA considering the offer of percentage of gross an insufficient guarantee. Meetings are continuing. . . .

SUNDAY SHOWS

The recent spread of Sunday charity shows in Virginia is seen in Richmond as auguring well for the abolition of the state Sunday blue laws by the legislature this year. The Vermont Exhibitors' Association has gone into action with a statewide campaign for permission to open Sunday evenings, the matter to go to the legislature this month. . . .

AD RATE FIGHT

Following boycott of a month, 16 suburban houses and the Downtown, in Omaha, reached an agreement with, and resumed advertising in the News-Bee, Hearst daily newspaper. The exhibitors claim they have won their fight for a reduction in ad rates similar to that granted by the World-Herald. . . .

CHICAGO SETTLEMENT

Settling the Chicago lease dispute between Balaban & Katz and Jones, Linick & Schaefer, over the McVickers, Loop House, an agreement provides for abandonment by J. L. & S. of a threatened anti-trust suit against B. & K. and Paramount, leasing of the house by Paramount until July 31. B. & K. dropped its lease on the house last year, J. L. & S. reopened it, then claimed an inability to obtain product. . . .

WARNER-BUICK TIEUP

A Warner tieup arrangement with the Buick division of General Motors provides for the "plugging" of Warner films in national Buick advertising. To six of the latest Warner pictures, Buick will devote space in color, single page and spread positions in class and high circulation magazines. Dealer accessories are included.

BOMBING ARRESTS

With ever-alert federal operatives aiding local police, one Herbert E. Logan, Torrington, Conn., actor, was arrested in Boston last week, charged with complicity in the bombing of theatres there, in Lynn and Pawtucket, R. I. Logan is said to have confessed he was offered $250 to fire a Boston theatre. Later Philip R. Van Arsdale, business agent of the operators' union, and John Mongillo, New Haven operator, were arrested, held in bail. . . .

MORE TAXATION

Proposed by a California state legislator, E. V. Latham, is a new tax program, comprising 30 measures to be presented to the convening legislature this month, and including an admission tax on all tickets over 40 cents and a personal income tax of one-third the federal income tax. . . .

NEW THEATRE

In the heart of the Vancouver, Wash., business section, former Mayor John P. Kiggins plans a $155,000 theatre. Seating 800, the building will be started in February. Mr. Kiggins operates another local house. . . .

COLOR INSTRUMENT

Professor Arthur C. Hardy, of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has perfected an instrument, the spectrophotometer, which is said to have potential value in color picture work, making it possible, according to the claim, to define and duplicate any color to an exact degree. It is claimed the device permits completion in several minutes of an operation which ordinarily requires several hours. . . .

RKO IN RADIO TIEUP

RKO Radio has completed a tieup with the International Broadcasting Club to broadcast transcriptions of major RKO films throughout Europe over the club's affiliated stations. A feature of the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the founding of Peru, to be held at Lima, will be two RKO films, "The Gay Divorcee" and the color subject, "La Cucaracha." . . .

OHIO TAX CLARIFIED

Through the efforts of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, exhibitors of the state are now subject to a tax on admissions of three per cent of gross business, payable on or before the tenth of the month following that in which collections are made. This modification of the old 10 per cent tax became effective on January 1. Separate and distinct is the recently enacted Ohio sales tax, effective January 21, and with which Motion Picture Herald confused the modified admissions tax in an item on this page in last week's issue. . . .

RECORD GROSSES

Breaking the existing record of the theatre, scored by Radio's "Little Women," the same company's "Little Minister," with Katharine Hepburn, brought an estimated $110,000 to the New York Music Hall in the film's first week, with 158,265 paid admissions. With $42,300 in the second week of "Anne of Green Gables," the New York Roxy broke a four-year record. . . .

WOULD MAINTAIN TAX

To Salt Lake City friends last week Congressman Samuel B. Hill of the House Ways and Means Committee declared he favors continuance of the theatre tax for another year, estimating business improvement should raise the revenue from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000. . . .

EXHIBITORS AROUSED BY "EXPOSE" OF HOLLYWOOD

And Studios Find That Material They Gave Out for Articles on "The Evolution of the Movie Industry" Is Appearing in News Syndicate Series in Sixty Newspapers As "Hollywood Unvarnished"

Publicity executives at some of the large studios in Hollywood are suffering headaches of remorse in the realization that they have been unwitting accessories to a most amazing "meddling with pictures for profit" on the part of the Register and Tribune newspaper syndicate of Des Moines and some 60 of its franchised metropolitan newspapers in the United States and Canada.

Hollywood's regret lies in the fact that it gave free access to the studios' carefully-guarded files to an emissary of the syndicate for what they understood was to be a forthright history of the screen's development from its earliest days, but what actually is emerging in a very considerable portion of the press of North America as "Hollywood Unvarnished," a sensational and, to the industry as a whole, harmful "expose of the movies and its personalities."

SOME PICTURES ATTEMPT TO MAKE LAUGHING STOCK OF FILM PLAYERS

Assembled and compiled by Vernon Pope, whose triple job is rotogravure, Sunday magazine and dramatic editor of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, and sold to newspapers by the syndicate, "Hollywood Unvarnished" is appearing also under captions of "Hollywood Uncensored" and "Hollywood Unmasked," as a serialized pictorial feature in daily picture pages and Sunday rotogravure sections, in newspapers with a combined circulation running into the millions.

Some of the pictures attempt to make a laughing stock of the motion picture and its people. A sub-caption says the feature is "so named because it tells the truth about the movies." But it isn't truth of a sort that adds prestige to the industry or enhances the goodwill of the screen; nor is it the type that in general sells theatre seats.

Exhibitors in a number of large centers have stormed newspaper offices with protests against the unwarranted destruction of the illusion, glamour and decency of the screen.

BOSTON PAPER DROPS SERIES AS ADVERTISING IS THREATENED

In Boston the exhibitors won their fight only when they took steps to withdraw their advertising. The Journal-Post in Kansas City says exhibitors' objections to the feature are a contributing factor in the advertising rate "war" there, in which major theatres in recent months have reduced their lineage in that paper to a minimum. The Journal-Post, despite the strenuous protest of George Baker, manager of the Publix Newman theatre, is running the complete series.

While some of the newspapers acknowledge that the feature is distasteful to the industry, they justify its publication in the name of the Great God Circulation. The Kansas City Journal-Post, the Des Moines Register and Tribune and others say it is boosting their circulation by the thousands.

Original publication began in the Des Moines Sunday Register on July 8. Latest reports are that 59 metropolitan papers are running "Hollywood Unvarnished." The syndicate will not complete its major selling until some time in February. The same month will see the end of the series in newspapers which started it last summer.

The syndicate is providing a maximum of 500 prints in the series, with corresponding editorial and explanatory comment.

The cost to the newspaper varies according to its circulation. A middlewestern paper with about 85,000 circulation is reported to have bought it for $500 after a larger opposition paper to which it was offered at $1,200 had turned it down at any price. Some are said to have paid as high as $1,500 for the service. Clients are privileged to adapt the feature and make their own selection of pictures.

Though the actual material is not nearly as alluring or novel as the prospectus

HOW THE ARTICLES ARE INTRODUCED

Here are some of the enticing advance phrases with which the Des Moines Register and Tribune Syndicate introduces to newspapers and public the "mysteries" revealed in the series on "Hollywood Unvarnished":

"Amazing skeletons in Hollywood's closet, long hidden";

"Anatomy running riot";

"Pictures which the studios would like to suppress";

"Secrets about movie stars Hollywood won't reveal";

"Pictures that stars would pay thousands of dollars to keep out of circulation";

"The 'lowdown' on the Hollywood divorce situation, why many stars have two, three and four mates";

Trick photography and other trade secrets;

Scenes deleted by the censors of the various states, together wth the reasons therefor;

"The sins, scandals and loves of movie stars";

"What your favorite star looks like off the screen, and how the makeup artists cover her defects";

"Did you know that King Kong was actually only 20 inches in height?"

"Do you know what happens to chorus girls?"

Scenes from French versions, with parallel shots from "tame" domestic versions of the same films;

"How the ingenious movie-makers create the astonishing illusions on the screen";

"How movies are faked."

Among the 59 newspapers publishing the series are:

The Baltimore Sun, Detroit News, Des Moines Register, Kansas City Journal-Post, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Chicago Daily News, Minneapolis Journal.

The series is not appearing in any Pacific Coast newspaper.

Omaha Newspaper Ceases Competition with Theatres

Henry Doorly, publisher of the Omaha World-Herald, this week assured a committee of local exhibitors that he will cease the competition to motion picture theatres which has taken the form of stage attractions imported under the sponsorship of the newspaper.

SHOWMEN URGE SERIES BE DROPPED

promised, from the standpoint of the man who has to sell the shadows on his screen, it is bad enough. This was realized when some of the great "family journals" and "home newspapers" began publishing the series.

And as it progresses, its destructive nature has become increasingly apparent. The rising circulations are being treated to such choice bits as that the late Rudolph Valentino indulged in petty thievery before becoming a star; a picture of Mae West before the bar of justice for her production of an indecent play; "rare" photos exploiting the naked and the vulgar; pictures of nature faking; publicity shots of players before they were raised to stardom, in all manner of undignified, unbecoming and ridiculous poses; disclosures of stars' "fabulous" salaries; that Wallace Beery, "one of the screen's most virile he-men," started his career as "a female impersonator"; the evolution of bathing spectacles; the evolution of the nightie; "the screen's most famous vampires," with the explanation that the new term is "glamorous," as in Garbo; vistas of feminine stars' bedrooms, and a pre-historic shot of Mary Pickford in a bathtub, described as a "Saturday night solo pose."

That nearly all the stills and the sensationally colored incidents revealed in captions are of days long ago was not always mentioned by the syndicate.

The first stills show young Greta Garbo in 1925, "before Hollywood publicity men built her into . . . This Glorious Creature." They have comparative shots of Lucille (Billie) Le Sueur, skirts lifted high above the knees, 10 years ago, and the Joan Crawford of today. She was a bundle wrapper and liked Hollywood parties, the captions say, and "tried to get along on two and three hours sleep a night."

Divorce Statistics Played Up

Gloria Swanson looks awkward in her ancient bathing suit of 1915 and Jean Harlow stands in the next panel in a swim suit considerably less complete.

"There will be new revelations about the movies every Sunday in 'Hollywood Uncensored,'" says an introductory caption, and there have followed in the sub-captions the few marriage-and-divorce statistics which Mr. Pope's newspaper employers could cram into the space available.

Billie Burke, in a "nightie" of 1916, is used to show one extreme of sleeping raiment, and Carole Lombard, dressed for sleep a la 1934, to depict the other. They do not point out that Miss Lombard's photo is not a new one.

Sally Rand, with an armful of dolls, is shown first as "a shy, demure little girl," and then, unclad save for her fan, as "Sally Rand the notorious fan dancer." Ten years ago, according to the captions, she was the "personification of sweetness and innocence." Her fan pose was taken not while she was a film player.

Continuing to tell "the story of the movies . . . its secrets, scandals, tragedies, triumphs and personalities," the compilers of the series obviously went out of their way to inject antiquated spicy touches into the feature.

"For additional sex appeal" in the film's elaborate bath scenes of the DeMille vogue, the industry is charged with draping "several half clad 'slave girls'" around its marble pools.

CALLS FILM STANDARD 98 PER CENT PERFECT

The Legion of Decency movement to raise the standard of motion pictures has been 98 per cent successful, according to the Reverend Wilfrid Parsons, S.J., editor in New York of the Catholic magazine, America, who told the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems, held recently in the Hotel Statler in Buffalo, that the "producers, after agreeing with the Bishops to introduce self-censorship, have kept their word and have succeeded in giving us pictures which are on the whole acceptable morally as well as artistically."

Father Parsons told the delegates that "Joseph I. Breen, the Production Code Administrator in Hollywood, has passed over 200 pictures and we have found that at most three of those are unsatisfactory. That result, more than 98 per cent perfect, is entirely due to the efforts of the Legion of Decency."

An extremely tame love scene of 1909, taken from Biograph's "Miser's Daughter," with King Baggott and Florence Lawrence, shows the pair standing over a rustic gate, while another, with Jean Harlow and Clark Gable seen embracing on a couch, tell how "love making in the movies has changed in 25 years." Gable's "protruding ears," it points out, "several times blocked his path to stardom." Obviously the series in no way gives effect to the improvements made by the industry in improving motion picture and publicity standards during recent months.

In one place the Des Moines Register and Tribune syndicate semi-charitably observes that, "in fairness to the movie industry, it must be said that while 'Hollywood Uncensored' shows 'there is something rotten in Denmark,' it also shows that all Denmark is not rotten."

A scene with Mary Irwin and John E. Rice, supposedly taken from "The Widow Jones," of 1896, is accredited with having introduced "necking" to the screen. For a second comparison with "the type of love making common in pictures today," Claudette Colbert and Fredric March are shown embraced in an old film.

Censor Conflicts Introduced

Other scenes picture well known film folk in stills taken from features which had conflicts with censor boards.

Some typical captions are: "Nana (Anna Sten) the Unchaste Woman"; "A Girl (Louise Brooks) Adjusting Her Garter;" "Nose Thumbing;" "Infamous Passion Dance;" "Girls in Scanty Draperies;" "A Kiss on the Neck Is Censored."

Almost always the stills are used in such a manner as to convey the worst impressions, which are further deepened by the captions.

Dolores Del Rio is acclaimed the "most beautiful star" and Billie Dove "the most beautiful of all time." The series has Samuel Goldwyn, "famed judge of chorus girl beauties," select "the most beautiful chorus girl," and he picks Jane Hamilton. In showing Jean Harlow as the girl in Hollywood with "the best figure," an old still of Jean in a bathing suit is used by the writer.

Some of the "secrets" of Hollywood's better knowns are concentrated in a whole roto section, which shows closeups of Mae West's "double chin and round face," Clark Gable's "protruding ears" (again), Jean Harlow's "pointed nose," Claudette Colbert's "wide nose and high cheekbones," Ruth Chatterton's "tilted nose," and Katharine Hepburn's "wide nostrils, short nose and freckles." A caption says that Norma Shearer is "bowlegged."

The captions add that "beautiful" Constance Bennett "usualy wears her clothes high on her chest, to conceal a too-prominent collar bone," whereas "Janet Gaynor is flat-chested and Sylvia Sidney's chest is very noticeable," as a side photo reveals. Paul Lukas, Conrad Nagel and Jack Holt wear wigs, fans are told.

On the subject of "faked scenes" and trick mechanism there is a picture of the King Kong, "thirty-foot monster" as he really was—20 inches high, and of a "life-sized farm," actually running a few feet on a studio back lot.

Not more than ten per cent of the series can be classified as genuinely historical and biographical without any bid for sensation.

Mr. Pope spent four weeks in Hollywood last spring assembling the material.

Two or three studios—including Paramount and probably Warners—cooperated wholeheartedly; others, particularly Fox and MGM, gave his plans a cool reception. Those which cooperated believed the pictures were to be used for a constructive purpose.

Decency Campaign Factor

A studio executive who at his own request is unnamed believes that the original motive was to prepare a pictorial history but that the opening of the Legion of Decency campaign changed the paper's plans on a basis of reader interest.

Stanley A. Brown, district manager at Des Moines of the Tri-States Theatre Corporation, of which A. H. Blank is president, said Mr. Pope had "explained to me that his organization was anxious to produce a series of articles to be known as 'The Evolution of the Motion Picture Industry,'" and that on this basis he had arranged for introduction to major companies' representatives on the Coast.

Lansing Ray, publisher of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, told exhibitors that when he first contracted for the series, he believed that it as originally presented to him would make St. Louis more motion picture conscious.

Subsequently the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois formally protested against the series.

Theatre owners in Kansas City, Mo., subsequent runs who are members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, were compelled to run a trailer advertising the syndicated feature, which appears in that city in the Journal-Post, due to a revenue-raising contract between the ITO and the newspaper.

None of the pictures in the feature was taken in Hollywood since the industry accepted the platform set down by J. J. McCarthy and the Advertising Advisory Council to raise the standards of stills, publicity and other forms of merchandising. The syndicate did not reveal this fact to its readers.

In contrast to the sensational series, the Kansas City Star announced a policy of cooperation with the industry in not publishing pictorial material that may add fire to the church campaign.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat appears to be doing much to restore the goodwill of the industry in that area, through a new daily feature of its own, known as "Hollywood Today," made up of current stills supplied by exhibitors.

ST. LOUIS GRAND JURY QUIZ BASED ON "FREEZING" FILMS

And Big Business Fears It's Prelude to General Tightening of the Antitrust Law Reins Under the Existing Codes

Hundred in Film Business Subpoenaed to Testify; Department of Justice Action Assured of Roosevelt Support

BULLETIN

The federal grand jury hearing at St. Louis into the operations of distributors terminated unexpectedly late Wednesday and court stenographers were at work on the findings which were to be returned in open court Thursday. The sudden closing of the secret hearing was considered indication that the Department of Justice had sufficient evidence to warrant the voting of indictments. Block booking and film code were understood to have been considered.

The United States Government set out on Monday morning, reputedly with criminal indictments in mind, to determine why independent motion picture theatre owners are unable to obtain from the large, competitive circuit-distributors sufficient product with which to operate their properties.

Specifically, the Department of Justice started in St. Louis the first major antitrust action in seven years through the preliminary procedure of a federal grand jury investigation into the reasons why the independent first-run Ambassador, Missouri, and new Grand Central theatres were allegedly "frozen out," product-wise, by the large distributors.

Of greater significance, however, was the opinion held in Washington that the action really had launched an "anti-monopolistic" campaign, reputedly approved by the President, to convince all American business that the antitrust laws had not been entirely suspended through the liberties granted by the National Industrial Recovery Act. Big business viewed the situation, in private, with much apprehension when it heard that the St. Louis incident was considered by many as the prelude to a general move to "tame down" some large industries allegedly misusing privileges for concerted action as codified industries.

Leaders of motion pictures in New York and along Film Row in St. Louis interrupted normal business to testify in the grand jury room in answer to federal subpoenas, 100 of which were served.

Administration officials would not talk about the St. Louis grand jury investigation, but the Capital expected that if the St. Louis case were successful, similar proceedings would be brought in other industries.

It was learned on good authority that not only had the Department of Justice been assured of the support of President Roosevelt, but that frantic efforts had been made to head off the inquiry, that the matter had been carried to the White House by both representatives of the motion picture industry and the United States attorney-general, where they were told that the President thoroughly approved of the Department's determination to bring prosecutions.

So far as officials of the Department of Justice are concerned, the motion picture case is said to be merely a routine prosecution. That the film industry was singled out as an example is said to be due, not to the fact that the Administration is necessarily more critical of this business, but simply because it afforded the first complaint on which proceedings could be based.

Triple Significance

Whether successful or not, the Government's move is expected to change the viewpoint of industry generally as to freedom from the antitrust laws accorded by the Recovery Act.

The St. Louis case has a triple significance: (1) Showing the nation at large, and industry in particular, that the antitrust laws still are in force; (2) Serving as an important test in the motion picture industry's old controversy over the right claimed by distributors to specify what pictures an exhibitor may buy and which exhibitors may buy them, and (3) Serving also as an answer to the complaints of independent exhibitors as a whole that the NRA's motion picture code did not give them the needed protection.

A spokesman for the Justice Department at Washington explained to the press that the case involved the principle whereby a producer who also owned some theatres would, to increase his profits, "get in cahoots" with others, in a "freezing out" of the independent exhibitors. An independent must conform to the "rules" and take such pictures as were specified for him or lose out, he added.

Noticeably absent from participation in the investigation was the Federal Trade Commission which, with the Department of Justice, has jurisdiction over antitrust matters. The Trade Commission has conducted numerous antitrust investigations in motion pictures, few successful from the Government's standpoint.

CRIMINAL INDICTMENT IS DECLARED PURPOSE

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch declared Wednesday that criminal indictments are being sought by the Department of Justice in the St. Louis case, and an Associated Press dispatch quoted the Department of Justice unofficially as having described the inquiry as being an investigation into the activities of Warner Brothers. The Post-Dispatch added that the investigation "is the outgrowth of repeated complaints by independent exhibitors in cities throughout the country."

Although the St. Louis proceedings in which the Government is expected to present evidence in a specific instance to show a conspiracy to deny first-run product to independents in that area, the Government's move really dates back to last summer's "little man" hearings on the code before the National Recovery Review Board, then headed by Clarence Darrow. Too, the grand jury investigation brings into the picture again, as one of the two Justice Department officials handling the case, Russell B. Hardy, special assistant to United States Attorney General Cummings. It was Mr. Hardy who assailed the motion picture code before the Darrow board, acting as a Government agent.

The testimony of independent witnesses before the Darrow Board is expected to bulk largely in the St. Louis case, as evidence that no steps have been taken to correct the socalled abuses revealed by the Darrow investigation.

The Government's contentions in the St. Louis case are said to represent substantially a repetition of charges made against the large companies last year by independents testifying before the Darrow board, and since, principally by independents of New York and Chicago.

Counter-Fire to Borah

In some quarters it is believed the investigation was calculated in part to head off criticism in Congress by Senators William E. Borah of Idaho and Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, both insurgent Republicans, who have protested vigorously against liberties from antitrust laws granted large codified industries by the Recovery Act. Both Senators have repeatedly condemned the film code and have frequently threatened to move for Congressional investigation of both the code and the industry. Senator Borah was reported this week to have declared at Washington that if the St. Louis case does not get through the law courts he will bring the situation up on the Senate floor, probably with the support of Senator Nye.

Initial steps pointing to a Congressional investigation of monopolistic practices under codes were taken by Senator King (Utah), who has pending before the judiciary committee of the Senate a resolution seeking to determine

1. Whether the Recovery Act has encouraged or promoted monopolistic practices.

2. Whether codes have tended to nullify the antitrust laws.

3. Whether legislation is needed to restore those laws to their former position.

4. Whether the antitrust laws are adequate for the control of monopolistic practices.

Assistant Attorney-General Hardy is expected to repeat before the St. Louis grand jury testimony similar to that which he expressed before the Darrow board last year when he declared that the number of independent theatres had dropped considerably since 1919, and that the socalled "Big Five" was controlling not only the making of pictures, but also distribution and theatre operation. He said at that time that the Department had twice warned the large companies they were in violation of the Sherman antitrust act.

Information Sought

Another contributing cause to the filing of the St. Louis case was believed at Washington to be the failure of large companies to comply with requests for certain information asked by the Department of Justice.

Unofficial reference was made to the breaking of the "radio trust" in 1928, and the reminiscences of old political observers of the major antitrust case brought during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which was fined $29,000,000 by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis.

Subpoenas, of a "John Doe" nature, were served last week on 100 motion picture corporations and individuals, executives of virtually all leading distributing companies, and on their exchange managers in St. Louis, district and home office and sales representatives, and others.

Some of those called were Charles Cella, St. Louis theatre owner; Ben Reingold, Fox St. Louis exchange manager; Harry Koplar, theatre owner; James Winn, Warner manager; Joseph Garrison, manager for Universal; Harry Scott, United Artists manager; Louis Ellam, RKO; Clayton Lynch, MGM; Byron Moore, manager of the Shubert theatre in St. Louis, and Robert Hicks, managing the St. Louis Orpheum, both Warner theatres; Harry Greenman, manager, St. Louis Fox theatre; Nelson Cunliff, trustee of Skouras Brothers; Thomas N. Dysart, representing the landlord owning the buildings housing the Ambassador, Grand Central and Missouri theatres; former Mayor of St. Louis Frederick H. Kreismann, and Joseph H. Grand and Jacob Chasnoff, St. Louis attorneys.

Zoning Records Subpoenaed

One subpoena was for the records of the St. Louis Clearance and Zoning Board, served on Secretary Schofield.

Others on hand to testify and otherwise participate in the case were Harry Arthur and Jack Partington, of Fanchon and Marco; Louis Phillips, attorney representing Paramount; Sidney Bromberg, MGM attorney; Robert Youngman, attorney, and Jules Levy and Cresson Smith, sales executives, of RKO; Edward Raferty, counsel for United Artists; Spyros Skouras, circuit owner; Abel Cary Thomas, general counsel for Warner Bros.; Adolph Schimel, representing Universal; William Jaffee, counsel for Columbia, and John H. Leahy, attorney for Allen Snyder, lessee of the three theatres involved.

The large companies were further represented by Joseph Bernhard, head of Warner Theatres, and M. A. Silver, western circuit division manager; Andrew W. Smith, Jr., eastern sales manager of Warner; Sam Dembow, Jr., former vice-president of Paramount theatres; Neil Agnew, Paramount sales manager; Louis Astor, assistant sales manager of Columbia; W. J. Kupper, western division manager for Fox Film; Harold S. Bareford and Joseph Hazen of Warner and Paul Burger of United Artists.

The subpoenas were issued by Federal Attorney Harry C. Blanton of St. Louis, after Russell Hardy and Harold L. Schilz, special antitrust assistants to Attorney General Cummings, had arrived in St. Louis to assist.

ONWARD, CHRISTIAN SOLDIER

Millionaires in this country would be the first to be called for war under a bill introduced in Congress by Representative Thomas O'Malley, Democrat, of Wisconsin.

Contending that wars are fought to "preserve the wealth of the capitalist," Congressman O'Malley said he was convinced the only effective method of curbing them was to compel those who "profit most by their consequences to serve in the ranks and answer the military roll call before anyone else may be called."

He named Henry Ford, J. P. Morgan and the Rockefellers as first-choice privates in the ranks and suggested that the motion picture industry would be well represented.

"Censor Will Hays might even be given a chance to make a real dramatic debut," Congressman O'Malley observed.

A bitter contest is assured, as James A. Reed, former United States Senator, and reputed critic of the Roosevelt Administration, is head of the defense counsel. Mr. Reed has been aligned in the past with Senators Nye and Borah in insistence that the Government deal sternly with monopolies under the Sherman law.

The exact legal nature of the charges has not been made public, since the case still is within the closely guarded federal grand jury room. Nor has any of the testimony or names of those testifying been revealed. The proceedings will continue secretly until the grand jury files its report in open federal court.

It is generally believed, though not officially confirmed, that the specific proceedings are due to the complaints made by the owners and managers of the Ambassador, new Grand Central and Missouri theatres as to inability to obtain product for those houses. It is further understood that Warner Brothers is the principal object of the complaint. There has been a prolonged struggle for control of the first-run situation in St. Louis, with Harry Koplar, pioneer exhibitor, and his associates, Fanchon and Marco, battling against the Warner interests.

The key to the situation appears to be the operations involving the St. Louis holdings built up by the brothers Skouras—Spyros P., Charles P. and George P., who from the position of bus boys in a local hotel became dominant factors in theatre affairs throughout the country. Harry Koplar was associated with the Skourases in the St. Louis Amusement Company and Skouras Brothers Enterprises, which are the St. Louis holding companies for the local properties from which the brothers stepped into national exhibition activities with Warner and later with Fox.

Alliance With Paramount

Prior to selling out their St. Louis holdings, in September, 1928, to Warner, the Skourases had formed an alliance with Paramount-Publix in operation of the Ambassador and Missouri and also three first-run theatres in Indianapolis. Through many interlocking corporations the St. Louis first-runs and a string of neighborhood and suburban properties were dominated by the Skourases and their associates. Mr. Koplar, who was one of the associates, in time affiliated with Allan Snyder, a St. Louis utility engineer, who had entered the local first-run field after the Ambassador, Missouri and new Grand Central had been bought in at foreclosure proceedings by committees representing bondholders.

Since Warner Brothers became interested in the St. Louis theatres, considerable litigation has involved the holding companies of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and St. Louis Amusement, and it is generally believed in that city that Mr. Koplar was prominently identified with the interests sponsoring much of the litigation against the controlling interests of the companies, although the original suits did not mention Mr. Koplar by name. These suits were something more than the usual lawsuits between minority and majority stockholders, being marked by much personal bitterness.

After the bondholders' protective committees had bought in the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres and entered into a leasing arrangement with Mr. Koplar's associate, Allan Snyder, Mr. Snyder retained Fanchon and Marco to manage the properties.

At the head of Fanchon and Marco is Harry Arthur and associated with him in an executive capacity is Jack Partington. Directing the five first-run St. Louis theatres operated by Fanchon and Marco are Harry Koplar, Harry Greenman and Charles Kurtzman.

The St. Louis theatre, which is not involved in the Government's case, and the Grand Central theatre have been dark for some time because, it had been said, of inability to obtain sufficient first-run product.

Outbid at Public Sale

Warner Brothers had been outbid at the public sale of the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres, and so concentrated its St. Louis theatre operations on the Shubert theatre on Grand boulevard, and the Orpheum, at Ninth and St. Charles. Besides their own Warner and First National product, the company has held the exclusive first-run franchise for Paramount and RKO product.

Late last summer United States District Attorney Blanton at St. Louis and also the Department of Commerce at Washington received, presumably from the Allan Snyder-Fanchon and Marco interests, a complaint about unavailability of product. The Department of Justice immediately started a secret investigation.

At a recent hearing before Referee in Bankruptcy Hope, when the St. Louis first-run situation came up for formal discussion, counsel for the bondholders' protective committee for the Ambassador, Missouri, and Grand Central, indicated that legal action would be taken in an attempt to enforce a contract which those theatres had held for the St. Louis first-run right to Warner product and First National Pictures. It was charged that the pictures of these companies were part of the security for the bond issue.

The Ambassador theatre has been able to get only product of Universal, Fox and Columbia for showing in 1934-35.

CONFLICT ON "BANK NIGHTS" WIDENS; IOWA EXHIBITOR WINS IN TEST CASE

Injunction Weakens Code Authority's Police Power; Courts and Attorneys Argue Legality under Local Lottery Laws

That clause in the Motion Picture Code which concerns "Bank Nights" and other forms of business stimulant, has taken front place ahead of clearance and zoning as the code problem of most vital concern at the moment to operations of many hundreds of subsequent run theatres.

The merchandising device generally known as "Bank Nights" is the cause of much wrangling among competitive exhibitor users and non-users, the flood of such code complaints further clogging the already over-burdened, slow-moving wheels of Grievance Board and Code Authority machinery.

Attorneys at Variance

State attorneys-general in many sections appear unable to make up their collective minds as to the legality of the "Bank Night" under local lottery laws, and at least one late decision in a bitterly fought court action, ruling in favor of the alleged violator, not only dismissed the violation but brought a double victory to the exhibitor in the form of an injunction restraining the Code Authority and the film exchanges from cutting off his film supply for refusal to comply. This injunction weakens considerably the Code Authority's limited police power.

Section 1 of Part 3 of exhibition trade practices specifically says: "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced scrip books, coupons, throwaway tickets, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar nature which directly or indirectly lower or tend to lower such announced admission prices and which are unfair to competing exhibitors, or which deceive the public."

Subsequently Sol A. Rosenblatt, then division administrator of the NRA and now its compliance director, ruled that the clause was intended to embrace "Bank Nights" and such, but, as is usually the procedure in handling complaints of unfair competition, each Local Grievance Board must determine each case on its individual merits.

Evidently the Grievance Boards and the Code Authority consider the copyrighted plan of Affiliated Enterprises, which is generally in use, to be a violation, because virtually all the decisions by the Grievance Boards in such cases have so stated, and these rulings were generally sustained by the Code Authority whenever an appeal was taken.

Possible loss of film for failure to cease and desist was the subject of the latest "Bank Night" conflict, which resulted in a complete victory for the exhibitor, Don Thornburg, operating both the Strand and Family theatres in Marshalltown, Iowa.

On September 25 the Des Moines Grievance Board, acting on a "Bank Night" complaint filed by Mr. Thornburg's competitor, M. G. Rosckop, of the Marshalltown Casino, decided against the defendant Thornburg, who appealed to the Code Authority.

Meanwhile, Mr. Thornburg wrote letters of protest to President Roosevelt, Mr. Rosenblatt, Deputy Administrator William Farnsworth and others, declaring that if he was compelled to discontinue using the plan at his theatres he would close both houses and bring suits for damages against the aforesaid officials and the whole NRA structure.

Moving quickly to forestall any attempt of the Code Authority to effect compliance by cutting off his film supply for persistent violation of the clause, Mr. Thornburg obtained in court a temporary injunction.

Probably the most inconsistent angle to the entire "Bank Night" situation is the inability of some state courts and their own state's attorney-general to agree on the legality under the lottery laws of those states. There have been countless contests in recent months. In any event, however, the Code Authority acts independently.

In this connection, too, Mr. Thornburg won a victory over the Grievance Board's order to cease and desist. It seems that Walter Maley, first assistant attorney general, had ruled on December 8 that "Bank Nights" are a lottery under the Iowa law. C. C. Dunsmoor, of the Capitol at Marshalltown, then brought a suit against Mr. Thornburg in Marshalltown's municipal court, charging Thornburg with "wilfully making, establishing and making public a scheme for a lottery," contrary to the Iowa statutes.

Not Lottery, Judge Rules

The case went to trial December 22, and Judge L. R. Sheets ruled that "Bank Night" as practiced by Mr. Thornburg is not a lottery. The judge said three factors must be present to make a scheme a lottery: a consideration, chance and a prize. Those participating, he added, must pay something to take a chance to win a prize.

Finally, word came from Des Moines this week that Edward L. O'Connor, attorney general of Iowa, has suspended Walter Maley's opinion declaring "Bank Nights" a lottery. The attorney general notified the 99 county attorneys in the state to disregard the original ruling pending further investigation. It appears unlikely, however, that the attorney general will take any further action in view of Judge Sheets' decision. The Thornburg case had been arranged for by Mr. Thornburg himself in order to test the original ruling.

Outstanding in Judge Sheets' decision was his opinion that Thornburg through the device "neither directly nor indirectly receives any pecuniary compensation."

It became known this week that proponents of the plan will wage an aggressive fight to eliminate or sharply modify sections of the code restricting prizes, rebates, "Bank Nights" and the like, at hearings on code revision before the National Industrial Recovery Board at Washington, starting this week.

In Kansas City, R. W. McEwan, a representative of the "Bank Night" distributors, said that efforts particularly will be directed at legalizing the plan under the code. Mr. McEwan declared that petitions bearing thousands of signatures of exhibitors, professional men, merchants and patrons requesting code modification in this particular have been placed on file with the NRA authorities at Washington.

"Bank Nights" and similar devices have given the Code Authority as much trouble in other exchange territories.

Ammunition Being Amassed for Fight at Code Revision Hearing in Washington; Many Cases Before Boards

In Kansas City, nine cases pending with the Local Grievance Board or with the Code Authority on appeal have been withdrawn by the complainants. Glen W. Dickinson Theatres, which recently started using "Bank Nights," withdrew complaints previously filed against eight competitors.

Any Action Awaits Complaint

Neither the Local Grievance Boards nor the Code Authority will take any action against any user of "Bank Nights" unless and until a competitor files a complaint.

Frank H. Cassil, Rialto theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., was compelled to file a certificate of compliance on order of the Kansas City Grievance Board which charged him with continued violation of a previous ruling ordering him to drop "Bank Nights."

In Milwaukee the Local Grievance Board ordered that "Bank Nights" be discontinued at the Riviera, Milwaukee; Paramount, at West Allis; Orpheum and Strand, Green Bay; Embassy, at Neenah; Brin, at Menasha; Allis, at West Allis, and the Rex, at Oshkosh. The seven last named properties are operated by Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises.

The Code Authority Monday heard charges by William Posters, of Fox West Coast Theatres, that the Los Angeles Grievance Board acted in a manner that was "biased, prejudiced and partial" in holding West Coast theatres at Santa Paula, Cal., and Los Angeles to be in violation of the code for staging "Bank Nights." West Coast had taken an appeal.

Many Appeals Considered

At the same time the Authority was considering appeals from Local Grievance Board decisions on "Bank Nights" involving the Granada, Alhambra, Cal., against the Mission, at San Gabriel, Cal.; Palomar, Oceanside, Cal. vs. Pala, Escondido, Cal.; Princess, Storm Lake, Iowa, vs. Empire, same city; Mission, Ventura, Cal., vs. Oxnard, Oxnard, Cal.; Capitol, Sioux City, Iowa, vs. Rialto, same city; Publix, La Salle, Ill., vs. Peru and State theatres at Peru, Ill.; Watseka, Watseka, Ill., vs. Little theatre, same city; Majestic, Milford, Ill., vs. Lorrain, Hoopeston and Little theatres, Watseka, Ill.; Lisbon Opera House, Lisbon, Ohio, vs. Rex, Lisbon, same city; Loew's United Artists theatre and Mary Anderson, at Louisville, Ky., vs. Rialto, same city.

Earlier, the Code Authority sustained Local Grievance Boards in "Bank Night" decisions found against the Harding, Lincoln, Metropolitan and El Rey theatres, at San Francisco; Avon, at Lenoir, S. C., and the Chieftain, at Sac City, Iowa.

The federal courts at Denver had under advisement a situation similar to the Marshalltown case. Harry Huffman, Denver circuit operator, obtained a temporary injunction against the Authority and exchanges, pending a full hearing, probably later this week, over the use of "prizes."

On September 25, the Denver Grievance Board, on the complaint of the Denham and Ogden theatres, declared the giving away of automobiles by Mr. Huffman at his Aladdin, Bide-a-Wee, Bluebird, Denver, Orpheum, Paramount, Rialto and Tabor theatres, was in violation of the code. Mr. Huffman appealed to the Code Authority, which sustained the Grievance Board's decision.

The Huffman interests refused to abide by

INTRODUCED QUOTA BILL WORRIES INDUSTRY IN NEW SOUTH WALES

Newly Formed Trades Council Wants Distributors Exempted, Protests Any Ministerial Control, Asks Uniform Legislation

Distributor Quota Would Be 15 Per Cent at End of Fifth Year, Exhibitor 12½ Per Cent; and 11 on the Advisory Board

By CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Introduction of the awaited quota bill in the New South Wales legislative assembly by Chief Secretary Chaffey is speeding the activities of the newly formed Motion Picture and Allied Trades Council, organized by exhibitors, producers and distributors in order to present a united front in dealing with the Government on the proposed legislation.

It is doubted that the Quota will become law before next month, as Mr. Chaffey, in conferring with representatives of all branches, said the business should be given full opportunity to be heard.

Industry Somewhat Perturbed

At a late hour the industry is becoming somewhat perturbed as to what the effects of quota legislation will be. Distributors are anxious to be excluded from the new law entirely; exhibitors are not unduly alarmed with it so long as it is judicially conceived and applied; and producers, while they welcome it, maintain that the probable growth of mushroom companies and the consequent flood of inferior pictures will hamper their efforts to establish the Australian producing industry on a stabilized and commercially profitable basis.

The N. S. W. Government's ostensibly swift decision to bring down quota legislation came as a surprise to those unacquainted with the inside trend of events. In any case, it seems that if the industry did know what was coming, its political roundsmen left their action until too late. I doubt if the Government will take much heed of their pleas at this late hour—more especially as the Quota Bill has been framed along lines identical with those laid down by Mr. Marks. If delayed, some drastic changes may be made to the bill, but if it obtains an early passage, the bill will be as follows, with perhaps two or three minor alterations:

Distributors: First year, 5 per cent; second year 7½ per cent; third year 10 per cent; fourth year, 12½ per cent; fifth year, 15 per cent.

Exhibitors: First year, 4 per cent; second year, 5 per cent; third year, 7½ per cent; fourth year, 10 per cent; fifth year, 12½ per cent.

The Minister is given the authority to modify the requirements if in any year he is confident that the requirements are not commercially practicable.

Producers, distributors and exhibitors must be registered.

The standard of merit will be decided by an advisory committee of 11, appointed to assist the Minister and consisting of two representatives of producers, of Australian pictures, two distributors, two exhibitors, and five outside the industry, one of whom will be the Commonwealth censor. No picture can be submitted for quota benefits until it is passed by this committee as reaching the necessary standard.

The clause under which it is proposed to permit exhibitors to reject any number of films other than Australian quota pictures, in order to meet their obligations, contains the stipulation that this right of rejection must be exercised in regard to foreign films before rejecting British product. The British interests had feared that Australian exhibitors would shelve British productions in favor of Australian and American, rather than interfere with American contracts, especially with a little judicious "pressure" from American exchanges. This, of course, would have proved a severe handicap to British producers, who have long come to regard the Australian market as one of their best sources of revenue. Indeed, the British would like to have their product exempted in entirety from the rejection privilege.

On the other hand, in its representations to the Government on the eve of the bill's first reading in Parliament, the Motion Picture and Allied Trades Council made no reference to rejection, but set out its recommendations as enumerated:

(1) An opportunity to confer with the Government in detail.

(2) Elimination of the distributors' quota law.

(3) Uniform legislation in all States, as one state alone cannot operate a quota.

(4) Elimination of the right of the Minister to control the film business.

(5) Simplification of the quota law, based upon quality and the right of the exhibitor to buy his pictures where he likes.

Those resolutions, passed at the inaugural meeting of the Council, suggest that Britain is alone in her fight to have the rejection clause eliminated or applied solely to foreign films. A possible exception is the fly-by-night producer who may see in the quota the chance for exploitation, but the more prominent and established studios, I feel sure, would themselves recommend rejection. Cheaply and poorly made quota "quickies" will do more to retard the progress of the local producing industry than any one other factor, and if those inferior films are rejected wholesale by exhibitors, the better class producer will be automatically freed of an irritating competition which can only hamper his efforts.

Mr. Chaffey said he was informed at the Conference that the industry as a whole was not opposed to the principle of quotas for Australian pictures, as suggested in the recent report of the film commissioner, F. W. Marks, on whose report the Quota bill is founded, but it felt that such legislation should be a federal matter, with proper safeguards against hardship in any one branch of the business. As an alternative to federal action it was suggested that final action in New South Wales await adoption of a similar act by a majority of the other states. He was told that the industry for the most part was opposed to a quota for distributors and to ministerial control of the film business.

Now that the quota is to become law in N. S. W., uniform quota legislation throughout the Commonwealth before long can be regarded as a certainty. Already there are whisperings that Victoria is again becoming active and that the Quota Bill will be brought before the House for a second time in the early months of this year. If it does eventually introduce a quota, the Victorian Government will have constituted one of the most amazing reversals of policy imaginable. With the bill accepted by the public as virtually passed some months ago, Victoria threw it out at the last possible moment, under pressure from British production interests, but Britain may no longer be anxious to step in once the law gets under way in the more important mother state. Assuming that a quota is eventually brought into being in N. S. W. and Victoria, its early appearance in Queensland, South Australia and West Australia will become inevitable.

Deitrich, Hearst Film Official, Dies

Theodore C. Deitrich, director of publicity for Hearst Metrotone News and Cosmopolitan Productions, died last Sunday in New York from a complication of diseases. He was 58 years old.

Mr. Deitrich had been in the newspaper and motion picture businesses most of his adult life. He was a reporter on the New York American for years, later joining International News Service. He began his career as a reporter for the Pittsburgh Times in 1896, working his way finally to the post of managing editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch and Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

Moving to Chicago, Mr. Deitrich became a special writer for the Chicago Chronicle, remaining in that post for three years. He served later on the staffs of the Chicago Examiner, San Francisco Examiner and New York American, and in 1915 joined the Hearst motion picture enterprises.

License Suspended

The Seattle city council has revoked for 30 days the license of the Star theatre, third run downtown house, on the recommendation of the local censor board, because of the showing of an allegedly obscene film, for which Spencer Fox, manager, had been fined $100 and given a suspended jail sentence two months ago.

Motion picture actors this week went to the United States Government with a plea to obtain better working conditions for them in Hollywood. Charging the producers with having "tricked, hamstrung and lied to them," the actors brought their fight to a climax when actor members of a special code committee Monday presented to the National Recovery Administration at Washington a report and argument in support of adoption of a set of fair practices.

The report, arraigning the industry for low wages paid to players, declared the producers had resorted to "every dishonest practice known to an industry" against the actors.

The actors' committee of five, composed of Robert Montgomery, Claude King, Ralph Morgan, Kenneth Thomson and Richard Tucker, had been appointed by compliance director Sol A. Rosenblatt, of the NRA, to draft the rules with a committee representing producers. These rules were submitted to the producers, but a deadlock was reached after 11 meetings.

Compares Earnings of Players

Before discussing the specific rules proposed, the 52-page report gave consideration to the present condition of the average actor and to the history of relations between producers and players, which, it said, were never of the best.

"At the outset," said the report, "it is necessary to lay a few ghosts. The idea has been widely publicized that the average actor is a plutocrat, rolling in wealth, and that for him to protest about his working conditions is the basest ingratitude." To disprove that the earning power of players as a whole was large, the report drew from NRA Director Rosenblatt's investigation of industry salaries, under date of July 7, 1934, when it was observed by the NRA that 1,563 actors and actresses were employed during 1933, excluding extra players. Of this number some 28 per cent earned less than $1,000 in that year, 21 per cent between $1,000 and $2,000, and 10 per cent between $2,000 and $3,000, while on the other hand 12 per cent drew between $10,000 and $50,000. Combining wage classifications the committee pointed out that 50 per cent made less than $2,000; 75 per cent less than $5,000. Moreover, it was explained this was not net income, some 10 per cent going to the actor's agent and out of the remainder the player had to buy wardrobe.

"Perhaps it may be contended," said the report, "that the quarter who made more than $5,000 are able to take care of themselves, though from experience we know this is not the fact. Certainly, however, the majority of the actors need protection. Moreover, even the higher paid group has a short period of earning power during which the demands on them are excessively heavy."

The report then set forth some of the very large incomes of producers and other motion picture executives, in trying to give the lie to producer objections to the actor proposals for fair practices on the producers' grounds that such rules "will increase production costs to such an extent that they will ruin the industry."

"If a betterment in actors' working conditions doubled the cost of actors' salaries, it would not even make a dent in the business," said the report, which quoted Irving Thalberg on production costs as follows: "In the boom years of 1927-28-29, the film industry spent for motion picture production around $150,000,000 a year. This expenditure produced in revenue in the box offices of the world some $2,000,000,000. The product cost only 7½ per cent of the total intake. There is probably no other business in the world where the cost of material is as small as this proportion. Even during the worst of the depression, when the cost dropped down to $100,000,000 and the intake to not much more than $1,000,000, cost of the material on which the industry survived or failed was still only 10 per cent of the intake."

18 Per Cent of Cost to Actors

The report cited figures obtained from United Artists which indicated that only 18 per cent of the cost of production went into actors' salaries. "So in the worst year of the depression," said the report, "actors received only 1 4/5 cents of each dollar which came into the box office, and according to the Rosenblatt salary report previously referred to, for 1933, the cost of production only equaled 8 per cent of the dollar which came into the box-office. Of that 8 per cent, one-fifth went into actors' salaries . . . actors during 1933 receiving 1 3/5 cents of each box office dollar."

Industry, company and Senate reports on grosses and on large salaries of producers and other film executives were then cited at length, "not to show how much money executives make, but to give some idea of how ill it becomes these gentlemen to protest that the industry cannot afford fair working conditions for actors. It is even worse when we remember that most of the men who now run the business and assert that actors' working conditions cannot be bettered, dragged the industry to the verge of bankruptcy, took their employees' money for the purchase of stock at excessive figures, and made a record of financial ruin that has been seldom equaled in the annals of American business."

"There is apparently no penalty for failure for a motion picture executive," the report said. "Where are the men who guided Paramount into bankruptcy? Adolph Zukor is the new head of the new Paramount. Sidney Kent is the head of Fox.

"Where is the man who was the production head of Fox during a debacle that cost thousands of American millions of dollars? Mr. Winfield Sheehan is still the production head of Fox.

"The same group of men, who have taken millions of dollars out of the American public through their manipulations of the motion picture business, are still in control. With a few exceptions, they have never contributed anything to the actual making of motion pictures or to the advance of the art. Yet these same men arrogate to themselves a despotic feudalism over the working conditions of those who actually make pictures, creative talent.

"Only the baronial insolence of men whose record speaks for itself has led to the obstructionist attitude with which each proposal (of the actors for a set of trade practices) for reform has been met."

No-Strike Agreement Expires Soon

Citing in detail the various conflicts between producers and players and the nature of their relations since 1927, the report ominously pointed out that the five-year non-strike agreement expires in March, 1935.

Charging that "employers made the code", and explaining that the players failed to obtain their rights under the code, the report declared that "instead of correcting abuses, the code to date has cost the actors time, effort and money in resisting further encroachments".

Eleven meetings were held in Hollywood between the committee of five actors and a like number representing producers and a final deadlock was reached a few weeks ago. "At no time were the producers willing to concede anything under the code," explained the actors' committee. "They refused to discuss most of the rules in detail and made no counter offers. They did admit that many of the proposals were reasonable and just, but said that they were unwilling to have them in an NRA code enforceable by the federal government."

"History shows," the report continued, "that no agreement with producers is worth the paper it is written on, unless it is with a strong actor-controlled organization with the power to enforce it.

"The actors have exhausted every effort to agree with the producers on working conditions. They have been exceedingly patient. They have been tricked, hamstrung, and lied to. Every dishonest practice known to an industry, the code of ethics of which is the lowest of all industries, has been resorted to by the producers against the actors. In the face of such treatment, the actors, with confidence, are coming to the Government which promised them better working conditions under the NRA to see if such better working conditions can be thus obtained."

Rules Proposed by Committee

While the report cited dozens of abuses of actors by producers, and listed corrective measures, the basic platform demanded by the special code committee provided:

(1) Elimination of the "call bureau", a clearing house operated by the large producers for contract players.

(2) Granting the right to players to represent players in all dealings with producers, including matters not relating to fixing of salary and obtaining of roles.

(3) Enactment of a new standard contract, with provisions for arbitration of all individual actor-producer disagreements.

Some of the rules of fair practices governing relations between producers and actors as proposed by the committee, all of which rules would become provisions of the industry's code, follow:

Violations by producers shall be unfair trade practices under the code. The right to waive any rules shall be vested only in the main organization of actors.

The basic work day for actors shall be eight hours, and every actor shall be given at least 15 hours rest between the end of one work day and the beginning of the next. One hour for lunch shall be allowed and is not to be calculated as part of the eight-hour day. An actor may work longer than the basic eight-hour day, provided that the next 15-hour basic rest period shall be increased by the amount of overtime the actor works. Day players working longer than eight hours shall be paid at the rate of one-eighth of their daily salary for each overtime hour.

Sunday or holiday work is permitted, but the actor must be given a compensating day of rest in the same week.

The foregoing rules shall be incorporated in all contracts.

All contracts between producers and actors must be in writing. There shall be no verbal contracts.

Minimum Contracts Proposed

The report included at this point minimum standard contracts for free lance players and for day players, both providing for arbitration of disputes.

The free-lance players' contract provides for terms of employment, his rights during employment, the rights of the producer. The contract for day players does likewise.

A set of rules and regulations to govern the making of contracts entered into between producers and contract players sets down regulations controlling layoff periods, machinery for arbitrating disputes and other relations between both parties. Too, players would not be loaned by one studio to another without the actor's consent.

Rule VIII says: "No producer shall aid, promote, participate in, assist, or use any bureau or agency having as its purpose or practice the calling, reserving, or hiring of actors for more than one company, or having as its purpose or practice the collection and maintenance of data on actors' salaries and state of employment." Furthermore, no producer would be permitted to participate in or engage actors through any general booking or employment agency.

All motion picture actors would be brought under the rules, but "nothing herein contained (in the rules) shall require the violation of any bona fide contract existing before these rules go into effect."

Specifically mentioned in the various contracts are: Retakes, production starting dates, radio appearances, traveling and transportation conditions, production suspension, termination rights, travel time, hours of labor, delivery of contract, notices, arbitration, lending of services working in more than one picture at a time, options and the like.

Final RCA Shares To Be Distributed

The final 665,539 shares of Radio Corporation of America stock held by Westinghouse will be distributed to the Westinghouse stockholders in the form of a dividend declared in New York on Tuesday and payable February 18 to stock of record January 21.

Westinghouse originally owned nearly 3,000,000 shares of RCA and distribution of the remainder held by that company is the result of the decree issued by the Government which involved divestment of the company's RCA holdings by Nov. 21, 1935.

A. T. & T. Net $5.75 a Share

Advance estimates of the 1934 earnings of American Telephone and Telegraph Company show an amount equal to $5.75 a share on 18,662,275 shares of stock. This will provide for absorption of another substantial deficit of Western Electric and would compare with $5.38 a share in 1933.

'Bank Night' Test Won by Exhibitor

the Code Authority's decree, and the Authority last week notified exchanges to stop serving the theatres involved after January 7. Mr. Huffman then sought an injunction in the U. S. district court and Judge Foster Symes granted temporary relief pending a hearing.

United States District Attorney Thomas J. Morrissey indicated that the government may set out to prove that Mr. Huffman is violating the federal lottery laws, as well as the Colorado laws.

The copyrighted form of "Bank Night" generally in use, which is distributed by Affiliated Enterprises, through independent exchange franchise holders in the various territories, is conducted in this manner:

> Affiliated Enterprises enters into a contract with an exhibitor, for a sum of money (weekly fee, or a percentage of the gross receipts), and furnishes the theatre with register books, trailers and other paraphernalia. On a designated night of the week the theatre itself offers a prize of some specific amount of money and the drawing thereof, as a rule, takes place at about nine o'clock in the evening. Registration by the patron is said to be absolutely free and is further described as follows:
> In Register Number 1, persons, patrons, over the age of 16 years, may register by signing their names and addresses, and opposite each name space is a number, in regular order from number one up. Register Number 2 is provided by Affiliated, in which there are placed, in alphabetical order, the names appearing numerically in Register Number 1. Set opposite each name in the second register is the number corresponding to the number opposite the respective name in the first register. This system of registration is provided in order to eliminate any duplicate registration.
> Register Number 1 is placed in or near the entrance or exit of the theatre or, it may be placed at some other convenient place. Each person when registering places the prefix of "Mr.," "Mrs." or "Miss" before the name, and no one shall be allowed to register more than once.
> A bank is chosen by the exhibitor, wherein a certain designated amount of money is deposited by him for each week of the stunt. The name of said bank shall be exhibited over Register Number 1, and the name of the bank may be used in all advertising pertaining thereto.
> It is distinctly provided that no additional sum or compensation shall be added to the regular admission to such theatre by reason of the stunt, and, according to Affiliated Enterprises, "the purpose of the system shall be for advertising only."
> At a certain time or times fixed by the exhibitor, the numbers corresponding to those set opposite the names in Register Number 1 are placed in a box, from which is chosen or selected one number; and in the event the person, whose name is written in Register Number 1 opposite the number so chosen from the box, shall be present in that theatre, or on the outside, without a paid admission, or appears at the box-office to claim the award, he shall be entitled thereto, and he shall have the right to go into the theatre without a paid admission and shall be entitled to the cash offer as though he or she were in the theatre by a paid admission at the time of the drawing; and the owner of the theatre shall immediately make available said amount to the person entitled thereto.
> In the event that the individual representing such number thus chosen is not in the theatre at the time of the selection, or does not appear at the theatre and claim the award within a reasonable time after the selection, he or she shall not have or be entitled to said amount. In the latter event, the amount of said bank account shall be carried over to the next week and shall be increased by the regular designated amount. Thus the amount shall accumulate from week to week until the registration of a party is selected or chosen who claims the said amount, either by being in the theatre or on the outside, or who presents himself within a reasonable time after the selection. There will only be one number chosen each week, and, according to Affiliated, "it shall be distinctly understood that the registration shall be absolutely free and that no admission or ticket shall be required in order to register and participate in same."

MGM'S 'BIOGRAPHY' REAL JOY;

Harding-Griffith Team Scores Again

"BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL" (MGM)

Direction ........................E. H. Griffith
Original Play.................S. N. Behrman
Screen Play.........................Anita Loos
Additional Dialogue....Horace Jackson
Photography...........James Wong Howe
Producer ......................Irving Thalberg

Cast: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery, Edward Everett Horton, Edward Arnold, Una Merkel, Charles Richman, Greta Meyer, Willard Robertson, Donald Meek.

Miss Harding is herself again and she's a joy, the picture is a pleasure, and the production is an entertainment you can't afford to miss. It's an elegant adaptation of a stage play by Anita Loos and Horace Jackson, so smoothly, so expertly, so painlessly directed by E. H. Griffith that you want the serio-comic mood to last forever instead of being over in a mere hour or so. Book it, and book it big by all means, it's a treat for the customers.

A girl-artist returns to America quite broke. The editor of a magazine makes her an offer no girl could refuse for the publication rights to her biography because the tabloids have played up her past love-life as a circulation-builder. Back into her life comes a childhood beau who is running for U. S. Senator. When said candidate for Congress learns she is to publish her life, he tries frantically, by himself and with the aid of his prospective father-in-law, to make her retract. In the end, the girl makes the editor tear up the contract for the biography and makes a good husband out of him to boot.

Miss Harding is once again the gal you learned to love in "Holiday." With a performance like this one, it is to be hoped that she will continue her screen career forever, preferably under the expert guidance of E. H. Griffith who seems to have found the secret of how to make Miss Harding give only the best. And that direction of his carries right through every performance in the picture and also accounts for the fact that no possible laugh is unaccounted for and the timing is just about perfect.

Robert Montgomery is excellent as the slightly smug, embittered young editor who is taught tolerance through love. Edward Everett Horton, in the fattest part he's been accorded in a long time, is simply grand as a composite portrait of a Congressman sired by a Babbitt. Charles Richman, as a Southern publisher of health magazines and an ardent physical culturist, steals away most of the scenes he's in. Edward Arnold, Una Merkel, Greta Meyer, Willard Robertson and Donald Meek, each is outstanding in contributing to a swell picture.

There are so many delightful moments so well worked out in the writing, so deftly accomplished without ever dragging humor in by the heels just for a laugh and keeping the love scenes keyed to the proper romantic pitch, that Anita Loos and Horace Jackson earn themselves an enormous pat on the back. It's one of the best movies ever made from play material. And James Wong Howe succeeds in making things look their best with his photography.

Home Television Is Only a Dream, Says Dr. Goldsmith

Television, although thus far it represents a scientific achievement of the first magnitude and a major technical triumph, is yet faced with tremendous economic problems, in the opinion of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, consulting engineer, former president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Certain popular notions relative to television are highly illusory, he said.

Promoters and program sponsors would have to spend hundreds of millions of dollars, said Dr. Goldsmith, while the commercial exploitation of television on a scale comparable with the radio or motion picture would require an enormous expenditure. "The day of the midget television set is far off," said Dr. Goldsmith. "Hollywood's annual output of from 300 to 500 feature films a year would last only one month on a television network." Television in the home is unlikely within a generation. It is only a dream now, he declared.

"Present research is proceeding along three basic lines," said Dr. Goldsmith. "One is reproduction by wire. Television by wireless via ultra short waves is a second field. The third may be described as taking, for example, a motion picture newsreel of an important event, or a film drama, and televising by wire or radio."

Noting the enormous cost which would be involved in program television, Dr. Goldsmith declared, "If $350,000 is taken as the average production cost of a Hollywood picture lasting 70 minutes, the indicated cost of putting it on a television network would be $5,000 a minute."

Palmer Wins Point in Fox Metropolitan Action

Archibald Palmer, counsel for independent bondholders of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, this week won his fight for the right to examine members of the bondholders' protective committee as to their affiliations, activities and other information considered by him to be pertinent to the committee's functions, when the United States circuit court of appeals in New York handed down an opinion to that effect on Monday. Mr. Palmer's petition had been denied by Federal Judge Julian W. Mack.

In his appeal, Mr. Palmer charged that Halsey, Stuart & Company dominated the committee and declared he wanted the examination in order to determine whether the committee had profited through buying or selling Fox Metropolitan bonds as a result of its knowledge of developments within the company.

At a reorganization hearing next week will be considered a bondholders' application for leave to intervene in the reorganization proceedings and to send copies of the plan to bondholders. Federal Judge Martin Manton on Tuesday continued the Fox Theatres and Fox Metropolitan reorganizations be combined. Metropolitan's houses continue to be operated by Skouras and Randforce, whose deals may be cancelled after May 1, 1936.

Roxy Suit vs. Fox Is Set For Jan. 21

The suit of Roxy Theatre Corporation, seeking to recover from William Fox defaulted Roxy theatre stock payments of $1,000,000, will get underway in New York state supreme court January 21.

Chicago Title & Trust Company, as assignee for Herbert Lubin, is instituting the suit, which contends that Mr. Fox issued written guarantee covering the payments on the stock purchases at the time of sale of the Roxy stock to Fox Theatres Corporation for approximately $4,000,000. Of this amount, the trust company's brief says, $3,000,000 had been paid by the theatre company up to the time of the default in 1932.

New Wisconsin Unit Organized

With organization plans for the new Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan completed, and A. C. Gutenberg, former MPTO of Wisconsin director, and E. Langemack, former treasurer of the same group, named president and treasurer of the new organization, respectively, the ITPA's new board of directors will convene within the next week to formulate a plan of action on problems facing the industry in the state. The initial meeting of the board also will see a decision on a selection of quarters and election of a business manager.

The two-day gathering in Milwaukee last week was chiefly concerned with shaping and adopting by-laws drawn from the former MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan and the Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Wisconsin associations.

The new group, composed strictly of independent exhibitors, includes members of both former organizations. F. J. McWilliams, of Madison, Wis., former president of Wisconsin Allied, is vice-president.

Directors are W. Silcock, Lake Geneva; A. C. Berkholtz, West Bend; L. F. Thurwachter, Waukesha; F. L. Koptelberger, LaCrosse; George Fischer, B. K. Fischer, E. F. Maertz, Ross Baldwin, Tom Saxe, Charles Washicheck, R. J. Patterson, all of Milwaukee. One hundred and fifteen theatres are represented in the group.

In Cleveland this week Ernest Schwartz was reelected president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. Other officers named were Albert E. Ptak, vice-president; John Kalafat, treasurer; G. W. Erdmann, secretary.

Allied of New Jersey and the Independent Exhibitors Protective Association, Philadelphia, have ratified a plan for southern New Jersey Allied members to share in the Philadelphia unit's activities.

Floyd St. John in East After Trip to Orient

Floyd St. John, Monogram franchise holder in the California territory, arrived in New York this week for conferences with Norton V. Ritchey, of Ritchey International Corporation, Monogram's foreign distributor. Mr. St. John has just returned from three months in Japan, China and the Philippines.

Laemmle, Jr., Now A Unit Producer In Universal Shift

Carl Laemmle, Jr., will hereafter head a production unit at the Universal studio, thus relinquishing the post of general manager in charge of all production which he has held since 1929, it was announced last weekend on the Coast by Carl Laemmle, Sr., Universal president, who will assume the general management of the studio. Young Laemmle will have the title of associate producer, and will produce six features a year.

In making the announcement Mr. Laemmle declared that for some time his son "has been eager to pass the duties and details of complete studio direction to others that he might concentrate on an independent production unit." The first of the six specials which Carl, Jr., will produce will be "Showboat" and "The Return of Frankenstein."

Universal has completed half of its schedule for this season, and within the next three months expects to complete the major part of the season's program.

In work are "The Return of Frankenstein," "It Happened in New York," "Princess O'Hara," "Transient Lady," with Gene Raymond, is virtually completed. Lily Damita is being considered for the role of Anna Held in "The Great Ziegfeld" in which William Powell will star. Upon his return from New York, John M. Stahl will start on "Magnificent Obsession" while others advancing are "Diamond Jim" with Edward Arnold; "Moon Mullins"; Edmund Lowe in "The Great Impersonation," "Sing Me a Love Song," Irene Dunne in "Showboat," "Within This Present," "Sutter's Gold" and "The Raven."

Regular Film Fare Seen for Airliners

Passengers on air liners will be entertained by motion pictures as they rush through the air in the not far distant future, in the opinion of Captain Eddie Rickenbacker. "The big transatlantic flying boats and the long distance cross-country planes will be equipped with movies before long," he said. He based his prediction on the success of an air preview last week of the picture, "Baboona," filmed in the jungle by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, which is to be a Fox release.

Mr. Johnson was so pleased with the results of the air screening that he has decided to equip one of his planes with a sound projector for the purpose of showing the film to the African natives on his return there this summer.

Harway Stays on Coast

Don Harway will continue to represent Photoplay Magazine and Shadoplay on the Pacific Coast, Macfadden Publications announced this week. Mr. Harway's headquarters will be in San Francisco.

ROOSEVELT URGES CONTINUANCE OF ADMISSION TAX AS CONGRESS OPENS

Budgets for Federal Agencies in Film Activities Will Be Maintained; Three Bills Directly Affect Industry

The professional lobbyist and the industry's own corps of protectors against adverse legislation turned to Washington this week with the convening of the 74th Congress. Out of the opening sessions came the following of interest to the motion picture business:

(1) President Roosevelt recommended continuance of the amusement tax, which is supposed to expire on July 1, and from which collections have been made as follows: 1933-34, $14,600,000; 1934-35, $15,000,000, and for 1935-36, an anticipated $16,500,000.

(2) Not a single budgetary item for the participation of the various governmental agencies and departments in motion picture activities will be reduced.

(3) Representative Celler of New York introduced a bill to remove the present prohibition upon interstate transportation of fight films.

(4) Representative Culkin, also of New York, proposed a bill for a federal motion picture commission which would control the industry as a public utility.

(5) Representative Celler proposed a second measure for placing the industry under control to prevent restraint upon open competition and to eliminate block booking.

(6) Senator King of Utah moved for an investigation of monopolistic practices under recovery codes.

While the opening of Congress witnessed the introduction of an unusually large number of bills, the motion picture industry was not especially singled out, being the subject of but three bills, as outlined. However, it is felt in certain industry circles that motion pictures may yet be the target for a legislative onslaught during this 74th session, what with the furore created by the Legion of Decency and the campaigning during 1934 of outside interests for elimination of block booking and other practices.

Others Cite Industry's Moves

On the other hand there are many who believe that the beneficial results of the industry's voluntary efforts to improve production standards through its own Production Code Administration may forestall any censorship attacks during the new Congress.

There is threatened an intensive demand for investigation of the motion picture code and NRA officials connected therewith when the legislation for perpetuation of the Recovery Administration comes before the senate.

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, was reported to have threatened this week to introduce a bill which would curb monopolistic practices in the industry.

Senator Copeland, of New York, was also said to have in mind a film bill of one kind or another, reputed to be intended as a check on such pictures as "Ecstasy."

Representative Sirovich, of New York, is expected again to bring up on the floor the copyright problems.

Meanwhile, the legislative committees of both Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were preparing to fight any adverse legislation.

Receipts Aid Seen

A comprehensive picture of the outlook for the coming year was given by President Roosevelt's two messages to Congress, one his annual statement as to what legislation he will desire and the other on the budget.

Better box office possibilities were seen in the President's announcement that he was desirous of abandoning direct relief for a work program which would give employment to the 3,500,000 employables among the 5,000,000 now on relief. Later he asked for $4,000,000,000 to effect this program.

The President's message, which formally signalled the opening of Congress, held no little interest for socalled "big business," including that branch of the motion picture industry. Of special significance was the President's warning that the days of unconscionable returns are over. He emphasized that this is not to be taken as an intent to destroy "profit motive."

The brighter picture which he painted in his message was, for the film industry, dimmed by his demand for continuation of the admission tax as at present until at least June 30, 1936.

The President indicated clearly that if Congress follows his suggestions no additional tax legislation will be necessary, but that if it goes on a spending spree it will have to provide the wherewithal.

Continuation of the present three-cent rate of postage on first-class mail also was recommended.

$15,000,000 Revenue Indicated

The budget itself showed that the admission tax during the fiscal year ended June 30, last, returned a revenue of $14,613,414. During the current fiscal year it is anticipated the revenue will be $15,000,000 and, if the present rate is continued, the receipts for the fiscal year 1936 will be $16,500,000. These figures are a barometer of the upturn in amusement returns.

Scattered through the budget were a number of items relating to motion pictures in the various governmental departments, the Department of Commerce being given $23,756 for its specialties and motion picture division, against $22,841 this year, and the Department of Agriculture $67,045 for the motion picture work of the extension service, against $64,426 in 1934-35. These increases, however, are required for restoration of pay levels, which return to their pre-depression status on July 1, next.

The most significant increase is one of $10,800 for the purchase and rental of films by the bureau of navigation of the Navy Department, which this year has an appropriation of $85,000 and next year will receive $95,800. These funds are used for the acquisition of films for entertainment of the enlisted personnel at sea.

Culkin and Celler Propose Federal Control Over Industry; Activity Seen from States' Legislatures This Year

Congressman Celler's motion picture bills are not considered seriously in Washington, having been before Congress for several years without action, and are looked upon as in that group of measures which are introduced and thereafter forgotten.

Among the several thousand other measures introduced at the opening of the session is one sponsored by Representative Treadway of Massachusetts, providing for a general manufacturers' excise tax of 2¼ per cent.

Films in Excise Tax Bill

The tax would apply to all articles produced in or imported into the United States except food and clothing, articles already taxed by the Government, and gasoline. Motion pictures are covered by a provision that where an article is leased or licensed the tax shall apply to the amount paid for such lease or license. This would also apply to film imports, but not to raw stock. Raw stock purchased by producers would be exempt under a provision releasing sales by one manufacturer to another or articles for further manufacture.

A bill to make it unlawful for the directors of any interstate business to pay salary, bonus or commissions in excess of $25,000 without approval of a stockholder majority was introduced Tuesday by Representative Wesley Lloyd of Washington.

Legislation proposing the creation of a federal motion picture commission which would have full control over the industry, declared in the measure to be a public utility, was introduced in the House by Congressman Culkin.

The bill is not new; it was submitted last Congress by both Mr. Culkin and Representative Patman of Texas, who will be too busy getting cash payment of the soldiers' bonus this session to bother with any other matters.

As Congress swung through its first week, some of the activities of the various state legislatures were beginning to cause concern.

In California it was reliably reported that an income tax appears a certainty.

A bill to prohibit professional baseball after 7 o'clock in the evening has been introduced in the Massachusetts Senate.

Governor Guy B. Park's proposal that Missouri double the present ½ of one per cent sales tax will be opposed by the Missouri Retailers Association, although, it is reported, the proposal is favored by many film men in the Missouri territory, who feel that the sales tax is a protection against the ever-present threat of film and admission taxes.

May Extend Mortgage Moratorium

In addition to Senator John T. McCall's proposed censorship bill in the New York legislature, the Albany lawmakers this week were considering an extension for another year of the moratorium on mortgage foreclosures. There is, also, a bill to legalize Sunday performances in legitimate theatres. Charles H. Breitbart, Democrat, Brooklyn, reintroduced his bill to censor juvenile films.

Canada, too, comes in for its share of legislative activity at this time of the year, as witness the plight of theatres in Montreal, where a battle is being fought against a new nuisance tax bill coming up this month. This is a tax of 5 per cent on all advertising.

Grand Old Girl

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The school teacher whose life is devoted entirely to the wellbeing of her many charges is eulogized in this dramatic story, wherein May Robson, that ever competent and sympathy-inspiring actress, is the epitome of all that is best in the old fashioned teacher, with ideals and ideas of character building as well as the implanting of facts in the fertile minds of her pupils.

It is throughout Miss Robson's picture, and she makes the often-tearful most of her role. That she has a large and steady following should make the selling of her picture no particularly difficult task. In the fact the film is wholly concerned with the gallant fight of the elderly high school principal for the welfare of her students, the exhibitor has an open opportunity to seek actively the patronage of the educational interests and personnel of his community. In the same measure it is a film in which parents, as such, should have a definite interest.

The names in support of Miss Robson are not especially valuable as selling points, Mary Carlisle and Alan Hale being the only two who may be expected to be particularly familiar. But Miss Robson's name alone, with the addition of emphatic selling, should be enough to carry the burden. The title may well be linked effectively with the star.

The drama of the old teacher who is ready and willing to sacrifice her post and her career and pension in the interests of the children is the dominating element of the story. The romantic interest present is but slight, the comedy but incidental, all being subordinated to the story of the teacher.

Miss Robson, high school principal and a teacher for 38 years, in defending the pupils' welfare, comes into open conflict with Hale Hamilton, who dominates the town. Miss Carlisle's daughter is as arrogant as she is wealthy. Hamilton protects Alan Hale, whose soda shop includes a back room where the pupils may drink and gamble. Miss Robson sets out to "get the goods" on Hale. Her stanchest supporter is Fred MacMurray, young truck driver, once a pupil of Miss Robson, and to whom lively Miss Carlisle is attracted, although receiving scant response from him.

Through a ruse, Miss Robson discovers the backroom, confiscates the dice, but the case against Hale is thrown out of court. She is warned that her meddling will prove troublesome, but she refuses to back down. Adopting desperate measures, she learns what shooting dice means, and with Hale's own crooked dice wins his money. Opening a rival store, with music and dancing, she is successful until Miss Carlisle and her friends start a fight, the place is closed and Miss Robson gets her notice. Hale has repented, admiring the fine spirit of his antagonist.

He arranges that the president of the United States, a former pupil, shall visit his old teacher. Before a crowd he eulogizes the school teacher and Miss Robson in particular, and the film ends with the understanding that Miss Robson shall retain her position. Miss Carlisle sees the error of her ways, through the influence of MacMurray.

On the whole, the film appears readily salable for the entire family.—AARONSON, New York.

Night Life of the Gods

(Universal)

Farce Comedy

The idea of this show—humans being turned to stone, the gods and goddesses of ancient mythology being made animate—looms as a striking subject for unique exploitation. Naturally the picture is fantastic farce comedy and, frankly, it is undeniably foolish in that quality. As entertainment formula is tossed out the window, the resulting amusement may seem more than slightly ridiculous to the critics. But introduced to the public in the proper atmosphere the ensuing popular reception is quite likely to confound those who base their opinions on the rule of the book. Where laughs, no matter how insanely procured, are the things that arouse theatre-goers, this bizarre concoction may prove an unanticipated surprise. The original novel, by the late Thorne Smith, has been widely read.

In developing the fun of the attraction there's not much of a fundamental story. Hunter Hawk has discovered the secret of reversing the natural order. Not caring very much for his in-laws and a couple of cops, he turns them to stone. Then he meets Meg, an amazing woman who maintains that she is 900 years old. Together they invade a museum and think it would be a grand stunt to bring the sculptured figures to life. They do, and in ultra modern fashion all the ancient melange have a grand and glorious time doing the things for which they are mythologically famous. Of course their antics and conflicts with the moderns result in one laugh after another. Eventually, Hawk and Meg, who during the hilarity fall in love with each other, have trouble with their re-created playmates. To solve the problem that is getting tougher and tougher, Hawk petrifies the whole gang again but in poses quite different from those in which the world has learned to identify them. Finally Hawk makes stone of Meg and himself so that they can be together.

A glance at the character names, plus a knowledge of the attraction's entertainment character, should dictate the caliber of advertising with which "Night Life of the Gods" should be sold. Where usually real names are an important adjunct, the situation, in this case, is reversed. Venus, Apollo, Diana, Mercury, Bacchus, et al, being the agents providing the unusual amusement.

Introduced to patrons as a farcical farce without one serious moment, and getting them to accept the production in the mood in which it was created by going to the most unheard-of means and making hash of all established practises, seems to be the method of capitalizing the full entertainment and commercial value.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Art director, Charles D. Hall. Sound supervision by Gilbert Kurland. Editorial supervision, Maurice Pivar. P. C. A. Certificate No. 470. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 75 minutes. ## Life Returns

(Universal)

Drama

Because in the climax this picture deals with an amazing incident, it deserves more than ordinary showmanship attention. Several months ago the accomplishment of Doctor Robert E. Cornish, University of California scientist, in restoring life to a dog was a matter of world wonder. The experiment vied with any contemporary happening as a matter of public interest. The final sequences in "Life Returns" are the actual motion pictures of Doctor Cornish's experiment.

While topical material long has been recognized as a distinctive entertainment asset, the usual film adaptation is attained by means of re-creation with either the actual participants or actors repeating the incidents. In such occasion, though there is realism, the illusion of actuality is merely the result of theatrical technique. Topical drama in this picture has the advantage of being grippingly real and factually actual as well.

To develop the situation which is the show's outstanding entertainment and commercial feature, the director has created a human interest fictionized situation. Three young medical graduates become associated with a philanthropic research laboratory. Doctor Kendrick devotes himself to the age-baffling question of finding a formula that will restore life after death. The incident which shatters his hope of immediate discovery also reveals the sham under which the philanthropic institution operates.

Years pass and the doctor, vainly but courageously searching for the secret, becomes a disappointment to his friends. Eventually in a crisis that means much to his son, Danny, he confesses that his knowledge of practical medicine and surgery is nil. As the son turns against the father, dog catchers capture and gas his pet, Lazurus. Kendrick goes to the pound and gets the dog's body. The rest of the theatricalism is subjugated to Dr. Cornish's experiment. With Kendrick, the discoverer of the necessary fluid, making offstage comment, the actual workings of the Cornish experiment are completely and minutely shown. Naturally the show's actor hero is hailed as a miracle man, but Cornish is shown as a real one.

If there was enough public interest in the original experiment to keep it a matter of front page news interest for weeks, it certainly seems that there should be enough showmanship ingenuity to make it equally interesting and attractive on the screen. It may not prove an easy feat to accomplish, but it surely does make possible a talking about something new. The human interest angle of the sustantiating story also should be given a little attention. There is pathos to the drama of the man's life and also to that of his son.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(Associated British Pictures)

Musical Comedy

The outstanding merit of this British picture is the combination of really strong story value with a series of performances by well known radio and variety artists, some of them American, which are definitely entertaining and original. Much of the material is British and will be new to American audiences, an asset in some stations and a drawback in others. There is a final color sequence, by the New British process Dufaycolor, which has technical weaknesses but provides a good spectacular climax.

Essentially the activities of the National Broadcasting Group, as pictured, are a satire of the method of the official British Broadcasting Corporation. This is reflected in scenes showing the staff working under conditions of military discipline, and the departmental yesmen who surround the director general. The American public may miss this point, and the bit on "high brow" items, but the episodes have intrinsic humor.

All the individual performances fit neatly into the plot development.

The story follows: The busiest man in the N.B.G., the complaints manager, fails to recognize the director general and tells him what he thinks of the program with such vigor that he is entrusted with the job of program organizer, with a free hand. He gathers a remarkable collection of talent but, on the eve of his first broadcast, the bar is put up by a theatre group who have the artistes under contract. He sets to and recruits a new set of performers from the staff of the broadcasting station. An inventor, opportunely presenting himself, is enabled to score a big triumph by putting the show over by television in color, screens being erected in public places for the purpose.

Clifford Mollison in the lead has pep and humor, and Helen Chandler makes an attractive secretary for him. Alberta Hunter, the Three Sailors, Eve Becke, Will Hay, Haver and Lee, Ronald Frankau, Teddy Joyce and his band, and a host of others put over their special acts.

Exploitation here must make an asset of the British material, and of the fact that a satire of British broadcasting is being presented, and where that appeal can be made good the real originality of the plot and speed of the treatment may balance the absence of obvious American values.—Allan, London.

Death at Broadcasting House

(ABFD-British)

Mystery Drama

There is considerable originality in both plot and setting of this British production. It provides an interesting and accurate picture of the methods followed in the official headquarters of broadcasting in a country where the air is a Government monopoly. The central dramatic idea is well put over, and is such as to lend itself to exploitation.

The main appeal in America is likely to rest on the story, but some use may be made of the fact that the actual studios of Broadcasting House have been filmed. There are interesting contrasts with American methods and, among other things, a detailed illustration of the "synthetizing" of radio drama; actors are in one studio, musicians in another, effects workers in a third, and the director controls the whole from a central station.

The story largely depends for its effectiveness on this fact. An actor in a radio play, whose part demands that he shall be strangled at the microphone, is actually murdered when the scene is reached. He is alone in a studio and his dying gasps are regarded as a particularly effective piece of acting. His fate is not discovered for some moments.

The most obvious suspects are the director of dramatic broadcasts, a star actor in the cast, the director of variety, an attendant, a member of the public "audience," and a dramatist. Eventually a detective arrives at the truth by staging a reconstruction of the crime which establishes that the dramatist has arranged a false alibi by means of a six-minutes' telephone call covering the period of the crime.

Various details of the development are not only clever in themselves but will suggest good showmanship ideas. One is the use of the Blattnerphone, instrument which records sound on a steel wire for later repetition. The murder scene had been so recorded, so that the actual sounds made by the dying man can be reproduced and their effect on the various suspects observed.

There is also a good idea in the fact that the sound of a ticking watch has been recorded. All the "possible" criminals' watches are collected and their sounds transmitted by microphone for comparison.

All this helps to create a good atmosphere of suspense which is heightened by the originality of the setting. There is an incidental point of appeal in the introduction of such well-known British characters and broadcasters as Hannen Swaffer, Vernon Bartlett, Gillie Potter, the Gershob Parkington quintette and Eve Becke. The atmosphere is English without any qualification, and that also applies to the accent; where that is not a disqualification, there is good entertainment value.—Allan, London.

Only Eight Hours

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

The drama, romance and thrill of this picture is told principally against the background and atmosphere of a metropolitan hospital. Essentially it is a character drama of a young doctor more interested in being of service to humanity than in adhering rigidly to hospital rules and regulations when it's a matter of life and death.

Well presented and acted with an air of understandable realism, the picture moves fast, establishes its major points of interest quickly, and holds them expertly. While heavily dialogued in spots, there is sufficient action and just enough illusion to permit the imagination to function. Definitely serious in tone, the picture in fulfilling the impression created by the title crowds much interest into the period covered by its most dramatic scenes.

In the beginning it portrays effectively Chester Morris' willingness to pay scant heed to house rules and thus jeopardize a promising career by violating ethics in a life or death occasion. Dismissal, which forebodes failure in his life work and also menaces his romantic inclinations with Virginia Bruce as she seems to favor the more law-abiding Doctor Robert Taylor, takes on an added interest when Morris comes under the wing of the smitten Billie Burke.

The picture builds to its dramatic climax when Morris, who has been reinstated as a member of the hospital staff, directs a difficult and dangerous operation upon himself. His heroism naturally wins the girl back and firmly establishes him in his vocation.

In incorporating tried and proved entertainment element within itself, the picture is one for which good showmanship should do much. With the title to begin with there is ample room for much ingenious and unusual exploitation. While it lends itself readily to contacts with members of the medical and nursing profession, means to arouse attention of the general public should not be overlooked.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Rustlers of Red Gap

(Universal)

Action Serial

Universal offers a new, extremely active western serial, which, however cut to pattern it may be, and however stereotyped many of the performances are, nevertheless presents a maximum of the sort of western action that the youngsters should go for in a really enthusiastic way. It is a bit too much of the old and venerable school of "movies" of an earlier day to be expected to attract any number of adults, but for the younger element it should be highly satisfactory. Not only are the cowboys and the bandits in action, but there are the Indians, droves of them, herds of buffalo and even the ancient and honored cavalry of the western plains, since the story is that of the period of the settling of the West. Indian raids, on homes and caravans of covered wagons, marauding bandits, preying on gold and settlers, and the dashing, hard-riding cowboy hero, played energetically by John Mack Brown, all are here. In support are Joyce Compton, in the feminine lead; Walter Miller and Raymond Hatton, as Brown's partners; H. L. Woods and Frederic MacKaye, as the leaders of the villainy, and such oldtimers as William Desmond, Lafe McKee and Jim Thorpe, the Indian. The first three chapters promise much in the way of action to sustain the interest, and each ends, of course, on a sufficiently harrowing moment of danger to hero or heroine. These chapters are titled "Hostile Redskins," "Flaming Arrows" and "Thundering Hoofs," and the running time is 26 minutes, 18 minutes and 21 minutes, respectively.

Old Faithful Speaks

(First Division-Audio)

Novel, Interesting

The first of a new series, "Thrilling Journeys," by Audio Productions, released by First Division, this takes the audience into Yellowstone National Park, there to see, and especially to hear, the activity of some of the natural wonders in which the place abounds. The great falls, the numerous hot springs and gaseous pools are especially interesting when the actual sounds they produce are authentically recorded. The highlight of the subject, preceded by a screened diagram indicating the volcanic subterranean forces at work beneath the famous Old Faithful geyser, is the sight and sound of the phenomenon bursting into action with a mighty roar, as pent natural energies are suddenly released. Novel and interesting.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Revue a la Carte

(Universal)

Fair

What is really a group of vaudeville turns, in the setting of a night club, makes for fair entertainment in this number of the Mentone musical series, with Jans acting as master of ceremonies. He introduces in turn Bryant, Rains and Young, dancers; Alice Dawn, vocalist; Tom Patricola, of the mandolin and educated feet; Hal Whalen and himself in a skit in which Jans gets much the worst of it, and the Maxcellos, five acrobats, who toss Patricola about to end the subject, which is diversified and lively.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Irish Melody

Excellent

In this new group of Musical Moods subjects, produced by Audio Productions and distributed by First Division, the producers have maintained the standard of pictorial excellence and musical reproduction achieved in the initial series. The photography, in three-color Technicolor, is of the best, bringing out all the natural beauty for which the countryside of Ireland is noted. Several popular Irish melodies are the backbone of the subject, accompanied by scenic material of an appropriate nature, done by Robert Bruce. This, and the others of the series, appear a valuable adjunct to the exhibitor's program.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Palooka from Paducah

Very Good Comedy

A comedy of unusual quality, replete with real laughs, is this latest Buster Keaton comedy, in which, in support of Buster are his father, Joseph; his mother, Myra, and his sister, Louise, as well as Dewey Robinson and Bull Montana. Kentucky mountaineers, they are hard put when prohibition is repealed, and Pa decides son Elmer (Robinson) should be a wrestler. There is entertainment in Buster's attempts to train his brother. In the ring Montana is trouncing Robinson, with Buster as referee, when Montana accidentally hits Ma, who has stormed into the ring. From that point Dewey proceeds to pulverize Montana. It is forthright, straight comedy, and funny.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Switzerland, the Beautiful

(MGM)

Excellent

Rating as an exceptional short subject of the travel variety, this film, produced by James A. FitzPatrick, is filmed in the beautiful natural color of the country which it pictures. The small nation, ever peaceful, set at the foot of the snow-covered Alps, and at the same time studded with green pasture lands, lakes and rushing mountain streams, presents a remarkable opportunity for effective color photography, of which the producers have certainly made the most. This rates as an outstanding color subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Harlem Harmony

Tuneful

A fairly tuneful subject, this features Ben Carter and his Pickaninny Choir, juvenile Negro singers, who are in a small way entertaining with their rendition of Negro spirituals and more popular and modern material. Their vocalization is at its best when a quartet of boys handles the burden of the song, accompanied by the rest of the choir. A bit of tap dancing is added for variety.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Geneva-by-the-Lake

(Fox)

Interesting

One of the excellent travel series, Magic Carpet of Movietone, this carries the audience to Geneva, the city of Switzerland which has become, in the center of a neutral country, the headquarters of virtually all world organization dedicated to the peace of the world. With the usual fine camera work which characterizes this series, are seen the beautiful lake and its surrounding scenery, watch making, the remarkable examples of sculpture and architecture, and the picturesque native quarter of the city, centuries old. A good travel subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Dumb Luck

Fair

Mr. and Mrs. Goodman Ace, otherwise known as the Easy Aces, offer only fair comedy in this number of the Marriage Wow series. The comedy lies entirely in the inexpressable "dumbness" of Mrs. Ace, but that can begin to pall after a time. When she wins $50 on a sweepstakes ticket, the story gets about that the winning is far greater, and she is kidnaped. But so unaccountably stupid is she that her captors are only too glad to pay her to return to her home, while the chief kidnaper goes insane. It has its moments.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Bird Man

(Columbia)

Good

A good cartoon subject, in which Krazy Kat, the ingenious feline, fancies himself a bird, and builds himself a pair of wooden wings. As he takes to flight, he plunges into a tar barrel, through a pillow and emerges feathered from head to foot. The birds about are alarmed and flee, but when he is attacked by a buzzard, and vanquishes that foe, he is welcomed, until a fall shatters his feather coat and his illusions.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Gay Old Days

Good

Highly enjoyable is this subject in the Song Hit Story group, with the rendition of numerous of the popular ballads of the Nineties, by Frank Luther, Brandt, Fowler and Curran, and Jean Lacy, chiefly. In a setting of a Bowery corner in the New York of the Day Before Yesterday, the trio sing as they wait for their sweethearts, and the cop and the fireman woo the nursemaid, singing, with her, that charmingly lyrical and wholly entertaining "No, No, A Thousand Times No." Good.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Italian Caprice

Colorful

For the visual accompaniment to the Russian composer Tschaikowsky's famous Italian Caprice, Robert Bruce, who produced this Musical Moods series for Audio Productions, went into Italy, and with Technicolor cameras caught much of the beauty of the mountain region of the north and all of the color of the lively annual traditional flag festival and horse race of the city of Siena. Between the two is pictured a brilliant religious festival, each of the scenes in the subject indicative pictorially of what the composer meant to express in his music. It is a subject of excellent quality.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The First Snow

Entertaining

An enjoyable Terry-Toon cartoon, in which the innumerable puppies who live in a shoe dash out with sleds and skates at the first snowfall. When the stout and very feminine pig falls into the stream and is being rushed away on an ice-floe, the puppies go to the rescue successfully. Not exceptional, it is a good cartoon.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Barcarolle

Unusual Quality

All the beauty which lies in and about the canals of Venice has been caught with brilliant effectiveness by the Technicolor cameras in this Musical Moods pictorial accompaniment by Robert Bruce to a reproduction of the justly famed musical score of the Barcarolle from the opera, "The Tales of Hoffman" by Offenbach. Moving slowly in what is actually an impressionistic picture of the Italian city, the subject closes with a remarkable picture of the setting sun, in full color. The film is "class," with the universal appeal inherent in scenic beauty and good music.—Running time, 8 minutes.

NRA Hearings On Codes Start In Washington

Drastic revision of the NRA's 540 codes of fair competition, to conform to new policies, was anticipated as hearings began in Washington Wednesday, the first concerned with price fixing. The first hearing having to do with the motion picture code is set for January 18 before Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth, on minimum wage scales for Greater New York projectionists. The industry is particularly interested in the January 30 hearing, when employment provisions are to be considered. Hearings on the trade practice provisions of the film code are expected to follow.

The Motion Picture Code Authority this week unanimously approved the resolution of the Buffalo clearance and zoning board requesting the Code Authority's permission to suspend the proposed schedule of clearance and zoning for 1934-35, and in so doing gave rise to general speculation as to whether the Authority might make similar moves in all zones.

Representatives of the industry will be given an opportunity January 22 to present their views on the code budget and method of assessment for 1935.

Voicing sharp criticism of the recovery codes, the Consumers' Advisory Board this week, on the eve of the opening of general hearings on the agreements by the National Industrial Review Board, fired the first shot of an attack on the industrial agreements which is expected to have repercussions in Congress later in the session.

Charging that "special interests" dictated the fair trade practice provisions of many of the codes, with the effect that they have served to restrict rather than expand competition and to have brought about increases in prices to the disadvantage of the consumers, the board recommended the elimination from the "vast majority" of agreements of all but the labor provisions and a few standard trade practice rules.

The state's right to enforce the motion picture code and other regulatory agreements of the federal authorities was upheld Tuesday in a decision by Supreme Court Justice Byrne in Brooklyn.

The court granted a temporary injunction against the Flatbush theatre, accused by Morris Barth, formerly an operator there, of violating the code by reducing wages.

Justice Byrne directed the Addie Company, operator of the theatre, to refund the difference between the original and the reduced wages to Barth, estimated at $900.

To Form New Ad Group on Coast

Initial plans for an organization patterned after the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York were drawn at a meeting of studio publicity men at Levy's Tavern in Hollywood Tuesday. Tom Baily of Paramount was named temporary president and Al Parmentor of Fox as secretary. Membership is to be confined to studio staffs.

SMPE Group Hears Paper by Technician

The Atlantic Coast section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its regular monthly meeting last Wednesday at the Institute of the Electrical Association of New York headquarters. Rudolf Wolf of Electrical Research Products read a paper on "Visual Accompaniment," describing methods of providing music and speech accompaniment for films in natural color.

General Theatres Reorganizing Near

Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of Chase National Bank, in his annual report to stockholders Tuesday in New York, declared reorganization of General Theatres Equipment is close at hand. During the past year, Mr. Aldrich said, further progress has been made in reorganization and liquidation of the bank's investment position in the industry, and the investment in Fox Film Corporation has been reduced by sale of 200,000 shares of Class A stock at $15 a share, with additional shares placed under option at higher figures for limited periods. Fox Film continues to operate practicably, he said.

Mr. Aldrich said that "the Loew's, Inc., stock acquired by the bank as a result of the foreclosure of the two-year secured gold notes of the Film Securities Corp. in the principal amount of approximately $5,000,000 held by the bank has been liquidated without loss."

Theatre Presses Radio Complaint

The legitimate theatre code authority, in New York, is drafting a new appeal to the Federal Communications Commission, following receipt of a reply to an earlier appeal which declared that the board has no jurisdiction over attendance at radio broadcasts. Dr. Henry Moskowitz, vice-chairman of the legitimate theatre code authority, is preparing the new appeal.

The authority took the action initially in an effort to obtain a prohibition of free radio broadcasts, deemed unfair competition. The Commission's reply, signed by John B. Reynolds, acting secretary, apparently was confined to the free broadcasts held recently by the Standard Oil Company.

Loew's 12 Week Net $2,001,308

A net profit for the 12 weeks ended Nov. 22, 1934, amounting to $2,001,308 after subsidiaries' preferred dividends and after depreciation and taxes, was reported this week. This compares with net profit of $1,137,999 for the same period of 1933.

The profit reported this week is equivalent to $14.64 a share of preferred stock, compared with $11.53 a year ago, and $1.23 a share of common, compared with 95 cents.

G.P. Baker, Noted Dramatic Critic, Dies in New York

George Pierce Baker, noted critic of the American drama and the teacher of many of today's playwrights, actors, critics and designers, died on Sunday at the Neurological Institute in New York after having been under medical care for a heart ailment for more than four years. He was 68 years old.

In the course of his career of 36 years at Harvard University and eight at Yale, Dr. Baker had among his students many men who have become famous in the theatre. He was once described by President-Emeritus A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard as the father of dramatic writing in the United States.

In 1925 Dr. Baker left Harvard to take charge of the Yale drama department. In eight years under his direction it trained many film and stage actors, stage managers, playwrights, critics and producers.

Radio Group Receives Setback

The Pennsylvania Broadcasting Company's anti-trust suit for dissolution of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers received a setback in New York Tuesday when the complaining radio group won its motion to require the Society to supply it with a complete list of music of titles to which the Society holds the copyrights. The setback came when Federal Judge Julian W. Mack ruled that Pennsylvania Broadcasting would have to pay for the work of compilation.

The Society estimates it has between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 titles under control and that preparation of a complete list would require the labor of six persons for six months, 10 hours daily, and would cost about $250,000.

AMPA Holds First 1935 Open Meeting

The first open meeting of 1935 of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held in New York Thursday, saw a re-enactment of the March of Time presentation of Film Daily's Ten Best Films of 1934. Officials of First Division distributors, and executives of March of Time reel were guests.

Gaumont Picture at Roxy

The Gaumont British picture, "Unfinished Symphony," about to be released here, will have its premiere at the Roxy in New York on Friday, when the National Republican Builders, in which many prominent people in society are interested, will attend.

Mickey Mouse in Color

Walt Disney, this week, announced that beginning with "The Band Concert," a Mickey Mouse to be released through United Artists on February 9, all films coming from his studios will be entirely in Technicolor.

NEW NAME, NEW MONEY, NEW NOTION GIVEN INDUSTRY WITH JOCK WHITNEY

Arts and Horseflesh First Loves of Young Sportsman with Illustrious Background in Finance and Society

By FRED AYER

At the hunt, and on the polo field, John Hay (Jock) Whitney is a noted horseman. The actual head of Pioneer Development Corporation, holding company for his motion picture interests, which also include large investment in Technicolor, is shown here with Mrs. Whitney at a recent hunts meeting.

Jock Whitney, socialite, sportsman, patron of the arts and very much of a young-man-about-town, appears to be "going places" in the motion picture orbit. It is, in fact, considered by many, including stockholders of Technicolor, Inc., that he may do really great things for the industry and especially for the stockholders and Technicolor. Inasmuch as Mr. Whitney contemplates a complete schedule of features all in Technicolor it is to be supposed that he will please the stockholders, especially if he continues to act as pacemaker in this line for the rest of the industry.

Just past 30, and as the power behind the throne of an organization known as the Pioneer Development Corporation, Jock—or John Hay Whitney, as he is known to the registrar of births, marriages, et al—already has lent his more than willing financial genius to the betterment of things cinematic and at this writing shows growing interest in the Hollywood scene.

First Interest in Art and Horses

When Jock Whitney was graduated from Yale University—currently the home of footballing Larry Kelley and, more latterly, of the famous Ted Coy, who also had a fling in one way or another at the film industry—he had a keen ambition to write his name in theatrical annals as a patron of the arts and, at the same time, to set himself up in the sporting world as a connoisseur of horseflesh. To back up these ambitions he had acquired, through inheritance from his father, the late Payne Whitney, a fortune approximating $30,000,000.

In 1926, apparently, the possibilities of the motion picture had not occurred to him. A few years later he bought 180,000 shares of Technicolor, Inc. stock at $3, and when it reached $9 he sold one-half of his holdings, netting him $520,000. Today he is said to hold at least 23 per cent interest in Technicolor.

Immediately after leaving the environs of New Haven, however, Jock Whitney launched his career as "patron of the arts." He became an outstanding benefactor to Broadway producers, or, as the wiseacres have it, an "angel." Observers have noted from time to time that Mr. Whitney's career in this respect has not been altogether successful. To be sure, there were such plays as "The Gay Divorcee" which enjoyed lengthy runs on Broadway, but it is pointed out that if a play does not make money, in fact loses it, no matter how long it occupies the spotlight it cannot be dubbed a success. More recently, Mr. Whitney had an "interest" in an unhappy vehicle known as "Dark Victory," which lasted a matter of six weeks, although it was common knowledge along Broadway that the play, in which Miss Tallulah Bankhead appeared, was losing money steadily from the opening performance. "The Gay Divorcee," although it made no money, at least kept the Whitney name in the limelight for 248 performances.

Meantime the Whitney heir had turned his attentions to the development of his racing stables, acquiring stud farms at Saratoga, Llangollen, in Virginia, Kentucky, Long Island and a small stable in England. Here again, Jock was not too successful. He was, in fact, outstripped all along the racing line by his own mother, Mrs. Payne Whitney, and his aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who recently has figured to some extent in a legal disagreement over her young niece, Gloria Vanderbilt.

It has always been said of Jock Whitney that he never does anything in half-hearted fashion. Each and every enterprise on which he has embarked he has followed through to the often bitter end, and while he may have been disappointed once or twice as a racing man, the common admission among gentlemen of the turf is that his Saratoga stud farm is the finest anywhere in the eastern section of the country. The stable at Llangollen, Mr. Whitney recently gave to his wife, the former Elizabeth Artemus, the daughter of a coal operator. He had spent over $1,000,000 on the development of this farm and stable, but when young Mrs. Whitney admitted to friends that she loved Llangollen "more than anything else in the world," her husband turned it over to her, entire.

Jock Whitney's entrance into the motion picture field was, it is said, engineered or encouraged by Edward P. ("Ted") Curtis, sales manager of the motion picture film department of Eastman Kodak Company. Mr. Curtis had served in the War as a major in the U. S. Air Service and during this time struck a lasting friendship with one Merian C. Cooper, soldier, adventurer and, later, motion picture producer. When Jock Whitney became interested in motion pictures and was casting around for a producer to whom he could entrust problems of production, Mr. Curtis of Eastman obligingly suggested Mr. Cooper of RKO Radio.

Mr. Cooper of RKO Radio to date is the only producer who has received Mr. Whitney's backing, although Mr. Whitney was very much behind "La Cucaracha," the three-color Technicolor short subject which Radio released last year. Currently Mr. Whitney is devoting his attention to the all-Technicolor feature, "Becky Sharp," production on which was held up temporarily by the death of Lowell Sherman, director. Rouben Mamoulian is now carrying on in Mr. Sherman's place.

Four of Family in Technicolor

It was reported recently that young Mr. Whitney has available $7,000,000 in cash for the production of all-color feature pictures. Persons in positions giving them better authority than mere "observation" set the above amount at somewhat nearer $2,000,000. Not that Mr. Whitney would not spend $7,000,000 if he felt like it, they say, but he is biding his time with $2,000,000 for the present.

In addition to his participation in Technicolor, various other members of his family have holdings which cannot at this time be accurately estimated. It is known, however, that when the Technicolor idea first hit the Whitneys, Jock Whitney, his mother, his sister, Joan Whitney Payson, and his cousin, Cornelius Vanderbilt (Sonny) Whitney, each invested $250,000.

Pioneer Development Corporation is a holding company for Pioneer Pictures, the Whitney producing company. It is presided over by Lowell Calvert, who recently was general sales manager of Gaumont British Pictures Corporation of America, and whose career in the film industry dates back to 1907 when he became associated with George K. Spoor. Mr. Calvert has been identified with exhibition as well as production and the equipment field, and for a time was associated with RCA Photophone, subsequently taking up his Gaumont connection and going last summer to the management of the Whitney interests.

Mr. Calvert attends to all the business details of Mr. Whitney's varied theatrical enterprises; acquires story material for future productions, and goes to Broadway plays.

The official set-up of Pioneer Pictures, which in reality does not exist at all, will have, when Merian C. Cooper's two remaining pictures for RKO Radio have been completed, probably in May, Jock Whitney as president and Mr. Cooper as vice-president in charge of all Whitney production.

Mr. Calvert said Tuesday that all Pioneer productions in the future will be in Technicolor exclusively.

Illustrious Predecessors

In addition to his own personal financial capabilities, Jock Whitney brings to the motion picture industry the background of a long line of illustrious heritage, men and women who have been successful both in finance and the world of Society with a capital "S." His late uncle, Harry Payne Whitney, inherited about $100,000,000 when his father, the Hon. William Collins Whitney, died. Harry Payne, when he died in 1930, left about that same $100,000,000.

On the other hand, Jock's father, Payne Whitney, inherited a paltry $4,000,000, but when Payne died, in the latter part of Jock's career at Yale, he had increased this sum to $100,000,000, which total was split between Jock Whitney, mother and sister.

Stroked Junior Varsity

Like his father before him, Jock Whitney was a rowing man. Payne Whitney, back in the closing years of the last century, stroked the Yale Varsity crew and subsequently made the University the handsome present of Gales Ferry, since then Yale's rowing headquarters. The son did not make the Varsity, but he stroked the Junior Varsity crew, and was tapped for the society of Scroll and Keys, one of the highest undergraduate honors Yale has to offer.

A friend of Jock Whitney went with him one day down to his mother's estate on Long Island. As they drove up to the house, the friend noticed a luxurious Lincoln limousine standing just beyond the porte cochere. Said the friend:

"I didn't know your Mother drove a Lincoln, Jock."

"She doesn't," Jock replied blithely. "That belongs to Mother's butler."

Jock's valet, it is reported, is the proud possessor of an airplane.

And all Jock Whitney has is some $30,000,000, a sizable block of Technicolor and ambition to "belong" to that select coterie known as motion picture producers.

Tri-Ergon Patent Upheld by Highest Court in Germany

By JOACHIM K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

The supreme court of the Reich in Leipzig last week upheld the validity of the Tri-Ergon double print patent, the decision being handed down in an action brought against Tri-Ergon, A. G., by one of its licensees.

In 1928 Tobis Patent Holding Company was founded in Germany and acquired, among other rights which came into the possession of this company after the advent of sound, the patents which had been granted the Tri-Ergon inventors—Hans Vogt, Dr. Jo Engl and Joseph Massolle. Since that time the double print patent was among the most important assets of the Tobis company and repeatedly was referred to in legal battles between Tobis and independent German sound film manufacturers such as Breusing Company and Friess A. G.

In 1932 Hubert Schonger Company, Ltd., in combination with the UFA and the AFIFA (Aktiengesellschaft fur Film-Fabrikation) film printing plants, filed a suit against Tobis alleging insurmountable restrictions for the entire German industry as a result of the double print patent. In the first two courts the Schonger-UFA-AFIFA group lost the decision, and appealed. The supreme court at Leipzig, highest court in the Reich, last week handed down a decision in favor of the Tobis group, thereby upholding the double print patent and again rejecting the claims of the UFA-AFIFA group. At the same time, the court reaffirmed the verdict of the appeals court, increasing the sum involved from 60,000 to 200,000 Reichsmarks.

In New York last week, Federal Judge Coxe reserved decision on the application of the American Tri-Ergon company for permission to amend its proof of claim against Paramount Publix to include a claim for an indeterminate amount for alleged infringement of the flywheel patent.

Hearst Reel Films Rose Fete in Color

Hearst Metrotone Newsreel last week in Hollywood released to 17 local theatres 85 feet of reel picturing, in natural color, the Pasadena Rose Festival parade. The theatres were exhibiting the reel six hours after the scenes were taken.

Arrangements were worked out by C. J. Hubbell, Coast editor of the reel; Carroll Dunning, whose color process was used, and David Blankenhorn of Cosmo Color, Inc. In all, 1,200 feet of negative was shot. No mechanical aids, such as reflectors, were used, the bright sunlight serving alone. Dodge Dunning and William L. Prager did the actual camera work. It is not intended that the sequence shall be released for general distribution, chiefly because of the cost element.

ALLIED HAS NEW PLANS FOR CODE, LEGISLATION, NEW CONSTITUTION

Demands Inquiry on Code, End of Block Booking, Laws to Stop "Extortions" of Composers Society

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, working from headquarters at Washington, started this week to lay the groundwork of a comprehensive program which will include:

(1) Enactment of a new Allied constitution and by-laws.
(2) A legislative campaign in Congress.
(3) A plan for amending the motion picture code.

Calling upon Allied exhibitor members to contact every Congressman and Senator at Washington in support of a new legislative program, the national association demanded that Congress conduct an investigation into the negotiation, writing and administration of the motion picture code and that it enact legislation to end compulsory block booking and to amend copyright laws so as to terminate the "extortions" of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

To coordinate effort in this connection the directors have selected Washington for the annual board meeting, tentatively scheduled for January 24th and 25th.

Allied leaders are urged to bring to the meeting members who have strong Congressional contacts who can be used to offset the efforts of so called "Hays lobbyists" on hand in Washington, "bent on perpetuating the domination of the big eight under the code and in defeating anti-block booking legislation."

Voting on New Constitution

Allied headquarters this week sent forth to the state affiliates copies of a new constitution and by-laws which already have been approved by the board of directors, and these are to be executed by the several regional associations immediately. When this has been done, the organic law of Allied will conform to the structure of the present national organization, the documents not having been formally amended following changes made in 1932.

Allied's national convention will be held in May, at Atlanta.

National Allied headquarters gave the lie to reports crediting the organization with plans for a new national exhibitor association. "It would require years of scheming, maneuvering and proselytizing before enough of an organization could be formed to wield the slightest influence," said an official statement, which warned independent owners that "prating of a new national organization by a few selfish leaders who are unwilling to take their places at the Allied board, is the bunk and is as treacherous to the independents as it is futile."

Details of New Plan for Code

The organization Monday made known the details of the plan adopted at New Orleans last month for obtaining necessary amendments to the motion picture code.

"This plan," it was said, "cuts through all controversy and confusion, strikes directly at producer-domination of existing code machinery, and leaves it to a new and balanced Code Authority to recommend to the National Industrial Recovery Board necessary changes to

Allied States Association Drafts New Constitution and New By-Laws

The national board of directors of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, Abram F. Myers, chairman, has unanimously approved a new constitution and new by-laws for execution by the several regional Allied associations. It is expected that a sufficient number of these state associations will have executed approval in time for final and formal adoption by the national directorate at its January meeting, to be held either on the 24th or 25th, at Washington. Text of the new constitution and new by-laws, which give effect to changes adopted, but not made, in 1932, follow in full:

Amended Constitution

ARTICLE I
Name

The name of this association shall be the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS.

ARTICLE II
Objects

The objects of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall be generally to promote and protect the interests of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States in every lawful way; and, to the extent that the interests of the exhibitors coincide with the interests of other divisions of the motion picture industry, to promote and protect the interests of the industry as a whole.

ARTICLE III
Form of Organization

The ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall be an unincorporated non-profit association, in the form of a federation, its membership consisting of the subscribing regional associations of motion picture exhibitors and governed by a board of directors composed of one duly designated representative from each such subscribing regional association.

ARTICLE IV
Powers

In attaining its declared objects the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall have and exercise power

(a) To cooperate with and by agreement represent the subscribing associations and the exhibitor interests represented by them in all relations with the Federal and State governments and with the public generally.

(b) To cooperate with and by agreement represent the subscribing associations and the exhibitor interests represented by them in negotiations and dealings with other divisions of the motion picture industry and with the suppliers of equipment.

(c) To use its endeavors to secure for exhibitors belonging to the subscribing associations an adequate supply and equitable distribution of motion picture films and theatre equipment upon terms that are non-discriminatory, reasonable and just.

(d) To use its endeavors to promote and secure fair methods of competition in the motion picture industry and to combat unfair competitive methods, restraint of trade and monopoly wherever in said industry the same shall appear.

(e) To gather, compile and disseminate to the organizations entitled to receive the same useful information regarding matters of interest to or affecting exhibitors, including the policies and activities of the producer-distributors, affiliated circuits, labor organizations and the various departments and agencies of government.

(f) To acquaint the public and the various departments and agencies of government with conditions in the motion picture industry affecting the motion picture exhibitors.

(g) To aid and encourage directly and by cooperation with others both within and without the motion picture industry the development of higher standards of entertainment and of moral and cultural values in the production of motion pictures.

(h) To prescribe standards of excellence in the operation of theatres and to issue a suitable seal or emblem for display by the members of subscribing associations who pledge themselves to maintain and do maintain such standards.

(i) To form a corporation or corporations with the capital stock to be held by the Treasurer as trustee for all the subscribing associations for the purpose of carrying on any and all activities in the interest of the motion picture exhibitors not appropriate for an unincorporated non-profit association to engage in.

(j) To formulate and adopt by-laws and other rules and regulations for the government of the Association and for carrying its powers into execution.

(k) To do all other acts and things necessary or proper to the attainment of the objects of the Association.

ARTICLE V
Membership

Section 1. Any duly organized regional association of motion picture exhibitors under independent management and control is eligible for membership in the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS, subject to the approval of the Board of Directors. Execution of a copy of this Amended Constitution through proper organization action shall constitute existing members of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS members under this Amended Constitution. Regional associations not members of said Association on the date of the approval of this Amended Constitution may apply for membership by forwarding a duly executed copy hereof to the principal office of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS. Such regional associations may then be admitted to the privileges and obligations of membership by action of the Board of Directors.

Section 2. The Board of Directors by a two-thirds vote may expel any subscribing organization or individual member for conduct contrary to the Constitution of December 12, 1934, and these By-Laws, and the policies of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS formulated thereunder, for conduct prejudicial to the interests of the motion picture exhibitors in any territory or as a whole, and for failure to discharge their obligations to support the Association.

Section 3. Individual exhibitors in unorganized territories or territories wherein there is no subscribing association may, upon payment of a monthly fee to be prescribed by the Board of Directors or embodied in the by-laws, be admitted to the benefits and privileges of membership but without direct representation on the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE VI
Management

The management and control of ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall be vested in a Board of Directors and an Executive Committee of said Board of Directors empowered to act, ad interim, as may be provided in the by-laws. The Board of Directors may delegate any part of its powers to any standing or special committee of the Board, or to any officer of the Association, for the performance of specific duties, the acts of any such committee or officer being subject to ratification by the Board.

ARTICLE VII
Officers

Section 1. The officers of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall be (a) a President, (b) a Chairman of the Board of Directors, (c) not less than three nor more than seven Regional Vice-Presidents, (d) a General Counsel, (e) a Secretary and (f) a Treasurer.

Section 2. These officers (other than Regional Vice-Presidents) shall be elected by the Board of Directors at the annual January meeting of the Association and shall serve for one year or until their successors are elected. Vacancies in all such offices may be filled by the Board at any time, but only for the unexpired term. Regional Vice-Presidents shall be appointed by the President who shall also have power to fill any vacancies therein. The duties of any two or more offices except those of President and Regional Vice-President may be performed by the same person. The duties of the officers shall be prescribed in the by-laws.

ARTICLE VIII

Member Representation

Each subscribing association shall be entitled to representation in the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS by appointing one representative to the Board of Directors, together with such alternate or alternates or observers as it may see fit to designate. All persons participating in the proceedings of the Board of Directors must bear the credentials of a subscribing association and each such association shall be allowed only one vote.

ARTICLE IX

Amendments and By-laws

Section 1. This Amended Constitution and By-Laws of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS may be amended at any meeting of the Board of Directors by a majority vote of the directors present, or by the written consent of a majority of said directors, provided three weeks' notice of the meeting of proposal to amend shall have been given all directors together with a copy of the proposed amendment.

Section 2. The By-Laws of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall provide the rules and regulations governing the management and conduct of the Association. Until added to or amended the by-laws shall be of the terms and tenor of the by-laws attached hereto, bearing even date herewith.

ARTICLE X

Effective Date

Section 1. This Amended Constitution may for convenience be referred to as the Constitution of December 12, 1934.

Section 2. This Amended Constitution shall be in force as organic law of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS when executed by a majority of the existing members, which fact shall be promulgated at the proper time by the Chairman of the Board. In the meantime, the status of the Association and its existing members, and their relations one to another, shall remain unchanged.

In witness whereof we have caused our name (or names) to be subscribed hereto by our respective proper officer (or officers) thereunto duly authorized as of the 12th day of December, 1934.

ARTICLE I

Applications for Membership

Section 1. Application for membership in the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall consist in forwarding to the principal office of the Association in Washington, D. C., a duly executed copy of the Constitution of December 12, 1934, together with information as to the name and (in general) the organization and membership of the applicant, the territory covered by the applicant, and the name of applicant's duly appointed representative on the Board of Directors.

Section 2. All applications for membership in the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS shall be acted upon at the next meeting of the Board of Directors or Executive Committee following their receipt, or by letter ballot. The Board of Directors or the Executive Committee, with the advice and consent of the member, shall fix its annual quota of the expense of maintaining the Association. A majority vote shall elect an applicant to membership. In the interim between the receipt of the application and the action of the Board or Committee, the applicant shall be deemed a member unless protest from another member is received within one week after the announcement of the filing of the application.

Section 3. Individual exhibitors may be admitted to limited membership as provided in Section 2 of Article V of the Constitution of December 12, 1934, upon subscribing to the said constitution and the By-Laws upon a form to be approved by the General Counsel and agreeing to pay the monthly fee prescribed by the Board of Directors. Individual exhibitors may be admitted to membership or dropped for non-payment of monthly fees without formal action by the Board of Directors or Executive Committee.

Meetings of the Directors

Section 1. A regular meeting of the Board of Directors shall be held annually in the month of January, upon call of the Chairman, to be known as the annual meeting. Special meetings may be called by the Chairman from time to time in his discretion or in response to the requests of five or more members of the Board. Notice of the time and place of each meeting shall be given to each member of the Board in writing or by telegraph at least ten days before the meeting.

Section 2. A majority of the duly appointed directors or their duly authorized alternates shall constitute a quorum. The Chairman, as an officer of the Association, need not be a member of the Board, but he shall have no vote except in the case of a tie. The Chairman may poll the Board by mail or telegraph on emergent matters.

ARTICLE III

Executive Committee

Section 1. An Executive Committee shall be elected by the Board of Directors consisting of not less than three nor more than five directors. For the proper coordination of the work the Chairman of the Board shall be a member ex-officio of the Executive Committee. The Board of Directors in electing the Executive Committee shall designate one of its members to serve as Chairman of the Committee. The Executive Committee shall be elected each year at the annual meeting and shall serve for one year.

Section 2. The Executive Committee may act in behalf of the ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS upon any matter upon which the Board of Directors is qualified to act, when the Board is not in session; provided, however, that the Executive Committee shall not have power to elect officers of the Association or members of the Executive Committee, or to amend the Constitution or By-Laws, or to expel a subscribing organization from membership in the Association.

Section 3. Directors who are not members of the Executive Committee shall have the privilege of attending all meetings of the Committee and to join in the discussion but not to vote.

Section 4. Meetings of the Executive Committee shall be held at the call of the Chairman of said Committee on at least one week's previous notice.

ARTICLE IV

Duties of Officers

Section 1. The President shall be the executive head of the Association and shall be charged with the duty of maintaining and expanding the Association, directing the activities of the Regional Vice-President, and, in general, carrying out the policies and decisions of the Association. He shall preside at conventions and mass meetings held under the auspices of the Association and, in the absence or by leave of the Chairman of the Board shall preside over the deliberations of the Board of Directors.

Section 2. The Chairman of the Board of Directors shall aid in formulating and act in an advisory capacity in giving effect to the policies and operations of the Association and, in particular, shall have supervision over all legislative matters in which the Association is directly concerned as well as all other public relations. The Chairman of the Board may preside at meetings of the Board of Directors and perform such duties in addition to those herein enumerated as the Board of Directors may prescribe.

Section 3. The several Regional Vice-Presidents shall cooperate with and assist the President and Chairman of the Board in giving effect to the policies of the Association in their respective territories and, in particular, shall designate three aids in each subscribing organization embraced in their respective territories to serve as a cabinet in the administration of the affairs of the Association in said territories. Each Regional Vice-President shall hold a meeting of his cabinet not less than once in each ninety day period commencing with the annual meeting in each year. Copies of the minutes of such meetings shall be forwarded to the principal office of the Association and there kept as a part of the Association's records The Board of Directors in electing the Regional Vice-Presidents and defining their respective territories shall indicate the order of their succession to the presidency in the event of a vacancy occurring during a term.

Section 4. The General Counsel shall give his advice on questions of law to the Association and the subscribing organizations and to individual members of subscribing organizations when their problems are submitted through such subscribing organizations and when the work in connection therewith does not conflict with his other and more important duties in behalf of the Association. The General Counsel also shall have charge of and conduct litigation affecting exhibitors generally, as distinguished from individual exhibitors, when directed by the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee.

Section 5. The Secretary shall record (directly or by proxy) and attest the minutes, have charge of the files and records in the principal office of the Association, keep a record of all receipts and disbursements, and attest the signatures of the officers of the Association to the official acts, contracts and other documents of the Association.

Section 6. The Treasurer shall receive, keep and disburse the funds of the Association upon checks countersigned by the Chairman of the Board and, with the aid and assistance of the Secretary shall keep the Board of Directors informed of the condition of the treasury. The Treasurer will seek to collect all sums due the Association from whatever source and, when directed by the Board of Directors will institute suit with the aid of the General Counsel to recover such sums.

Expenses and Quotas

Section 1. The expense of conducting the Association shall be budgeted each year and the quotas of the several subscribing organizations will be apportioned by the Board of Directors by and with the advice and consent of their respective representatives on said Board. The Board may, in its discretion, prescribe a general rule for determining quotas applicable to all members based upon the number of members, seats in member theatres or other appropriate standard.

Section 2. All yearly quotas shall be payable in twelve monthly installments beginning on February 1 of each year, except that any subscribing organization desiring to do so may pay in advance or in more frequent installments.

ARTICLE VI

Effective Date

These By-Laws shall be known as the By-Laws of December 12, 1934, and shall become effective (a) when approved by a majority of the Board of Directors and (b) when a majority of the existing members of ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS have subscribed to the Constitution of December 12, 1934, and that fact has been promulgated as provided in Section 2 of Article X thereof.

New Representation On Code Is Proposed

make the code in fact as well as name a code of fair competition." Representing the official Allied policy as regards the code, the new proposal follows:

"That the National Industrial Recovery Board be petitioned to amend the motion picture code to give equal representation on the Code Authority to the two main groups in the industry—buyers and sellers.

"That the group known primarily as "sellers" include all film production and/or distribution companies, together with the theatres which they own or control, or are in affiliation. . . .

"That the group known as "buyers" include all independent theatres not affiliated in any way with the group known as "sellers." . . .

"That the above basic division apply to local boards also, and that the Grievance Boards be made up of two representatives of "buyers" and two of "sellers"; and that the Clearance and Zoning Boards be made up of three representatives of "buyers" and three of "sellers." Selection of these to be made by the Code Authority when duly constituted as above, each group in said Code Authority selecting the corresponding group on local boards." Three Government men also would have votes.

"We therefore recommend that the new Code Authority be instructed to bring to the Administrator, within 90 days of its selection, and any time thereafter when deemed necessary, suggested changes in the code; and that a hearing on same be held within 30 days thereafter.

"In case action on this report is refused or delayed, that Congress be petitioned that, in providing for the continuance of the National Recovery Administration after June 16th next, provisions be made for amending the motion picture code as above."

Walker, Schaefer Called in Line for Paramount Board

Frank C. Walker, former executive secretary of President Roosevelt's National Emergency Council and a vice-president of Comerford Theatres, and George J. Schaefer, general manager of Paramount Publix, this week seemed very likely to become members of the directorate of the reorganized Paramount company. Hearings on the final plan were to be resumed Thursday before Federal Judge Coxe.

Charles E. Richardson, trustee of Paramount during its bankruptcy who resigned two weeks ago, also is being mentioned in financial circles. At that time it was said that in all probability he would be named a director of the new company and, in addition, might be elected a vice-president.

Temporary Board Members

In addition to the nine previously named members of the new board, Austin Keough, secretary and general counsel of Paramount; Walter B. Cokell, treasurer and Max D. Howell, vice-president of the Chemical Bank & Trust Co., have been named temporarily.

The long pending litigation by Samuel Zirn, counsel for Robert Levy and certain other holders of Paramount bonds, for the right to sue Chase National Bank as trustee under the bond indenture, Paramount Publix, members of its old board, Columbia Broadcasting System and William S. Paley, CBS president, was dismissed in New York Saturday by Justice Salvatore Cotillo in state supreme court.

Mr. Zirn had alleged that violations of the state stock corporation law and the failure of Chase to bring suit under the indenture provisions against those named, resulted in "irreparable damage and injury" to the plaintiffs, holders of $5,000 of a $13,000,000 Paramount bond issue involved.

Right Rests With Trustees

The court pointed out that the bond indenture provides that any right to institute an action on behalf of the bonds shall rest exclusively with the trustee, Chase National, and denies such a right to bondholders themselves "unless the trustee shall have refused or neglected to institute proper proceedings within a reasonable time after a request by 25 per cent of the bondholders, together with an offer of reasonable indemnity against costs and liabilities to be incurred therein."

Briefs containing the objections of Mr. Zirn and Archibald Palmer to the reorganization plan were completed over the week-end and were scheduled to be filed early this week. These two attorneys have provided the only opposition to date to the reorganization plan. Mr. Zirn asked a reduction of $1,500,000 in the $5.175,000 to the Paramount bank group.

Special Master James Joyce on Tuesday reserved decision on a proposed settlement of claims against Paramount by Tobis-Tonbild-Syndikat for royalties to March 13, 1933, based on a 1930 Paris agreement on sound patents. Mr. Joyce adjourned to February 4 a hearing on the trustees' objections to a $265,498 claim by Sam Katz.

Werner Quits Universal To Enter Agency Business

David C. Werner has left Universal to enter business for himself. He joined the company nine years ago as story editor, and since that time has also handled the duties of casting director on the Coast and talent scout. In Hollywood he will establish the firm of David C. Werner, Inc., agents, acting as Coast representative of Curtis-Brown, which in turn will act as New York representative for Werner. No successor has been named as yet to Mr. Werner's place.

Young Pettijohn finished with a 72, Bryam with a 73. Par is 70. The elder Mr. Pettijohn is in Miami on a vacation.

Low Cost Cited As New Equipment Is Exhibited by Erpi

Sound equipment engineers and manufactureres are making a determined drive to lower the cost to exhibitor and studio of much of the intricate machinery necessary to make and reproduce talking pictures. This is borne out in a complete exhibition, staged Monday by Electrical Research Products, Inc., at its Bronx laboratory in New York. The exhibit covered the development of virtually every type of sound recording and reproducing equipment since 1927 and there was detailed explanation by engineers of method, purpose and approximate cost of each item.

There was shown, for example, a new projector and reproducing equipment, specifically designed for theatres seating less than 600 persons which already has been installed by Erpi engineers in about 12 houses. Simplicity of design and economy of space in the projection booth are two of the keynotes of this model, but the feature most interesting to exhibitors whose theatres come within the 600-seat classification—of which, said one of the company's engineers, there are about 10,000 of the 14,000 theatres in the country—is the fact that it will cost 25 per cent less than their present equipment, about 35 per cent less than Wide Range and where, previously, installation charges have been from $400 to $800, they will now be around $75 to $100, especially in locations where union electricians' scales are not too high.

Other equipment shown included the new "G" type newsreel sound and camera apparatus which recently was adopted by Hearst Metrotone News as its standard equipment, and which, including camera, sound equipment, tripods and batteries, has an overall weight of about 180 pounds. The cost of this equipment, it was estimated, is about 30 per cent less than that currently in use by most newsreels. The apparatus includes, in addition to the camera, a moving coil microphone, amplifier unit, battery for driving the camera motor and a modulator.

High speed cameras and the simplified studio sound apparatus were shown. In the latter instance, the engineers have condensed recording equipment to a large extent.

The outstanding development in the reproduction field shown at the exhibit is a new type dynamic speaker for the lower frequencies, which has been designed for baffle boards.

Du-Art Sues Universal On Printing Arrangement

Du-Art Film Laboratories, Inc., filed application Wednesday in New York supreme court for an injunction to compel Universal Pictures to continue sending its printing and laboratory work to Du-Art. It was alleged that Universal leased the Du-Art plant for its laboratory work and, in anticipation of Universal's $2,000,000 financial arrangement with Consolidated Film Industries, is endeavoring to "walk out" on the agreement. The "show cause" order was returnable Thursday.

Answer to Question No. 250

Bluebook School Question No. 250 was: (A) Will distortion of objects on the screen be increased as viewing angle is increased? (B) Explain why increase of projection angle increases distortion. (C) Why do objects on the screen seem abnormally tall when viewed from a heavy side angle? (D) Wherein does the real evil of picture distortion lie?

Wainscott; T. Rosenblatt; T. Morris and T. L. Danielson; F. L. Saylor and G. N. Guidotti; N. Goldberg; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrop; T. L. Irwin and B. McCoy.

(A) There were several excellent answers, some of them accompanied by very good drawings. However, I'm sorry to say, drawings are barred, due to lack of space. Without drawings, I believe G. E. Doe made the best answer. He treats the matter thus:

"If we view any flat object from straight in front of it we of course get the effect of its full width. As we walk to one side, however, we find it to be 'foreshortened.' That is to say, it seems of less width, for the reason that at an angle we see only the width of the angle formed by a straight line from either side of the object viewed, to the pupil of the eye. By experience it is true we may form a close judgment of the actual width from viewing a foreshortened image, but we cannot possibly see the width at its true value.

"To illustrate, on a sheet of paper draw a line one inch long. From each of its ends draw a line to a point six inches away and opposite the center of the mark. Note the width of the angle. Next, off to one side, but six inches from the center of the one-inch line, make a point and draw a line from it to each side of the aforesaid one-inch line. Note the difference in the width of the angle—distance between the two sets of lines. If we now measure the distance between the side angle lines just opposite the end of the one-inch line nearest the point to which the lines reach, we shall see just how much the line is foreshortened by the side view."

(B) There were many excellent replies to this one. T. Rosenblatt, a Utah projectionist, says, "Increase in projection angle increases distortion of the screen image for the reason that, assuming the screen to remain in fixed position and the image size to remain unaltered except insofar as is due to distortion, the distance from lens to bottom of screen is increased, or perhaps we might better say that the distance to top is decreased and that to bottom increased, considering the vertical screen center as the nominal distance.

"Since the distortion under discussion is caused by the fact that the projected light beam from the lens spreads out fan-shape and becomes wider with each added foot of its length, and since added projection angle adds to the difference in distance from lens to top and bottom of the screen, it follows that increased projection angle produces increased distortion, adding to the width of the bottom of the picture and subtracting from the width of its top."

(C) D. Danielson says, "The effect is due to the fact that (1) the viewing angle decreases the apparent width of objects on the screen (see Section A); (2) on most screens the object is taller than in real life; and (3) we very naturally associate proportional measurements in familiar objects."

L. Cimikoski says, "The effect of abnormal tallness is in part due to foreshortening of the width of objects by angular view. Another reason for apparent tallness is that it very often is reality because of the enormous figures shown on so many theatre screens. However, the alteration in customary proportions wins the argument."

(D) G. E. Doe answers, "There are several very real angles to this question, Brother Richardson. One of them is the difficulty of securing proper light distribution at heavy projection angle with certain types of screens; namely, the specular and semi-specular surfaces. However, I think you have in mind as the real evil the fact that it entails inevitable distortion of the picture, and ordinary common sense tells us a distorted picture cannot possibly be and is not as pleasing as one that retains its normal, natural proportions.

"In this I assume the distortion referred to, to be such as will affect the screen image disadvantageously. It is quite true that the instant the projection lens is raised even so much as one foot above the screen center, though the projection distance be 150 feet (or any other length), there is distortion. But up to a certain point such distortion is harmless for the reason that the eye cannot discern it.

"And now I'll take a chance and try my hand at answering a question not asked; namely, how much may a screen image be distorted without perceptible injury?

"My answer (and I ask correction if wrong) is that the limit is reached when the eye is consciously aware that the side lines of the picture are not parallel, using a normal projector aperture of course."

As to that, Brother Doe, I would say you are quite correct. In theory it is of course true that any distortion at all is injurious. In practice, however, if it is not so that the eye is conscious of the fact that the side lines are out of parallel, there certainly can be no damaging effect. Your answer sets up a test that theatre men can easily apply for themselves, hence in my own and their name I thank you for having "taken a chance."

May I take this opportunity to thank most cordially the hosts of friends who sent Christmas cards. Their number was rather amazing. Cards came even from England, one of them from Stanley T. Perry, president of the British Guild of Projectionists and Technicians, London.

Loew's Takes "March of Time"

The "March of Time," new reel produced by Time Magazine and released by First Division, has been sold to Loew's for all its theatres in the United States and Canada. The reel will have its first showing at the Capitol in New York February 1, simultaneously with its appearance in other key situations.

STUDIO PURSE STRINGS WIDE OPEN
LITERARY EXPERT NEW "RACKET"
RACING AND A HUNT FOR TRUANTS
TEN FEATURES START, FOUR FINISH

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

START of new year production gives every evidence of the studios opening the purse strings wide, in the building of new settings to give eye values and authenticated backgrounds to pictures already in the making or about to begin.

At United Artists, acres and acres of fine gauze are stretched over a field to represent a tobacco farm in New England as one of the many locale shots for Sam Goldwyn's production of "The Wedding Night."

For Darryl Zanuck's production, "Call of the Wild," at the base of Mount Baker, Washington, hundreds of men for the past four weeks have been making a replica of an Alaskan town as narrated in Jack London's classic story.

At the Warner studios in Burbank one finds the huge forest setting for "Midsummer Night's Dream." This set covers the entire area of one of their largest stages and extends for another two hundred feet beyond, which is covered by canvas.

At Paramount where Cecil B. deMille is getting under way the "Crusaders," carpenters are completing one of the largest sets ever attempted on the Paramount studio grounds. It will be the courtyard of Windsor Castle and will hold thousands of extras on horseback.

At Fox, in the settings for "Dante's Inferno," is an artist's version of hell, occupying acres. Next to it, a set used for the same picture, is the long midway to an amusement park of modern times.

At Radio several exquisite settings depicting Parisian cafe life are to be found, all erected for "Roberta."

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Culver City stands an enormous French courtyard scene erected for the principal action in "Naughty Marietta." Farther up the road at the Pathe studios, Jock Whitney is spending the works for lavish settings being filmed in Technicolor for "Becky Sharp."

The Latest "Racket"

One of the latest and most brazen rackets to appear on the Hollywood horizon is that of a self-styled literary expert, who for the sum of $10 will condescend to handle an aspiring writer's manuscript and then report if it is suitable for the screen.

If the prospect looks possessed of money and overly anxious to have his brain child transferred to the screen, the expert will offer to whip the story into shape for $500 and from his glib conversation will guarantee to sell it for $10,000. The sharpster, however, is smart enough to restrain his deals to conversation, not even giving the client a receipt for the money paid.

The return of horse racing in this part of California, through the operation of the Santa Anita track which opened to capacity attendance Christmas Day, is giving studio executives no end of worry. A large number of studio workers from grips to high executives have made almost an obsession of the sport. One executive called it a detriment to the artistic delivery of creative talent, paralleling somewhat the days when the ticker commanded more thought than picture making.

ENTERTAINMENT, NOT ART, DECLARED NEED

More box-office draw, less art. That's what is wanted, in the estimation of John A. Milligan of the Broadway theatre at Schuylerville, N. Y., who started recently as a contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me."

"I have been intensely interested in your letters from exhibitors, and can say that on the whole the exhibs are right in their reviews," Milligan writes. "I have received much help from them, and trust that the reviews I am sending you will meet with the approval of other exhibitors. If they don't, say so; I can take it!

"Let's have less art, and more box-office draw. Ninety per cent of the patrons want entertainment, not art."

Already the chief executive of one major studio has spotters planted at the track to report on employees playing truant.

It is estimated that out of the total moneys passing through pari-mutuel machines, 70 per cent is contributed by the motion picture and theatrical fraternities.

Jay Bruce, official hunter for the State of California, served successfully as a guide for Will Hays and his son Junior on a hunting expedition through the hills of San Diego's back country. Father and son each bagged a mountain lion.

Junior Hays returned east right after the holidays to resume his studies at Wabash College; Senior is remaining here for another two weeks of conferences with producers on the forthcoming year's plan of operations.

That the one lion was to be stuffed and the other presented to M-G-M was branded as "just a rumor."

Transfer of the Fox West Coast bankrupt assets to National Theatres Corporation faces a delay for another three months should the two objectors obtain an appeal in the circuit court of appeals. The objectors to the transfer on grounds they are not protected in the event they obtain a judgment from a suit now pending, are Marshal Square Theatres, Inc., and Harry L. Hartman.

With most of the first-run theatres running added attractions in the form of midnight previews, general theatre attendance in both metropolitan and suburban areas reported the heaviest New Year Eve business in many years. There was little drop the following day despite the more than 150,000 attendance at the Pasadena Rose Tournament and another 20,000 at the Santa Anita race track. All night clubs and hotel supper rooms also reported a heavy sell-out at increased cover charge.

Ten Features Start

With the New Year, Hollywood's anticipated production spurt became a reality. Ten new features were started. Four were completed.

Universal started three, Radio and Paramount two each and Majestic, Fox and Twentieth Century one.

Finished product included one each from Columbia, Universal, Fox and Paramount.

At Universal, with Jean Parker and Chester Morris in the leads, work began on "Princess O'Hara." Starting simultaneously, "It Happened in New York" will present Hugh O'Connell, Gertrude Michael, Lyle Talbot and Heather Angel. Also under way, with Boris Karloff again the star, is "The Return of Frankenstein."

Radio's new activity includes the Gene Stratton Porter story "Laddie," in which Gloria Stuart, John Beal, Gloria Shea, Charlotte Henry, Virginia Weidler, Donald Crisp, Willard Robertson and Dorothy Peterson will be seen. The second feature, "Dog of Flanders," stars Frankie Thomas, the boy in "Wednesday's Child."

One of Paramount's pair is the first Charles R. Rogers production, "McFadden's Flats," with Walter Kelly (the Virginia judge), Andy Clyde, George Barbier, John Cromwell, Betty Furness and Jane Darwell. "Stolen Harmony" will present George Raft, Ben Bernie, Queenie Smith, Iris Adrian, Lloyd Nolan and Polly Walters.

On location in Northern California, Twentieth Century started shooting the famous Jack London story, "Call of the Wild," with Clark Gable, Jack Oakie, Loretta Young, Reginald Owen, Frank Conway, Sidney Toler and Katherine DeMille.

The Fox contribution, "Red Heads on Parade," is a Jesse Lasky production. John Boles and June Knight are teamed in the leads; in the supporting cast are Chic Sale, Herman Bing, Irene Franklin and Jane Withers.

The sole independent feature included is Majestic's "Mutiny Ahead." Neil Hamilton, Kathleen Burke, Leon Ames and Reginald Harlow will be featured.

Completed Pictures

Completed at Columbia was "Let's Live Tonight," formerly titled "Once A Gentleman." The cast includes Lilian Harvey, Tullio Carminati, Janet Beecher, Tala Birel, Hugh Williams, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Luis Alberni, Claudia Coleman, Gilbert Emery and Arthur Treacher.

The new Universal feature is "Trail of Crimson Romance," a Buck Jones Western.

After much re-shooting and revamping, Fox finally completed "East River." The cast is Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Marjorie Rambeau, Charles Bickford, Florence Rice.

In "Rumba," Paramount teams George Raft and Carole Lombard.

MUST MEET DIFFERING FILM TASTES

—ARTHUR L. MAYER, RIALTO THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

WARNS SMALL TOWN AND BIG CITY DIFFER

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have been reading with interest the controversy raging in your columns relative to Ben Hecht's and Charles MacArthur's "Crime Without Passion." It is not surprising that the Adelphi theatre, located in a high class residential section of Chicago, or the Capitol in Dallas, did well with this picture. Nor should it puzzle any student of movie grosses that audiences in Mason, Mich.; Canton, Ill.; or Olivia, Minn., were displeased with this cold, ironic study of the grotesque mental perversions of a sadistic introvert.

The "Children's Hour" is the reigning theatrical hit of the New York dramatic season. It requires little knowledge of the hinterlands to know that they would find it both objectionable and un-entertaining.

The Rialto theatre played "Crime Without Passion" first-run in New York for two profitable weeks to large and enthusiastic audiences. This was not due to particularly extensive or ingenious advertising. The bulk of our patrons liked the picture and a considerable number came back to see it a second and even a third time. There can be no doubt that its appeal is consciously directed to metropolitan audiences eager for the unconventional, the subtle and the artistic.

Everybody who has operated small town theatres knows that their patrons are more appreciative of human, conventional stories and of conservative technique in their presentation. Neither audience is right or wrong. Each has the privilege of enjoying what it finds most appealing and provocative. The basic difficulty arises from the effort of the producers to satisfy all types of communities with the same kind of pictures. Occasionally this is accomplished. A "Thin Man" or "It Happened One Night" strikes a universal common denominator. They appeal to the high-brow and the low, the sophisticated and the "regular guy" alike. Such cases, however, are rare.

Time after time, pictures which aim to please both classes fall between them and satisfy neither. If anything constructive is to come from a discussion, without passion, of "Crime Without Passion," it is that we meet different sorts of pictures for publics whose tastes vary fundamentally. The producers cannot afford to sacrifice either revenue or progress in motion picture construction to the natural conservatism of the rural communities. On the other hand, they are highly ill advised if they antagonize small town patrons and their legislative representatives by forcing upon them ultramodern and experimental pictures.

Good pictures must be produced, intended primarily for small town consumption. Paramount, with its series of Zane Grey super-westerns, is clearly working in this direction. Other major producing companies might well follow suit.—Arthur L. Mayer, Rialto Theatre, New York City.

PARAMOUNT BUILDING MIAMI BEACH THEATRE

Paramount this week announced it is building a new theatre. Four years ago little or no significance might have been attached to such an announcement: today the fact that Paramount is venturing to add to its already vast theatre holdings is news.

The new house is to be built immediately in Miami Beach, Fla., in the hope of catching some of the winter season trade. It will seat from 600 to 700 persons.

CALLS BOTH WRONG AND BOTH RIGHT

To the Editor of the Herald:

The more I read about the feud between Adams of Mason and Messrs. Hecht & MacArthur, the more convincing it becomes that both are wrong and yet both are right. Adams is wrong because he should never have played the picture to a small town audience. Hecht & MacArthur are wrong because the general masses of the American movie-going public are not yet ready, and it is questionable if they will ever be ready, for a startling film of this type.

The writer was fortunate in seeing the picture before it became available, and I want to say that I personally enjoyed it immensely. But to play the picture to a small town of 4,000 people would have been absolute suicide. The picture would not only have kicked up a great deal of dissatisfaction, but undoubtedly would have been a failure at the box office. So the only thing to do was to pass it up, eliminate it, and if Adams would have done the same thing—and I understand that the film has been eliminated by about 70 per cent of the smaller towns—he would not have been the recipient of such a severely critical letter as he received from the well justified, irate Hecht & MacArthur.

For, after all, the film is an appealing type to a select class of movie-goers, and it has demonstrated its ability to bring in business by theatre-owners in larger centers through advertising designed to bring in that particular class of audience.

Accordingly, it would seem to the writer that the blame for the dust-kicking rests mostly with Adams in his failure to judge the picture for his audience, either by not seeing it first, or by his failure to analyze advance reports on the picture.—H. C. Monroe, Hollywood Theatre, Buchanan, Mich.

CORRECTION

Loew's, Inc., is operating the two Paramount theatres, the Palace and State, in Memphis, Tenn., and is not involved in operation of any other Paramount houses, as was indicated, through typographical error, in Motion Picture Herald's January 5 issue, in a listing of Paramount theatre operating partners and their holdings. The James and Paramount theatres in Newport News, Va., are operated by Hunter Perry, not by George Zeppos, who operates the Rex in Wheeling, W. Va.

Also in the listing it was said that the Mission, Chief and Sunshine theatres in Albuquerque, N. M., were being operated by J. C. Clemmons and Sol Gordon. These three houses are, as a matter of fact, part of the Hoblitzelle and O'Donnell group, Clemmons and Gordon operating only in a section of the Texas territory.

STILL SAYS IT'S GREAT PICTURE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have just read your article on page 11 in the December 29 issue of Motion Picture Herald on "Crime without Passion" and I still say it's a great picture. Also noted your article on page 73 where you say the end of the controversy is not yet and this is certainly true. For your information, we have had numerous phone calls and people have inquired at our box office if we were going to play the picture again as it was widely discussed here.

Week of January 12, we are playing Claude Rains' new picture, "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," and expect to do record breaking business, as the papers are all following Claude Rains' tremendous hit here in "Crime without Passion." We are getting behind this picture 100 per cent and expect to cash in plenty at the box office.—Louis Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

P. S. Am inclosing clipping out of the Dallas Dispatch on our Kid Shows attendance, etc. For your information, we have the biggest children's business here at the Capitol of any theatre in the state of Texas.

Following is a copy of the clipping:

"Wanted, two oxen for a publicity stunt at the Captol theatre. . . . Manager Louis Charninsky is searching far and wide but the animals are hard to find.

"In checking over his records for 1934, Charninsky finds that 308,407 children attended the Capitol theatre during the 12 months. In December alone, 28,301 children passed through the doors. . . .

"Charninsky really has the knack of attracting the kids to his theatre."

13 Magazines Added for U. A. National Campaign

Thirteen magazines have been added to those which will be included in the national advertising campaign planned by United Artists for the release of the 20th Century production, "Clive of India," starring Ronald Colman and Loretta Young. The additional 13 magazines will add a circulation of 1,750,000 to the total. Popular, low priced magazines are included in the publications added.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

MISSISSIPPI

Paramount

The major locale for this production is the old South and a Mississippi River showboat. Against that background it tells the romantic tale of a young job-seeking northern crooner, built up by the showboat's Barnum-minded impresario to the status of a ruthless man killer, and his adventures in love.

The yarn is adapted from the Booth Tarkington story and play "Magnolia," with the screen play by Herbert Fields, currently collaborating on "All the King's Horses," and Hugh Wiley, Saturday Evening Post writer of Negro stories. Music and lyrics are by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, both of whom have contributed to several Paramount musicals. Direction is by Edward A. Sutherland and the production is being supervised by Arthur Hornblow, who handled "Pursuit of Happiness."

Bing Crosby is starred; some of his song numbers are "Down by the River," "Soon," "It's Easy to Remember" and "Roll Mississippi." Supplement will be a specialized insertion of Dixie plantation melodies and spirituals sung by a Negro chorus. W. C. Fields as the showboat owner provides characteristic comedy. Love interest for Crosby is shared with Gail Patrick and Joan Bennett, recently in "Pursuit of Happiness" and "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head." Queenie Smith, widely publicized musical stage star and radio personality, makes her initial featured screen appearance, and other radio notables also will be seen. Supporting screen names include John Miljan, Claude Gillingwater, Arthur Hoyt, Stanley Fields and Harry Myers.

Novel setting for the production, plus the added color of the showboat idea, should suggest a new and refreshing departure in topical showmanship.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE

Radio

Production here reverts to a character of entertainment that has proved highly popular in book, stage and picture form. "Captain Hurricane" is a Cape Cod story, dealing in a human way with the type of folk who have become legendary. Basically the yarn is the saga of an old sea captain, the woman he would marry, the complications that prevent the realization of his dream and a final heroic triumph when all seems to have been lost.

The original story, published in book form, is by Sara Ware Bassett. The screen play is by Josephine Lovett, who did "Jennie Gerhart" and "Two Alone." The director, John Robertson, made "His Greatest Gamble" and the recent "Wesdnesday's Child."

James Barton, noted New York stage star who succeeded Henry Hull in the leading role of "Tobacco Road," when that player came to Hollywood, plays the leading role. Opposite him, both as a nemesis and inspiration, is Helen Westley. Principal comedy roles are in the hands of Henry Travers and Gene Lockhart. Youthful love interest is supplied by Helen Mack, an orphaned girl rescued from the sea and adopted by Barton, and Douglas Walton. Other featured players are Nydia Westman, Otto Hoffman, Creighton Chaney and Jed Prouty.

Among the entertainment and showmanship highlights are the Barton household presided over by housekeeper Helen Westley in an iron-willed yet tender-hearted manner; the storm at sea from which Helen Mack is rescued; the manner in which Captain Hurricane is made a sucker in the purchase of a cranberry bog which eventually proves an unexpected gold mine, and a second sea storm in which Barton is again a great hero.

FOLIES BERGERE DE PARIS

20th Century

Portrayed mainly against the background of Paris' famous Folies Bergere, the sensational glamorous color and setting which is, by reputation, familiar to almost everyone, this production is an adaptation of the musical romance drama comedy, "Red Cat," authored by Rudolph Lothar and Hans Adler. The screen play is by Bess Meredyth and Hal Long. Music and lyrics are by Jack Meskill and Jack Stern, direction by Roy del Ruth.

Playing dual identity roles is Maurice Chevalier, last in "The Merry Widow." Opposite him is Merle Oberon, widely publicized European importation. Listed in the supporting cast are Lumsden Hare, Ann Sothern, Robert Greig, Walter Byron, who was seen as the president in "The President Vanishes," Eric Blore, Ferdinand Munier, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Gilbert Emery, Marcelle Corday, Halliwell Hobbes, Feroges Renevant and Frank McGlynn.

Dances in the Folies show and theatre, of which Chevalier and Ann Sothern are the stars, are being arranged by Dave Gould and promise plenty of girl charm for eye values, the whole being produced on a lavish scale. It is the story of Eugene Charlier, great actor, and Fernand, the Baron Cassini, a powerful political-financial figure. Mistaken by the Baroness (Merle Oberon) for her husband, Fernand passes from one delectable adventure to the other, menaced first by sweetheart Ann Sothern who knows who he is all the time and eventually Miss Oberon, who gets wise to his little game. Possessing plenty of that "The Guardsman" smack, the picture is embellished by much atmospheric Folies stage show material. Both Chevalier and Miss Sothern, as well as Miss Oberon, have several songs to sing. The fame of the locale which the title vividly expresses, plus the romance, comedy and drama hinging about the dual identity role, provide an easy key to the exploitation possibilities.

VANESSA

MGM

This is a tale of robust, lusty, colorful romance. It deals with drinking fighting men and demure but shrewd women in the days when chivalry rode the woods and lanes of Merrie England. The original is one of four novels by Hugh Walpole dealing with the adventures and exploits of the Herries family. The novels, particularly the last on which this is based, are packed with the elements that make good reading and consequently promise similar entertainment. The screen play is by Walpole, who collaborated on and also appears in "David Copperfield" in association with Leonore Coffee. Direction is by William K. Howard, recently credited with "Evelyn Prentice."

The cast is headed by Robert Montgomery in the role of a freebooting, romantic rogue in love with Helen Hayes. His audacious efforts to win his lady's heart bring unusual love interest, tense and vivid drama and exciting comedy, which characterize the production's action and dialogue. Montgomery's last previous picture was "Biography of a Bachelor Girl," and Miss Hayes was seen in "What Every Woman Knows." The supporting cast lists more than the usual quota of name value. Featured are Otto Kruger, seen in "Chained"; May Robson, currently in "Lady by Choice" and "Mills of the Gods"; Constance Collier, Donald Crisp, Lewis Stone, Aileen Pringle, Lawrence Grant, Violet Kemble-Cooper, Jessie Ralph, Henry Stephenson and Tempe Piggott.

The production is being elaborately staged and every effort is being extended to capture the spirit of the times, people and events it reflects. Unlike the ordinary and semi-historical romantic drama, the picture will contain much action.

At this point it looks quite certain that the attraction will have story values appealing to the intelligentsia and sophisticates and at the same time, in addition to name values, plenty to interest the masses.

ALL THE KING'S HORSES

Paramount

This is a sort of "The Guardsman," given a broader comedy flair and embellished with music. With Carl Brisson playing a dual role and Mary Ellis opposite, it's the yarn of a holidaying American screen star pinch hitting for a king whose inclinations are more practical than romantic. Amazing himself, he makes life a very pleasant experience for the queen, permits the king to change completely under the expert tutelage of Edward Everett Horton, Vienna's ace raconteur, and thereby promise to provide much light and gay amusement.

Adapted from the musical stage play of the same title, by Lawrence Glark and Max Giersberg, which was quite a popular metropolitan attraction, the screen play is by Frederick Stephani and Herbert Fields, the musical adaptation by Frederick Herendeen and Edward Horan, and the direction by Frank Tuttle.

Every exhibitor should read the news on the following pages and act at once.

AFTER a year's experimentation, the men who made Time and Fortune magazines and radio's MARCH OF TIME have applied this same unique appeal to public interest in the production of a new kind of motion picture, stirring, significant—its dramatic action taken from the romance, science, adventure, fighting and amusement of humanity itself. That THE MARCH OF TIME has been booked by Loew's is highly significant. That this great group of theatres should book THE MARCH OF TIME exclusively in their key houses throughout the country is added proof of its box office value.

Contracts are being closed all over the country. If you have not talked to your First Division Exchange about THE MARCH OF TIME in your house, you are neglecting one of your greatest box office assets for 1935.

Brisson's only other American picture is "Murder at the Vanities." This one marks the film debut of Mary Ellis, Metropolitan Grand Opera star. The principal supporting cast includes Horton, Eugene Pallette, Katherine DeMille ("Viva Villa"), Arnold Korff and Marina Schubert.

Music and lyrics by Sam Coslow will bring out six feature numbers, equally divided between Brisson and Miss Ellis. One of the glamour numbers will present a bevy of new chorus beauties in dances arranged by LeRoy Prinz.

The current success of another operatic star, Grace Moore, in "One Night of Love," paves the way for a publicity and exploitation campaign centered upon Miss Ellis that should have the public expectantly awaiting her first screen appearance. Comedy romance, with plenty of glamour and color, looks to be the principal quality to concentrate upon, supplemented by the furore which ordinarily is attached to the importance of a potential new screen personality being discovered.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON

Radio

Inspector Piper and Miss Hildegarde Withers, school teacher sleuth, with James Gleason and Edna May Oliver in the roles they created in "Penguin Pool Murder" and developed in "Murder on the Blackboard," again combine their talents to solve a murder case. The story is by Stuart Palmer, author of the previous two; the screen play by Seton L. Miller, a specialist in adapting crime-type stories. The director, Lloyd Corrigan, made the recent "By Your Leave."

Major locales are Catalina Island, the Avalon Casino and Los Angeles. The incident that inspires the Piper-Withers comedy-tinged detective work is the discovery of a dead man aboard a plane bound from the mainland to the island. Hildegarde puts her finger on the real killer and establishes the motive.

The cast supporting the leading players includes Lola Lane, Chick Chandler, George Meeker, Dorothy Libaire, Harry Ellerbe, Spencer Charters, DeWitt Jennings, Leo Carroll and Arthur Hoyt.

The entertainment and showmanship quality of the previous two Gleason-Oliver vehicles readily suggests the character of exploitation necessary to arouse patron curiosity in the present attraction. The production is not a sequel to the others except insofar as it presents the leading players in similar roles. The story being entirely new, even to the methods in which Hildegarde unearths her clues, the picture seems to have all the mystery and just as much comedy and thrill as either of its predecessors. Topical exploitation is readily applicable with a peculiar opportunity of tying up the picture's title and story content with baffling local happenings.

CAR 99

Paramount

To the tune of a romantic love interest accompaniment, this is a dramatization of the efficient working of the Michigan State Police. Authored by Carl Detzer, former head of the Michigan state police organization, the series of articles published in the Saturday Evening Post were not only widely read but also commented upon in newspapers and other magazines. For entertainment purposes, "Car 99" takes the high spots of several of these articles for one action-packed thriller, telling of the exploits of two troopers and a band of bank robbers through the use of the Massachusetts police radio broadcasting station and their own code.

While value of story content and interest in a current actuality which is decidedly real is the chief entertainment and exploitation factor, the cast selected to bring the idea to screen realism is no less worthy. Though the cast lists no ordinary smash names, it does include several who in recent performances have impressed their worth upon the public. Heading the list of players is Fred MacMurray, whose work in the soon-to-be-released "The Gilded Lily" is almost certain to create a desire on the part of the public to see him more. Also there is Guy Standing, a feature in many pictures, but currently in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," a picture that undoubtedly will be much talked about. Others listed are Ann Sheridan, Frank Craven, William Frawley, Douglas Blackley, a newcomer, John Cox, never in pictures before but who surprised the sponsors of Paramount's acting school, Mariana Schubert, also a newcomer; Alfred Delacambre, Dean Jagger, Joe Sauers, Mack Gray and Howard Wilson.

With realism, theatrically applied, keynoting the production, it has the value of unique topical interest supporting it.

ONE MORE SPRING

Fox

Drama, comedy and romance are the essentials of this production, but the background and the strength of cast names point the way to its unusual showmanship possibilities. "One More Spring" was adapted from the sensationally selling novel by Robert Nathan, the screen play being by Edwin Burke, probably best remembered for "Bad Girl." Fundamentally the elements of the story are those that hit right home to practically everybody. It's a yarn of today, concerning the unfortunate victims of the depression—respectable persons, reduced to poverty by economic chaos, human beings struggling for existence, food and shelter. It is told in a delightful and somewhat ironic strain with vivid contrasting comedy and appealing romance. Direction is by Henry King, previously associated with Janet Gaynor on "State Fair" and "Carolina."

Opposite Miss Gaynor is Warner Baxter, currently in "Hell in the Heavens" and "Broadway Bill," and previously seen with Miss Gaynor in "Daddy Long Legs" and "Paddy, the Next Best Thing." The supporting cast includes Walter King, seen in "Lottery Lover"; Jane Darwell, one of the outstanding players in "The White Parade"; Roger Imhof, a figure in almost all the Will Rogers features; Stepin Fetchit, similarly noted; Grant Mitchell, Rosemary Ames, John Qualen, Nick Foran and Astrid Allwyn.

The yarn has the three principals, Miss Gaynor, Baxter and King, forced to live as best they can under a "gentleman's agreement" in a one-room shack during the winter, suffering every privation, but accepting their lot philosophically. Then the spring comes and with its sun, hope and of course a mating.

A note of humanness being continually evident in every phase of the picture's entertainment, it seems to be of the character that justifies talking about now, much in advance of actual bookings.

TRANSIENT LADY

Universal

Built entirely of material that has demonstrated its entertainment value conclusively among average theatre goers, this production bears definite indication of being a much better than ordinary mass atttraction. Primarily a melodramatic romance, the yarn is located in a small southern town, deals with familiar small town characters and incidents, and with murder as a medium moves to a smashing exciting climax. There being no pretentiousness about the feature, it moves through an atmosphere of roller skating rinks, tough-guy vandalism, political skullduggery, a murder, a court trial with a young attorney fascinated by the charm of the star skater and defending her innocently accused partner; a court room shooting, a threatened lynching party that precipitates a finale just as exciting as the preceding events.

The yarn is an original by Octavus Roy Cohen, noted magazine short story writer, the screen play being by Arthur Caeser and Harvey Thew. Direction is by Edward Buzzell.

Exceptional strength, considering the picture's flamboyant character, is to be found in the cast. Gene Raymond, currently in "Transatlantic Merry Go Round," is the young lawyer whose love for Frances Drake, roller skate star, and now in "Forsaking All Others," causes him to undertake the defense of her partner, Clark Williams. In the role of the ruthless political boss is Henry Hull, known to domestic audiences for his work in "Great Expectations." Supporting players include June Clayworth, one of Universal's promising juvenile starlets who will be featured in "The Good Fairy"; Frederick Burton, Edward Ellis.

Despite importance of cast names, the story content with its unique availability for interest creating exploitation seems to be the best adaptable value.

WIN OR LOSE

Paramount

Down-to-earth and understandable is the material of which this story is woven. Featuring a player who made a mark in his first real appearance, it's a story of romance that travels a none-too-smooth path. It is tinged with music and liberally endowed with appealing contrasting comedy.

The yarn is an original by Frank A. Adams, with screen play by Charles Brackett and John P. Medbury. Direction is by Elliot Nugent, maker of the recent "She Loves Me Not."

Joe Morrison, whose singing and acting in "One Hour Late" was one of 1934's outstanding accomplishments, has the lead. Opposite him is Dixie Lee, Bing Crosby's wife, making her first appearance in big time production in many months. The production also brings back to the screen the team of Burns and Allen. Others in the cast are J. C. Nugent, stage actor and father of the director, Mary Foy, Richard Carle, Lee Kohlmer, Julia Graham.

Music for the songs which Morrison will sing as solos and in duet with Miss Lee is by Harry Revel, Ray Noble and Ralph Rainger, with lyrics by Mack Gordon.

The story concerns an ambitious boy who comes to New York determined to be a songwriter and a girl who seeks refuge in the city from her irascible carnival owning father and her frantic sister and brother-in-law. While love blossoms for the young song plugging pair, her family goes in search of her, using a carnival prop calliope as an aid. They almost succeed in bringing the girl and a little of the boy's savings back to the ramshackle carnival, but when Morrison's songs suddenly make him famous the road to romance is cleared of all obstructions.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Harlengen, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

We are in what's known as "The Rio Grande valley." A valley is a strip of country lying between two ranges of hills or between mountains; some might call it an isthmus, but it isn't. An isthmus is the strip of land they cut off the west edge of Texas and made New Mexico out of; at least that's what a fellow down here told us, and he ought to know.

This valley has a worldwide reputation all over Texas, Oklahoma, the south half of Kansas and Joplin, Missouri, and is noted for her excellent grape fruit, oranges, lemons, cabbage, carrots, sweet potatoes, onions, winter tourists and Shine Mason, who operates the Palace and Queen theatres at McAllen. We can't see any doggone sense in calling a man "Shine" when that isn't his name. His initials are "L. J." We don't know what the "L. J." stands for unless it is Woodrow Roosevelt, but maybe not; anyhow it isn't at all surprising that he is known all over this country, for he is a mighty swell boy and the valley can't boast of any better, in fact there is no darn sense of their having any better. He is operating "Bank Night" and he told us that it had become his big night of the week. He is well located as far as opposition goes, as his nearest opposition is Reynoso, Mexico, and they don't have theatres over there because the town is so small that the most of Mexico come over to McAllen to trade. This may be a "valley," but we drove something like 200 miles across it and it is as level as a billiard table.

This valley has been handicapped for some time for an outlet for their crops, as the railroads could charge whatever they care to for hauling their fruit and vegetables to the northern market, but this isn't going to last much longer, for the Government is opening a channel from the Gulf of Mexico into the bay at Pt. Isabel so the ocean boats can come in there and this will give the valley an outlet to the eastern markets for their produce and then hear the railroads and Florida holler. We hope they get this water transportation, they need it.

Anyway, He Wrote, Jaysee

We have just received a card from H. S. Carlstrom up at Fremont, Nebraska. H. S. is connected with the Wall theatre up there. We were glad to get his card although he said we reminded him in some way of "Bill Bruno." But maybe you don't know who Bill Bruno is. Bill used to be the editor of the "Opera House Reporter," a theatre sheet published at one time at Estherville, Iowa, for which we used to write an occasional letter but which was afterwards moved by L. C. Zellano to Des Moines, Iowa, where it soon passed on and joined the junkheap with a lot of others.

H. S. says, "I missed your Colyum last week, hope it don't happen again, please explain why." Don't ask us to explain, H. S., we sent the copy in plenty of time and we don't know why it was missed. [N. B. to Jaysee, Carlstrom and everybody: Arrived too late to use.—Ed.]. Probably Ernie Rovelstad, who handles it, had gone to Minneapolis to see Lena Olson, or the Powder Monkey in the Herald office had started to celebrate Christmas too early. Anyhow, thanks for your card, H. S. We hope to stop at Fremont when we are going to Omaha sometime and see you. Remember us to Scott Wall and tell him not to back a bobtail flush so strong again.

"My Wild Irish Rose"

Isn't it queer that one will forget the name of a town if he doesn't set it down, but remember the names of the operaters of the theatre? We called to see R. C. Garbade of the Grand theatre but he had gone to San Antonio but we met Buss McCarthy, his assistant, and Charlie McCarthy, his operator, and we had a dandy visit with both of them. Sorry we didn't see Mr. Garbade. When you meet the McCarthy boys don't talk Swede to them, they won't understand you, but ask Charlie to sing "My Wild Irish Rose" and you will be glad that you came to Texas.

G. L. Wood, who operates the Ritz at Weslaco and the Capitol theatre at Mercedes, is a native of Texas, and, as such, claims the right to vote at each and every election. There isn't any sense in a man voting down here for it all goes one way anyhow. G. L. is another Longhorn who has a mighty good memory. He says the last time we called on him was in Abilene, Texas, about four years ago. Gee whiz, what a memory. The Rio Grande valley would lack something of a whole lot of importance if G. L. hadn't move down here from Abilene. When you are down here be sure to call on G. L. but don't let him know you are acquainted with us or he will be suspicious of you.

We talked with a Texan here the other day and we told him about that "Shelterbelt" the Government was going to build and he threw up both hands and said, "Oh, Lord, what are we coming to next?".

Mr. and Mrs. Jungenman operate the theatre at Falfurrias. Falfurrias is the town where you turn off the highway and turn east to Corpus Christi and Aransas Pass, but you have to go through Corpus Christi and go across a bridge about two miles long across the bay to get over to Aransas Pass, and when you get over to Aransas Pass you want to remember that that is where the boys up north come to catch tarpon and shoot ducks and geese. But we were talking about Mr. and Mrs. Jungenman. They have a very nice theatre in a very nice town right on the edge of the famous King ranch, which is said to be the biggest ranch in the world, anyhow we drove about 75 miles to get through it and in this ranch is where the boys shoot deer and wild turkey when they can get permission to do so (which isn't very often). But, as we said before, the New theatre at Falfurrias is operated by Mr. and Mrs. Jungenman about as it should be operated.

R. P. Condron runs the theatre at La Feria. La Feria is a Spanish name taken from the Mexican language, but like a lot of other valley towns, it is a good town in spite of its name, which is largely due to Mr. Condron. This town has a suburb on each side of it, Harlingen on one side and McAllen on the other. This valley from McAllen to Harlingen is almost one continuous city. You run out of one right into the other. Going east from McAllen you run into Pharr, San Juan, Alamo, Donna, Weslaco, Mercedes, La Feria and Harlingen, a distance of about 26 miles.

A cement highway runs along the north edge of the most of these towns and the Missouri Pacific railroad runs on the north edge of the highway. We give it as our judgment that there is more traffic passes over this highway each day than goes over the Woodward avenue road in Detroit, Michigan, and that's a lot of traffic. It's dangerous to drive either one of them, unless you are sober.

Just Another Uncle

Down east, about 75 miles, is Pt. Isabel, where the boys go to catch red fish, trout, and other varieties of salt water fish. Here is where the Government is planning to build docks for deep water vessels to come and load up with fruit and vegetables for the eastern markets. We hope their dredges don't spoil the fishing down there, for we are planning to go down soon and get some, if we are able to stand the trip. Watch for fish stories. But speaking of fish stories, we talked with a Longhorn the other day and he told us about being down there and the red fish were so thick that all he had to do was to drop a naked hook down and jerk it up and he would hook a red fish. We asked him if he was related to Elmer Gailey of Wayne, Nebraska, or A. J. Longaker of Glenwood, Minnesota. He said he wasn't but that he and F. W. Zimmerman of San Marcos, Texas, were Uncles.

We are writing this sitting here in our shirt sleeves with the doors and windows all open, the soft breeze blowing through the room like a June day in La Crosse, Wisconsin. We wonder how this sounds to the boys up north who are shovelling snow and putting up ice. Down here the landlady has to buy ice every other day to fill her ice box and we can walk out in the yard and pick a grape fruit or an orange any time. Yesterday it was 94 in the shade. Everybody burns gas to cook and heat with. If you ask a man down here what anthracite is he will tell you that it is a kind of fruit that grows in Mexico.

We hope that Lena didn't keep Ernie up in Minneapolis too long.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—A fine little picture. Pleased everyone. I believe it should be renamed, as the name certainly does not do the picture justice. Excellent business and no complaints on this one. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Dec. 14-15.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, Walter Connolly, Fred Keating, Wynne Gibson, John Gilbert—I call this very poor entertainment. —Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert, Wynne Gibson, Helen Vinson, Fred Keating, Walter Connolly, Leon Errol—Very disappointing. No excuse for such a picture. Trade papers and advance advertising misrepresent. An injustice to Gilbert. Patronage poor. Played Dec. 27-28.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Fred Keating, Wynne Gibson, Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert—Poor story. No interest. Did good business but did not please. Running time, 8 reels. Played Dec. 12-13.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—Our patronage enjoyed this well made program picture and we had no unfavorable comments, although some Jack Holt fans may object to this player being cast in a rather unsympathetic role.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—Leave it to Buck Jones to pull you out of the hole. This Western has everything demanded of a high class action picture. One lady remarked as she came in, "Why do you have to run these old Western pictures?" When she came out she apologized for the remark and said she had enjoyed it more than she could express. Running time, 6 reels. Played Dec. 21.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

FUGITIVE LADY: Neil Hamilton, Florence Rice —While business was only fair, most all of my patrons came out very well pleased. Good entertainment. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Dec. 16-17.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town patronage.

FUGITIVE LADY: Neil Hamilton, Florence Rice—Boys, don't fail to get this in your lineup, and then be in the lobby after the show and you will get plenty of congratulations. Played Jan. 1, 1931.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRL IN DANGER: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey —Very clever police story. Many favorable remarks from patrons. Unusually good business. It is hard to beat Columbia's little features. Clean stories, good direction and plenty of action in them. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Dec. 19-20.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—Very good entertainment. Suitable for family. Surprise ending which will make the audience go out talking. —Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—Nice little program picture. Good story and Nancy Carroll is exceptionally good in this one. All good U. S. American players. Don't jump across the big pond for stars as they don't have 'em. Played Dec. 25.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—Just fair. One of my patrons suggested that the first three letters be stricken from the name. Did poor at B. O. Certainly Columbia can do better by us than that. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Dec. 2-4.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—This is an entertaining action picture that the patrons of our "B" house (the Ideal Theatre) enjoyed. Although not a western it is enough like one to be a good substitute on your action picture days.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard —May Robson's acting wonderful. Only fair box office attraction. Running time, 77 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—This is a mighty good entertainment. Story fine. Acting great. And very clean. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Played December 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell—This will satisfy on a double feature program, but is hardly strong enough to single. Why Columbia allowed this story to go into production without a number of changes being made, I cannot understand. This picture was obviously never intended for the class audiences, yet the producers failed to take into consideration the fact that the masses do not appreciate a semi-unhappy ending. In this picture, Jean Arthur as Richard Cromwell's mother, unknown to him, encourages him to marry Anita Louise, yet never lets him know that she is his mother. Our patrons commented unfavorably about this ending and were also disappointed that Cromwell turned quitter in his final football game and left the field when his team needed him most.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro, Lois Wilson—I consider this a wonderful picture, but, 16 walkouts the first night and 12 the second. Picture did not please and we paid plenty for it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Dec. 14-15.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Walter Connolly, Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—This is a surprisingly good program picture which pleased our patrons. I anticipated a rather ordinary film, but discovered it to be above average for program pictures. Fay Wray and Ralph Bellamy can always be depended upon to give capable performances.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—This is another one of those "who killed Cock Robin" stories in which every one is suspicioned and the least seemingly guilty party is discovered to be the murderer. People are tiring of this sort of story and I can't blame them.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHITE LIES: Fay Wray, Victor Jory, Walter Connolly—Fair program picture—Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Boy's, here's one will have 'em coming back for more. Columbia pictures are our best box office bets and they don't hold you up on rentals. Played Sept. 30.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Kibbee and MacMahon are getting a name for themselves. They make my audience laugh and they like them. 'Babbitt" is very good family entertainment.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—This one is all the press sheets claim and then some. The best picture I have run for a long time. Built around West Point, with some wonderful shots taken on the spot and not faked, good band music, good acting, good song hits, some good scenes in Hawaii. I think I can say this pleased them all, young and old. A number said it was the best show they ever saw. Several said it was too short and some came both nights. Was sorry I did not run this one another day. You can't advertise this one too much for if it does not please them all they can't be pleased. They don't make them any better than this one. Running time, 97 minutes. Played Dec. 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis, Donald Woods —Not much to it, and was not liked by many. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Dec. 14-15.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Margaret Lindsay—Good family entertainment. Entire cast do good work. Well received.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—Ran this one on the three coldest nights of the year to below average attendance but it seemed to please nearly everyone who came. Personally I did not like it. We are all fed up with depression, unemployment and hard times without paying to see them. However, it seemed to go over, especially with the young folks. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—This picture is an excellent builder at the B. O. It grossed more on the second and third day than anything I have played in weeks. A very fine down-to-earth picture which gives people something to think about and certainly something to talk about. Business 50 per cent above average on this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 16-18.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—You cannot beat this picture for good all around family entertainment. Clean throughout. Dick very pleasing, also Josephine Hutchinson.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—This could have been a better picture had they not taken up so much time with O'Brien's flowery description of the things that he was selling. It drags very badly in spots. Lacks the tempo to keep an audience interested. That is its only fault. Too much dialogue to the selling end of the picture. For that reason I can't give it much.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—A very good picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—A real interesting drama. While the star role is supposed to be given to Robinson, only one who really dominated the picture is Louis Calhern. The villain role that he portrays is played to perfection. The holiday season slump was upon us when this was shown, so it is hard to say what drawing power this has.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—Harold will have to make more than one picture every two or three years if he wants the public to remember him. This is, without any doubt, the best thing he has done since "Grandma's Boy," but business was sad.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster —One of the worst. No entertainment to it. Failed to get by on 10c night. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 26-27.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: Pictorially speaking, a great picture, but the 80 minutes of narration make it rather monotonous. Will make intelligent people hate the idea of war. Played Dec. 28-29.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans —One of Warner's, but the story was too long drawn out and had many walkouts in it. Played Dec. 30.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood, Mary Carlisle—Another older Rogers picture that give us nice business and pleased young and old. There's only one Will Rogers—and he gets better. Played Dec. 16-17.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Lasky has at last turned out a picture for the masses, a thing that he has not done often. "Power and the Glory" was his and that was not a mass picture, but "Helldorado" deals with a ghost mining camp and is well directed. Has a good story and Henry B. Walthall as the slightly-unbalanced-mentally old timer that greets them does a swell piece of acting. It is a little spooky, his seeing the old timers that were not there. And also pouring a drink out of an empty bottle, that took finesse in acting to put it over, which he did. A good Friday-Saturday picture, although we played it for a Sunday opening and got by nicely with it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro, Herbert Mundin, Andy Devine—I cannot conceive the idea of using such titles. They alone keep the pledge signers away from your show. I play this Jan. 6 and am changing title to "Hell in the Sky."—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Just as other exhibitors have reported, this is a splendid picture which received fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—Fizzled on a 10c night. Music beautiful. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Dec. 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—Fair, but hard to follow for small town patronage. Too much English blah. My audience don't want these English characters. Give us good old U. S. Played Dec. 22.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point; Iowa. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl, O. P. Heggie—This was a big disappointment. Naturally, I thought if Fox bought a picture from someone else and then put it in their top price classifications, it would really be something good and big. But I'm sorry to report there is nothing big but the price about this. It is slow moving and very inexpensively put on. There's not one iota of romance in it; there's no climax and not even a good ending. One of my patrons asked me if I was sure the operator showed all the picture. "Peck's Bay Boy" is a program picture only, with not much drawing power. Played Nov. 25-27.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PURSUED: Rosemary Ames, Victor Jory, Russell Hardie, Pert Kelton—After looking this picture over and hearing the comments of our patrons we wonder why a studio ever released the picture. They should have known that the story is trite. Bad man, girls gone wrong, regeneration through love. Oh, how many times has this story been done with a different cast? Setting supposed to be Africa. A sordid story and no entertainment to it. Another mistake of the producers that helps lose business. Jory overacted his part along with other things that were wrong with the picture. It was produced by Sol Wurtzel and if he has turned out a good pitcure with the material that he had we have not run it. They have universally been poor. It does not make any difference how many good pictures you run, one like this lays in their craw and is hard to digest. And that makes a headache for the exhibitor. Where is the aspirin?—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—A good picture, but not up to Gaynor's quality or drawing power. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Dec. 23-24.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—This was better liked than "Change of Heart" but can't be compared to "Carolina." Business fell off sharply after first day. Played Nov. 20-22.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Mascot

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines Very good Friday and Saturday picture.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

MGM

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—A splendid baseball story and should be played in baseball season, but we took an awful flop on receipts on this picture, playing it the wrong season of the year.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: Myrna Loy, William Powell—Good picture, but not to be compared with "The Thin Man."—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris—Very clever and amusing comedy. Family entertainment.—Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn—Good picture from Leo. Better than some specials. Everyone went for it in a big way. Print, recording and attendance good. Stuart Erwin and Una Merkel in good parts. Hope we have more with Jean Parker. Dunn always good.—Clifford M. Anderson, Lomar Theatre, Lohrville, Iowa. General patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Very good. Beautiful settings, splendidly acted.—Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel, Mary Carlisle—Good comedy picture but played too old and did not draw film rentals.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—One of the best Garbo has made outside of "Queen Christina." The women especially will enjoy this picture. George Brent and Herbert Marshall do very wonderful acting. Give Brent good roles and he'll draw the women patrons in.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Otto Kruger, Robert Young, Madge Evans, Una Merkel—Good picture but did not draw film rental and played on a double bill with one equally as good. Big show and very small crowd. And there you are.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth—Light comedy. The kind that pleases the younger crowd.—Leon C. Bolduc, Conway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Lewis Stone, "Chic" Sale—A nice picture that didn't get any favorable comments. No business either. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Dec. 25.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes—Fair entertainment.—Leon C. Bolduc, Coway Theatre, Majestic, N. H. General patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Excellent picture. Will build up goodwill in any community.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Best bet we have had for quite a while. Will get people out that have been staying at home. Everybody pleased with this one.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Gertrude Michael, Joseph Schildkraut—Very fine production. The work of the whole cast was great. Gorgeous settings. Well worth while.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie—A remarkably powerful picture at the B. O. Seemed to please everyone and certainly it made me feel good. Just before Christmas to have Santa really come. Give it your best playing time and it will do the rest. Running time, 8 reels. Played Dec. 21-22.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—The Motion Picture Code Administration gave this an OK. In doing this they must have had their fingers crossed for Mae gives plenty of remarks with double meanings and broad ones at that. It is a typical Mae West picture, similar to "I'm No Angel" and "She Done Him Wrong." She gives the cash customers an eyeful and an earful. No doubt it has been toned down but it still is plenty warm. It seemed to please those who wanted to see a Mae West picture. Drawing power above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—This is a "Big Special." We had one-third of a house the first night and about one-fifth of a house the second night. The smallest gross we have had on any picture in about a year. Unless other towns can see more in her than we can here, Mae West is all over. Running time, 8 reels. Played Dec. 21-22.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. General patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael—Very nice little picture, nothing big, but pleased my patrons very much.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy, Kathleen Howard A slapstick feature which had our patrons in gales of laughter from the start. Clean fun, mostly contributed by Fields, although he had good support from Miss Howard and the two boys. Played Dec. 25-26.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—What has happened to Lee Tracy? The last few of his pictures certainly have not measured up. Did good business, but patrons did not like it. Played November 28.—Earl G. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong, Kent Taylor—Story laid in London's Chinatown. Drew average and seemed to please. Would class as good program. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Dec. 21-22.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong, Kent Taylor—My audience all liked the picture, but did not like the ending.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—Good comedy with plenty of chattering by Gracie Allen. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MENACE: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh, Henrietta Crosman, John Lodge—Our patrons thought this a real good mystery story, well produced. Played Dec. 14-15.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, Zasu Pitts, Evelyn Venable, W. C. Fields—Truly a mass picture. Pleased everyone. Pauline Lord's acting was perfect as well as all the cast. Direction perfect. There is a place in pictures for Miss Lord and where she fits in she will be noticed. Miss Lord's acting was so perfect some of the patrons asked if the children really were hers. That's what I call putting a picture over. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Dec. 25-27.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES Carl Brisson, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie, Kitty Carlisle, Gertrude Michael, Toby Wing, Lona Andre—Carl Brisson steals show, especially in his singing in "island" number. Let's have him in something else, Paramount. Average business for two day run. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Nov. 29-30.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—This is a class picture of the Continental era. Costumed as the period demanded, it is cleverly directed, some comedy and the practice of bundling which consists of the young lady placing a candle in the window and then the bundling commences, which, to delicately put it, is that the young man and the girl to save firewood go to bed, with a board between them, and that is what the picture is built around. In other words they bundle to the scandalization of an old, prudish man. At least it is a novel plot for a picture and if you have a class audience, they will like it. Anyway, it kept the audience giggling. The best spot, if you run it, is Sunday-Monday, I believe.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—Another old time, foolish costume picture. Did very poor at box office and certainly my people do not like "bundling."—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich—Another costume picture that was a wonderful spectacle but failed to get rental. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Dec. 16-18.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich—103 minutes of grandeur wasted on a poor story with no interest. Horses beautiful, scenery excellent, but why did Paramount waste all that money on such a story. Let's get away from those "costume" be-whiskered extravaganzas with no story value. What a headache at the B. O. Poorest business this year. Running time, 103 minutes. Played Dec. 9-11.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Richard Arlen, Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong. Grace Bradley—Good program picture for mid-week. Good old Dick Arlen comes through with nice performance. A somewhat different story packed with excitement should get results. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy, Alison Skipworth—Very good comedy. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Good business. This picture deserves extra advertising. Running time, 57 minutes. Played December 21-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

REPORTS HELP HIM, SO HE CONTRIBUTES

To Harwood K. Goddard, Grand Theatre, Lenoir City, Tenn., one good turn deserves another. That's why he writes Motion Picture Herald as follows:

"I will endeavor to forward my first article on 'What the Picture Did for Me.' I read these often and find that they are of great help to me.

"I promise to submit many more."

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—What a splash at the B. O. I think this set the record in gross for one day in this house. Never before have we ever seen such crowds, even on the big musicals. Give it preferred playing time and it certainly will surprise you. Running time. 65 minutes. Played November 29-30-December 1.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt—Swell picture. Not that the kid took any honors away from the stars, but this David Holt deserves headline honors in any picture. Just as big a rave as Shirley here.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt—Young David Holt is very cute. Whether they can build him up to equal the success of Shirley Temple remains to be seen. There is too much sadness in this to make it real popular. As a whole you can class this as a good average picture. And David Holt shows considerable promise. No special drawing power for me.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Principal

FIGHTING TO LIVE: Captain and Lady (dogs), and Marion Shilling and Gaylord Pendleton—A short snappy picture with plenty of good humor about the life of two dogs who, by the way, are stars in every sense. Ordinarily would pass up any comment on this type picture, but it is so much better than any others, praise is forthcoming. Is bound to get applause on a Saturday program. Because of shortness should be played on 2 feature bill. You won't be disappointed. Running time, 53 minutes. Played December 21-22.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: John Boles, Irene Dunne—Pretty good program picture but no drawing power at box office. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley—Better than "Little Women." If Anne Shirley doesn't become one of the screen's outstanding actresses it won't be her fault. Here's the greatest little actress I've seen in many a moon.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Genevieve Tobin, Frank Morgan—Just fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Genevieve Tobin, Frank Morgan—Just film!—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

DANGEROUS CORNER: Conrad Nagel, Virginia Bruce, Melvyn Douglas—Fair program picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—One of the best musical shows we have seen as yet. Both stars excellent. Gave splendid satisfaction. Not a dull moment and it's clean.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—A marvelous musical comedy that pleased those who came through our first snowstorm to see it. Played December 9-10-11.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Just fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix—Very good picture that pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 70 minutes.—P G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—The usual Wheeler and Woolsey type of comedy. They do not draw very well now.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Wooley—Best Wheeler and Woolsey to date. Audience ate it up.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—Fair program, nothing more, nothing less.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—A great picture. Will please the intelligent class. Had many comments on this one. Wish the producers would get busy and give us more like this. Hepburn great but box office pull doubtful—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN: El Brendel, Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, James Gleason—Four actors in search of a director who knew how to make a comedy—they didn't find him. The fellow that did make this tried to save on lights and as a result the facial expressions of the actors were a mystery. Some of the time you could hardly tell who they were, let alone what their pans expressed. This underlighting thing is growing on Hollywood.—Herman J. Brown, Majestice and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—A great picture. Wonderful acting by both stars, but the picture was too slow and did not draw any business after the first show. Played December

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins—Good program picture. Running time, 76 minutes. P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny—Sophisticated comedy-drama that went over fairly well. Everyone I talked to about this picture complained of the ending—everyone wanted to know what Joel did when he found out he had married the rich girl instead of the poor one. Running time, 76 minutes. Played November 28-29.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, Mills Bros.—Too much Durante to suit the audience. No business on this one. Played December 19th.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Poorest made by these two. Drawing power no good. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold, Frankie Thomas—A very good program picture. Wonderful acting by Frankie Thomas. Should be seen by all parents.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Merely a double feature picture, or one to play on Bargain Nights. Played December 12-13.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

State Rights

RAWHIDE MAIL: Jack Perrin, Lillian Gilmore—This is a good western coming from an independent company. In fact our patronage gave this one more praise than Zane Grey's western that we ran two weeks before. Did excellent business for it to be shown the Saturday before Christmas. This show is like all westerns, fighting, shooting and stage coach robbing, hero accused and all that sort of thing, but all ends well that starts off wrong. I noticed Jack knocked out three villains in this one but in the serial we played with this feature he plays an extra and the hero of the serials knocks out Jack and two other players. This was only noticed by me, as the only way I can enjoy a western is to look for mistakes and things such as the above. Played December 21-22.—Harwood K. Goddard, Grand Theatre, Lenoir City, Tenn. Small town patronage.

United Artists

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—A mighty fine picture. Great acting, story interesting. Gave satisfaction to them we got in to see it, but did not draw film rentals at the box office. Played December 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor, Lyda Roberti—By the time you pay film rental, you have nothing left. No more at this price. Picture O. K. Played November 4.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Fredric March, Anna Sten—Heavy drama. Too draggy for good entertainment. Wonderful acting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Universal

CHEATING CHEATERS: Fay Wray, Cesar Romero—This is an old story so well produced that it is entertaining in its new dress. It is strictly a program picture, but our patrons enjoyed it on a double feature program.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—We found this very enjoyable.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart—Pretty good program that drew fair at box office. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes, Jane Wyatt, Florence Reed, Jackie Searl—Charles Dickens' characters came to life and walked about in this picture. Marvelously well produced photoplay. The cast well selected and we will see more of Jane Wyatt, who was "Estella," and the little girl, Anna Howard, who was "Estella" as a child. Did only average business. Deserved better. Played December 23-24.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Jane Wyatt, Phillips Holmes—The acting and settings wonderful. Drew good business for one day, Christmas—all day in a rain. Running time, 108 minutes. Played December 25.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOPES TO BE REGULAR IN REPORTING FILMS

"Although this is my first contribution to this department, I have followed it for a long time and enjoy reading exhibitors' pros and cons," writes CLIFFORD M. ANDERSON of the Lomar Theatre at Lohrville, Iowa. "Would miss 'What the Picture Did for Me' if it were discontinued.

"Here are two reports: hope to have more in the future."

Mr. Anderson's reports appear in the department in this issue.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones, Sheila Terry—An extra good western. Pleased a Saturday crowd great.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—A good picture with lots of good clean comedy, but did not do much business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 9-11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Esther Ralston, Victor Moore—A splendid picture. Very interesting, but I played it too old and did not draw expenses, but the picture is fine.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Elizabeth Young, Lois Wilson, Binnie Barnes—One of the best program pictures we have had from Universal. Played on 10c night to full house. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 12-13.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Warners

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Very good comedy. Good for the family.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Played this to the largest Bargain Show audiences I have ever had. Excellent comedy and a B. O. hit. If we could get more of these we could stay in the "Show Business." Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 5-6.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—One of the funniest we ever played. Story good and the stars and all the cast great. Gave a 100 per cent satisfaction. This is not just a rib tickler. It is a scream. Played December 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—A good murder mystery picture. William excellent.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FIREBIRD, THE: Verree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortez—Very good mystery drama.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay——This is old, and was probably made before the Legion of Decency. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 21-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—I exhibited this one on release date and had a good attendance the first night but very few the second. I thought this a very good picture but for some reason did not go over the second night. Barbara Stanwyck is not very popular here. Played December 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney—Action and comedy. Will please the younger folks.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

BRAVE TIN SOLDIER, THE: ComiColor Cartoons—Very good one reel subject. Best of this series. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PUSS IN BOOTS: ComiColor—Nice little short subject. Very interesting. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

BACK TO THE SOIL: Sidney and Murray—A side splitter for laughs and the audience proved they liked it. This team has been making some dandy comedies. Just the type that fits the whole audience. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

FISHING FOR TROUBLE: Sidney and Murray—They don't make 'em any better.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

PLUMBING FOR GOLD: Sidney and Murray—It's a scream from start to finish.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

GOING SPANISH: Musical Comedy—Educational is far from giving us laughable comedies, and will be our last season in these comedies.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

HELLO SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West—Real entertainment value in this. The stars are funny, and what dancers. Can stand a lot of these kind of comedies.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

TOM TOM THE PIPER'S SON: Terry-Toons—A number of Mother Goose rhymes together to make a story. Exceptionally good for the kiddies, and grown-ups will like it also. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHAT'S TO DO: Shirley Temple—Picked up this old comedy and it was very good. Quite a few laughs. L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

MGM

CAVE MAN: Willie Whopper—An average cartoon that you can fill time with. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

THREE CHUMPS AHEAD: Todd-Kelly—Very good comedy. Kelly is great and always goes over big here. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small own patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S TRIAL: Betty Boop Cartoon—Only fair cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

UNDERNEATH THE BROADWAY MOON: Headliners—Very good singing reel. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BIG MOUTHPIECE, THE: Chick Chandler, Tom Kennedy—Just so-so for a comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GOOD KNIGHT: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Only fair. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

FADS AND FANCIES: Mentone No. 13—The best one in this series that we have used. It is really good. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WOLF, WOLF: Oswald Carton—Only fair. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

ISHAM JONES AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Excellent. Good music and good dancing by the Boylans. Gypsy Nina gives two fine numbers on the accordion. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LET'S PLAY POST OFFICE:—Another good two-reel from Vitaphone. Running time, 19 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WINNAH, THE: Arthur and Florence Lake—This is a good Brevity, plenty of music, dancing and gags.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

Universal Serial

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—This was one of the best we ever played even if last episode was not up to standard. 15 episodes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Loop houses and most of the neighborhood spots as well hung up heavy business for New Year week. Extra midnight shows swelled the box office take. Especially conspicuous was the business on "Forsaking All Others" at the Roosevelt, which gave that house its biggest gross in the last couple of years.

In a decision of the local grievance board the Roxy, operated by C. E. Baker at Elkhart, was ordered to cease running at reduced admission, on complaint filed by Jack Rose for the Elko. In another case the Madlin, operated by Fred Guilford, was ordered to cease giving away tickets for turkeys on complaint of George Topper of the Imperial. In an appeal to the Code Authority by W. H. Hoffman of the Rivoli at Monmouth over Bank Night, the decision of the local board was upheld and Hoffman since has filed a certificate of compliance. The complainant was W. R. McLaren, Ada theatre, Monmouth.

Educational Comedies To Feature Name Players

The use of names of definite marquee value in the casts of Educational short subjects, is the intention of the producers, according to E. W. Hammons, president. The March releases, said Mr. Hammons, will be characterized by their "name" value in particular. For late February release "One-Run Elmer," with Buster Keaton, is being completed. For March are one starring Ernest Truex, and others with Joe Cook, Easy Aces, Tom Howard, Sylvia Froos. Also on the list are two Song Hit Stories, two Paul Terry-Toons and a Treasure Chest subject.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

DO THEY LICK THEMSELVES?

Interesting and by all means open to discussion are the off-the-record opinions offered recently by a circuit executive whose thoughts on the subject of operation may be summed up as follows:

> Circuit operation does not lick managers—they lick themselves.
> While circuit managers need constructive supervision, they allow themselves to become too dependent upon the home office.
> While agreeing that circuit operation has many obvious faults, executives are only too happy to leave good men alone.

There is reason to believe that circuit showmen are prone to follow a certain standardization of procedure, either insisted upon by superiors or come about in the natural course of such operations. Whether or not in all its aspects this standardization is entirely good or bad for business, if not for morale, is yet to be determined definitely.

Personally we are inclined to the belief that the method of operation, chain or independent, has no lasting effect upon the efforts of the man who does his job thoroughly. Over a long span of years we have observed that the good man and the good job sooner or later gravitate to each other.

MALAYA AND MAIN STREET

From Round Tablers in far-off lands come frequent evidence that American ballyhoo methods have dug themselves in solidly on many foreign frontiers. More and more are exploitation campaigns, reminiscent in their execution, reported to these pages from the seven seas. Turbulent India goes for window tieups much in the manner of Indianapolis, and fabulous Singapore adapts the theatre front and lobby display ideas of Seattle and St. Paul.

Campaigns from Hong Kong feature radio broadcasts, impersonation contests and similar gags that have titled grosses in Hartford, Hermosa and Haverford; stills of stunts from Shanghai show unmistakable influence of box office ideas put on in St. Louis.

Thus it can be observed that though the nations of the world may be divided widely by differences in custom and opinion, there is something solidly comforting in the thought that the showmen of Malaya and Main Street speak the same exploitation language.

LEGERDEMAIN

First, there were the collards, raised by folks on relief as part of the local ERA garden project down in Wilmington, North Carolina. Next was the theatre that accepted them as admission to a special matinee. Then came the Charity League which gathered the collards at the box office and sold them to the public. And last, the Empty Stocking Fund which benefited by the funds so obtained.

This briefly is the outline of the four-way plan engineered by Round Tabler E. G. Stellings, in the southern city, and detailed on another page, that brought immediate succor to the lagging Christmas fund sponsored by local newspapers.

By changing vegetables into hard cash in these parlous times, Stellings adds another skillful bit of legerdemain to the many accomplishments of showmen called upon to lend their aid year after year for the relief of the unfortunate.

NOTE OF WARNING

In the past few weeks, managers in different parts of the country have written requesting theatremen be warned against the wiles of the itinerant chiseler who hits town with some sort of an advertising idea that is supposed to be put over in conjunction with local merchants. Usually the fast worker promises much more than can be delivered and after collecting, leaves the manager holding the bag, faced with the unenviable task of squaring himself for the phony deal.

Although no doubt there are reputable concerns who operate with the full approval of and to the entire satisfaction of theatreman and merchant, too many fly-by-nighters are now doing their stuff. It might be just as well if managers investigated these gentry thoroughly before becoming entangled in embarrassing situations.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Vegetable Matinee Helps Xmas Fund

The empty stocking fund sponsored by the local papers in Wilmington, N. C., was beginning to run a bit short, and E. G. Stellings, who handles the Bijou in that spot besides the Carolina and Royal, projected himself into the picture with ace results for the fund.

It seems that through the ERA, quite a few of the locals were on relief and had planted gardens of collards (green vegetables to you!) Stellings cooperating with the ERA garden director, put on a special morning show, the folks to be admitted for one or more collard plants. These were turned over to the local Charity League, who sold them to the public and turned the funds over to the newspapers.

The theatres received a flock of swell publicity, including two editorials from the papers, and secured a lot of goodwill from all those concerned in the event, for a cost "E. G." states to be about five dollars. Canned goods matinee was also held a short time previous for benefit of Salvation Army and that also tilted the scale of profitable public opinion in favor of the theatres.

Warners Offer Prize Cruises On "Clue Club" Exploitation

Twelve mystery films, identified as "Clue Club" mysteries will be released by Warners during 1935, two cruises to Bermuda being offered for the best exploitation campaign on the series. The schedule for release is one a month and such prominent writers of mystery fiction as Erle Gardner, Dashiell Hammet, S. S. Van Dine and Mignon Eberhardt have been lined up to contribute.

Press book on the first, "The White Cockatoo" contains details for organization of local Clue Clubs, and exploitation contains various stunts including newspaper contests, tieups, special accessories, etc. Further tieup has been made with "Black Mask," mystery magazine, publishers furnishing further advertising helps in addition to special section in each issue devoted to Club activities.

Relief Fund Aided By "Hostess" Stunt

The selection of the "Official Miss Adelphi" to signalize the opening of the remodeled Adelphi Theatre, in the Rogers Park section of Chicago was the keystone of the campaign sponsored by Manager L. Sussman that was started nearly three weeks ahead.

Neighborhood papers carried ads and stories inviting young ladies of the community to enter for the honors, the winner to act as paid theatre hostess for opening week. Cash prizes and gifts were also given to other entrants, and photos of all contestants, taken free of charge, sent to Hollywood for examination.

Names of entrants were placed on coin boxes planted in the lobby and for every penny deposited in the boxes a vote was recorded. Semi-finalists were chosen from those scoring the highest vote, and invited to appear on the stage of the theatre where the hostess and her court were chosen by applause. The money thus accumulated was turned over to the local relief fund, a total reported to be over $1,000. Local merchants were invited to sponsor contestants and received publicity through this in the theatre campaign.

Downtown papers, carried pictures of the theatre and various of the contestants, also publicizing the opening. Mayor Kelly was invited to be present to turn on the new lighting system and a host of other Chicago notables were also on hand.

Further cooperation was obtained from the Rogers Park Business Men's Association, decorating and lighting the surrounding streets, and carrying window displays to announce the opening. Of interest is that Sussman kept the house open during the remodeling with the exception of a few matinees and last days before the opening.

HENDRICKS, ROSENTHAL WIN AWARDS; JUDGES ADDED TO 1935 COMMITTEE

Other Executives from Various Branches of Industry Accept Invitations to Act; January Entries Now Being Received

1935 clicks on all twelve!

With the start of the New Year, the Quigley Awards, moving with the smoothness and speed of a streamline train, are already on their way to roll up a new high in obtaining further recognition for showmen in every part of the world.

Last week's issue carried some of the comments from representatives in various branches of the industry. On succeeding pages of this section, there is more of the same, and next week will be published additional opinions taken from letters pouring in with every mail. It is pleasing to note that expressions in favor of the Quigley project are unanimous.

New Judges Appointed

Although many industry leaders were invited to serve upon the 1935 Committee of Judges, the list of acceptances run last week did not contain the names of all who have indicated their willingness to act. Other affirmations have arrived in the last few days and it is with pleasure we add the following to the Committee:

Harry Arthur, Fanchon and Marco; Leon J. Bamberger, RKO Radio; P. D. Cochrane, Universal Pictures; Jack Cohn, Columbia Pictures; John Dowd, RKO Theatres; Oscar A. Doob, Loew's Theatres; Paul Gulick, Universal Pictures; Edward Golden, Monogram Pictures; E. H. Rowley, Robb and Rowley Circuit and Gordon S. White, Educational Pictures.

Additional acceptances are expected and these of course will be published as soon as they are received. As in 1934, three different judges will be asked to serve each month and will be selected from those available at the times of the judging.

Secondary Awards Approved

The announcement of a second Award each month as noted last week has been received with approval according to the comment gathered by this department. Entrants who may have been dubious of their chances in the coming year are now encouraged by the additional Awards which are to include sheepskin certificates. And from further opinions forwarded, the restriction of Honorable Mentions is also favored as it is felt that the winning of a Mention will mean even more than it did in the past year.

The announcement of a Second Grand Award for 1935 has also been received with general approval, as it is felt that this additional plaque will bring forth greater efforts.

With the holiday lull out of the way, showmen are now intent on campaigns that will click in January and we look forward to even a keener struggle for the 1935 Awards that will continue without a breathing spell right up to the last day of the year.

Judges' Vote Finds Bridgeport and Memphis Managers Tied for December Honors; Both to Receive Winning Plaques

For the first time in the history of the Quigley Competitions, and as a fitting farewell to the 1934 Awards, the vote of Judges on the December Committee, Jack Cohn, of Columbia Pictures; Oscar A. Doob, of Loew's, and Leon J. Bamberber, of RKO Radio, has resulted in a deadlock for the campaigns submitted by Manager Bill Hendricks, of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., on "Six Day Rider," and that of Manager Morris Rosenthal, of the Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn., on "The Mighty Barnum."

These Round Tablers, who are not strangers to the Quigley Competitions, finished in a dead tie, both receiving the same number of votes and as is usual in such cases, equal honors will therefore be bestowed.

This was decided upon only after a long session during which every possible angle of both campaigns was studied and analyzed. A number of votes were taken but the totals in every case remained the same, which certainly indicates what a swell job each of the boys turned in.

As a result of this decision, winning December Awards will be given to both Bill and Morris, and to them will go Monthly Plaques for the high standard of their exploitations.

To be looked forward to then is the interesting situation of two presentation ceremonies in these widely separated localities which of course will be reported duly in these pages.

The "Firsts" and "Honorables"

Following closely upon the heels of the winners, come John Armstrong, Advertising Director, Paramount Theatres, London, England, and Manager Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, both taking down the only First Mentions awarded in December. Armstrong clicked with "Belle of the Nineties" for the date at the London Plaza Theatre, and Lykes scored on his premiere campaign for "Babes in Toyland."

The Honorable Mention list this month is headed by the following four: Roscoe Drissell, Wilmington, Del.; Matt Saunders, Bridgeport, Conn.; Jimmy Totman, Erie, Pa.; Peter De Camac, Calcutta, India. In addition six other Honorables have been awarded, the full listing of Firsts and Honorables appearing in column to left.

The Quigley Award for November was to be presented to Manager Sig Solomon, Regent Theatre, Newark, N. J., on Thursday afternoon, at a special luncheon, according to word from Don Jacocks, Warner Newark division head. Full details of the presentation and photo will be carried in the issue of January 19.—A-MIKE.

ADDITIONAL ENDORSEMENTS GREET

Kalmine Is Sold on Awards as Stimulus To Better and More Extensive Selling

"I will be very glad to act as a member of the Quigley Awards Committee for 1935. Any time I am in New York, it will be a pleasure for me to assist in picking out the Quigley Campaign of the Month. As you know, I am more than ever sold on the value of the Quigley Monthly Awards as a stimulus to better and more extensive selling.

"I know that in the Pittsburgh zone, the men consider it a signal recognition to win one of the Awards or even to receive Honorable Mention for their efforts.

"Some of the finest campaigns I have ever seen in my long theatre experience have been submitted in this competition. What interests me most about these campaigns is the fact that they represent practical salesmanship and showmanship."—Harry E. Kalmine, Pittsburgh Zone Manager, Warner Theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa.

W. RAY JOHNSTON
President,
Monogram Pictures Corporation

I shall be most happy to serve as one of the Judges to help make the Quigley Awards during 1935.

I think that this feature of the Managers' Round Table Club activities is a definite challenge to showmen in the picture business and brings out the best in all of them to the benefit of the entire industry. Should like to congratulate you and the HERALD upon inaugurating this project and I trust for the sake of the motion picture business it will continue for a long time to come.

JIM DEZENDORF
Manager, O. K. Theatres
Marfa, Texas.

I really think the Quigley Awards idea is good and makes new ideas for all us fellers to follow out and my only regret is that one of the Awards is not on my desk. . . . If you do run it next year you will be bothered by me trying again to get one of them.

ROBERT R. DEITCH
Publicity Director,
Stanley, Jersey City, N. J.

The fact that my Quigley Award certificate holds a prominent spot in my office and is one of my proudest possessions, makes me very happy indeed to hear that you have decided to continue this project.

I am going to strive harder than ever before to receive another Award and will not be satisfied until I have received the Grand plaque.

LOUIS LAMM
Manager, Palace
Lorain, Ohio

. . . I think that you have done a splendid job during this year, and would like to see you continue to offer Awards this coming year as it serves as an added inspiration to us hard working managers.

AL LICHTMAN
Vice President—General Manager
United Artists Corporation

I will be happy to serve during 1935 as one of the judges for the Quigley Award for the most meritorious exploitation campaign submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club.

I consider it a privilege and an honor to serve and MOTION PICTURE HERALD is to be commended for this encouragement to better showmanship in our business.

IRVING LESSER
Managing Director,
Roxy Theatres Corp., New York

You honor me in asking me to again serve as a judge in your Managers' Round Table Club on campaigns for the Quigley Awards. Gratefully do I acknowledge your letter and promptly accept.

I enjoyed the intimate contact that being a judge gave me with theatre operation and, frankly, can state that observation of these campaigns has been helpful to me even though this particular operation that I head is the largest theatre in the world.

It is the hard work of the men in the field whose work we can observe that teaches us the tricks of the business. . . .

M. J. MULLIN
M. & P. Theatres Corp.
Boston, Mass.

I will be very glad to accept your cordial invitation to join the ranks of the Judges for the Quigley Awards for 1935. . . . It has been a matter of great personal satisfaction to myself and our organization that so many of our managers have been included in the winners of Honorable Mentions. . . .

The executives not only of our company, but of every company, must be greatly appreciative of the fine spirit that has been shown nationally and I am greatly pleased that the Awards are to be continued for 1935.

M. A. LIGHTMAN
President—General Manager
Malco Theatres, Inc.

I will be very glad to cooperate with you in any manner that you want. . . . If it happens that I am there on occasions when I can serve you, do not hesitate to call on me.

CHARLES E. McCARTHY
Advertising and Publicity Director
Fox Film Corporation

Indeed, I shall be glad to serve again on the Board of Judges for the Quigley Exploitation Awards.

This Department of the Herald is doing an excellent job in stimulating interest in advertising and exploitation among theatre advertising men and managers, and I sincerely hope that its second year will be as successful as its first.

S. BARRET McCORMICK
Advertising and Publicity Director
RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

Thank you for the honor of asking me to continue as one of the judges for the most meritorious exploitation campaign submitted to Managers' Round Table Club. It will be a great pleasure to serve. This Club, under your chairmanship, has developed into one of the most interesting and valuable departments in trade journalism and a real meeting place for the selling brains of the motion picture business.

I am very glad also to learn that it is bringing recognition and promotion to the contributors and, as real advertising and publicity ability is one of the most valuable assets of the motion picture industry, I think MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Managers' Round Table and yourself are rendering a great service to our business.

VINCENT R. McFAUL
General Manager,
Buffalo Theatres, Inc.

I will be very glad to act on the Committee in connection with the Quigley Awards. . . . Thanks very much for asking me.

CHARLES C. MOSKOWITZ
Loew's, Inc.

I remember on one occasion you called on me to help judge a contest for one of the Quigley Awards. I was very happy to have been of service.

I have your letter in which you ask whether I will act as judge again sometime or sometimes during 1935. Of course I will be glad to help. Call on me when I can be of service. Good luck to your movement!

SECOND YEAR OF QUIGLEY AWARDS

PHIL REISMAN
Vice President
RKO Export Corporation

I shall be glad to serve on the Committee of Judges in the presentation of the Quigley Awards for the year 1935.

RICK RICKETSON
Denver Division Manager
Fox West Coast Theatres

Be assured that I will be happy to serve on your Committee, that makes the Quigley Awards, any time I am in New York. I think you are pioneering a very splendid idea. I believe it is just in its infancy and during the next year or two, you are going to have a response from individual managers and the industry in general that will well reward your efforts.

Manager, Troy Theatre

It was an honor and pleasure for me to receive the Awards from your Committee. Competition of this type is always an incentive and as long as you carry this idea on, I for one will be delighted to participate.

MORRIS ROSENTHAL
Manager, Majestic Theatre
Bridgeport, Conn.

I am glad to hear that you have decided to continue the Quigley Awards for the coming year. I believe interest is mounting in these monthly Awards and it has tended to stimulate activity in exploitation. There seems little doubt that a great many managers have set their eyes on these Awards and the result will show decided improvement in their work.

With best wishes for your continued success for the year 1935.

J. H. SEIDELMAN
Foreign Manager

I will be very happy to serve on the Committee of Judges for the Quigley Awards, providing I am in America when you call on me.

Next to good motion pictures, what this industry needs are good showmen. When anyone tells you that the good old days of the motion picture business are over, sentence him to read over the exploitation campaigns submitted by the Managers' Round Table Club, and the business resulting therefrom. Anyone who thinks showmanship in this business has died out does not belong in the industry. It is more necessary than ever before, and your Round Table Club should be complimented for the inspiration and incentive it offers to the doubtful showman.

Curtis Says Benefit to Awards Winners And Honorable Mentions Is Obvious

"It is with a great deal of interest that I received your letter announcing that the Quigley Awards Contest will be continued during 1935. I personally feel that this project on the part of Motion Picture Herald has done more to stimulate better merchandising than any other thing attempted in our industry. From the viewpoint of the producers, the Contests certainly have helped to roll up larger grosses as the result of the continued and concentrated effort on the part of the managers who have been regularly participating.

"The benefit to the winners of the Awards and Mentions is obvious. I know of no other way by which a manager can gain for himself such favorable international attention.

"You know better than I do the personal attention which has been given this Contest by the leading executives of the producers and exhibitors. In your columns you have told with concrete evidence of how managers have benefited. One example is Ken Finlay, who was with me at the Palace Theatre in Montreal. During the year of the Quigley Awards Contest he has been promoted twice and I do not believe I am violating any confidence when I say that his salary has been almost tripled within the past year. Certainly this record speaks for the benefits from participation in the Contests. . . .

"And so I again say that the Quigley Awards are probably the most outstanding plan to improve merchandising, and the results of the past year have proven this to be true."—Gene Curtis, Sales Promotion Director, Famous Players - Canadian Circuit, Toronto, Canada.

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER

I will be happy to act as a Judge in the Managers' Round Table Club Contest. I think the contest is a splendid one. The regular Awards are certainly an incentive for continual good showmanship on the part of the theatre managers.

HARRY F. SHAW
Division Manager
Poli-New England Theatres, Inc.

. . . Want to say that I know of nothing that would give me greater pleasure than to participate in the judging of these Awards. To me, the idea of making these monthly Awards is a wonderful thing on the part of the Managers' Round Table Club. I believe every manager and publicity man likes to know when they have had an outstanding campaign and to win one of these Awards certainly should be and, I believe, is the ambition of every manager.

I can assure you that all the Loew-Poli New England theatres, under my jurisdiction, will enter campaigns every month with the view of winning one of these Awards.

SYPROS P. SKOURAS
President,
Fox West Coast Theatres

. . . I believe these Awards are doing much to stimulate managers to fresh ideas of exploitation and showmanship which are having a healthy and beneficial effect on our industry.

A. W. SMITH, JR.
General Sales Manager,
Warner Bros. Pictures

Needless to say I shall be very happy indeed to serve as a Judge of Motion Picture Herald Quigley Awards for 1935.

I consider the Quigley Award Plan for exploitation campaigns of outstanding merit to be one that encourages the proper exploitation of pictures, and one that also encourages those engaged in exploitation to do their best. I was particularly pleased to see during the year the promotion of a number of those men who received Quigley Awards, and consider that this promotion came as a direct result of the commendation that these men received from the Motion Picture Herald.

SI SEADLER
Advertising Manager
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

Count on me again as one of your Committee of Judges. I will be glad to serve. It's not an easy assignment because all the campaigns which I have seen are so good that a choice is difficult.

The Quigley Awards of the Managers' Round Table Club have certainly pepped up promotion activities in this industry. Leg work, elbow grease and constructive thinking have come back into the film industry as a matter of necessity. Lots of people talk and write about the need for more aggressive showmanship, but your section gets right down to cases. To me this function is the most valuable in trade journalism.

Kuehn Says Go West For "Belle of Nineties"

As part of his teaser campaign for "Belle of the Nineties," Rudy Kuehn, formerly Fabian Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., stenciled all streets leading to theatre with an arrow and the word "west." Rudy says that due to the curiosity that this created, the gag drew plenty of comment.

One sheet boards were placed in railroad stations, pictorial midget cards with catchlines distributed at barber shops, restaurants, etc., and Mae West visiting cards with the "come up sometime" invitation were handed out.

Make 1935 Your Award Year

Weil's Radio Scripts

Universal reports a lot of nice breaks with those exploitation radio scripts put out on the big pictures. The latest on "Imitation of Life" has been going over well, taken from the picture and adapted by Joe Weil. Script contains all dialogue, directions, announcements, etc., all done with a sufficient degree of excellence to make them acceptable in spots usually difficult to crack.

Brodie's Chariot Bally Clicks on "Cleopatra"

High spots in Manager Ellis Brodie's campaign on "Cleopatra" at the Paramount, Haverhill, Mass., were centered around well done street bally and co-op tieups. For street gag, Ellis put out a chariot (see photo) with driver in costume, and the horses bannered. Wheels were decorated with crepe paper.

Cleo sandals were plugged in four-column ad by shoe store and similar breaks were obtained on cold cream, perfume, cigarettes, in addition to other of the press book tieups.

Wright Challenges 'Em

Jack Wright, at the Palace, down in Taylor, Texas, took the "challenge" ad out of the press book on "The Firebrand" and made it up in herald form for distribution. The ad quoted a review which said the picture was too good for general taste, and challenged locals to prove the critic wrong.

Comedy Angles Stressed In Black's "Happiness" Date

As an advance lobby display on "Happiness Ahead" Harry Black, Glens Falls, N. Y., used a revolving disc with face that turned from sadness to gladness concealed phonograph playing a laughing record. Crying towels were placed around lobby and as an additional comedy angle, an oversized scale was used with red ink in the mercury and as patron stepped on scale it would rise to markings such as "You are lovesick, call up your sweetheart"; "You're inclined to be morose," etc., etc.

In the inner lobby patrons were greeted by usher made up as Yogi. Tent with signs of the zodiac burlesqued were placed around and boy distributed humorous cards. For his street bally (see photo) Harry's ship of Happiness was done solidly in gold flitter and lights from the street at night made it shine brilliantly.

Mayor Griffing proclaimed a "Happiness Week," on opening night a half hour's "happiness" program was broadcast direct from merchant's window with theatre plug between each number. Store paid for ads, time and entertainment.

Girl and Boy Scouts leaders were informed that girl or boy doing most outstanding "good deed" would be the guest of the theatre.

Stores Plug Theatres On Goldberg's Tieup

A Christmas institutional exploitation campaign that may well be adapted to any other citywide festival period was put over thoroughly by Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia zone ad chief and his staff, wherein the theatres plugged the stores and the stores advertised the theatres.

The following line of copy "Stay in Town—Make A Night Of It—dine and shop here and then go to the movies . . . you have time to see a complete show after 9:30," was used in the advertising of all leading department and other stores. The Market Street Merchants' Association got behind the idea, sending letters to all members urging cooperation. Theatres ran institutional trailers tying in the same angle.

Recent price reductions at the Stanley, Boyd and Aldine Theatres were emphasized in hookup with many restaurants which used the same copy idea in advertising, also mentioning the price breaks and theatres.

Boucher's "First"

Another "first" is recorded, this time by Manager Frank Boucher, of the Maryland, Hagerstown, Md., who sold the idea of bus cards to the local transportation company on "Flirtation Walk." The cards in red, white and blue, made a flash that attracted by reason of their setup and of course by the tiein.

Porter Lugs Trunks Through Streets for "Belle" Bally

Uniformed porter dragging baggage truck (see photo) was street bally put on by Nathan Silver at the Strand, Lowell, Mass., on "Belle of the Nineties." West arrows were used in residential district.

On "Cleopatra" Nat contacted head of the English and History departments of Lowell High school on the Paramount national essay contest. Five and ten featured a "Cleopatra" perfume and gave window display in addition to having salesgirl dressed as "Cleo" in the theatre lobby handing out samples. Chariot bally was also used. Assistant Walter Sargent is credited with helping on both campaigns.

Simons Sells "Divorcee" With Animated Display

An attractive animated lobby display (see photo) was used by Jack Simons at Poli's Theatre, Hartford, Conn., on "Gay Divorcee," center of display being radio cabinet to which was attached house p. a. system. When p. a. was turned on, paper notes came out of top of machine and danced up and down on drop curtain behind to accompaniment of picture records. After picture opened, display was moved to store window.

Beauty shop featured Rogers "Continental" hairdress, promoted soapstone lucky monkies were distributed in imprinted envelopes, baker bannered trucks and stuffed heralds in bread packages. Bowling alley placed large signs around offering a pair of passes daily to bowler scoring highest number of points.

For passes to presidents of four girls' insurance clubs tabloids with illustrated "Continental" lessons were distributed to members with offer of one free lesson.

Merchants' Assn. Sponsors Conklin's Public Wedding

That was a vigorous and profit-bringing stage wedding staged by Manager James R. Conklin, at the RKO Broad, Trenton, N. J., who started three weeks ahead lining up the stunt. The idea was built up day by day on screen, in ads and lobby with a teaser campaign—"who is the couple?" and with cooperation of local Merchants' Association, gifts to furnish entire apartment were secured and displayed in lobby.

Four days ahead, entire section was decorated with pennants and flags and intensive newspaper campaign inaugurated sufficiently in advance was speeded up. Bakers stuffed all bread packages, sound truck covered entire city and prospective groom spoke over radio about wedding and future plans.

On the big day, bridal party was carried to theatre in promoted new limousine, preceded by police motor cycle escort leading two hour parade through city. Couple was "played" into theatre by high school band, auditorium decorated with flowers and palms, half the expense undertaken by merchants.

Publicity continued after the stunt, conservative local papers carrying pictures of couple and plentiful publicity. Conklin promoted the entire thing at little cost selling the merchant association on the idea as a good builder-upper on the eve of a citywide sales event, and reports all house records broken as a result.

Powell Creates Goodwill Among Local Educators

The buildup given by Bill Powell, of the Paramount-Newport, R. I., to promote goodwill among his school executives recently resulted in letters on "Mrs. Wiggs" from the theatre going to all teachers and principals through the school mail. This was made possible by the whole-hearted cooperation of the Superintendent of Schools, with whom Bill works in close accord.

Another instance of this profitable harmony is reported in case of "Wagon Wheels" at the Paramount, wherein the Superintendent spoke on the romance of history, using the picture as an instance. Local press carried publicity on this.

Roy Plugs "Divorcee" With Lobby Fashion Show

As a hookin for "Gay Divorcee" and to plug his coming attractions, Roy P. Drachman put over an unusual lobby fashion show at the Fox-Tucson, Ariz., having local girls pose in the fashions worn by the stars of the advertised pictures. Co-op page in which Cinema Shop, restaurants, show stores, etc., took space was also out of the ordinary, theatre securing banner across top and story on date in addition to other picture advertising. Men's stores and florists also came in for windows.

The line "a gay divorcee" was used in various ways on classified page, under lost and found and other heads, the theatre phone number being carried. Many calls resulted. Another good teaser was window card headed "Warning to All Women" and signed by the "Wives Protective Assn. of California, Arizona and Nevada"—copy tying into local appearance of divorcee, etc.

Three street ballys were effective, one having girl in sporty bannered roadster (see photo), another being blindfolded girl in evening dress handing out the "warning" letters. Third gag was town crier on streets and at football games. In addition to tieup with dance halls and ballrooms, local team also demonstrated "The Continental" at prominent spot.

Crull Promotes Fire Truck For "Dames" Street Bally

Another "first" is reported by Manager Bill Crull, New Majestic, Evansville, Ind., who was able for the first time to promote a fire truck for bally on "Dames" by tying in with fire prevention campaign. Truck was bannered with copy—"don't have fires and you won't need us," with a flock of gals in shorts (see photo) lending atmosphere to the theatre copy. Bally was worked day before opening in town and out, gals operating bell and siren. Gag netted page one stories. Dorothy Schrepfer, cashier, gathered the gals and took part in the show.

Bill also mailed welcome post cards to incoming freshmen at Evansville College, copy hooking in the start of their college careers with the musical. Additionally helpful was an "advance car," assistant manager Ralph Anderson's auto, which Ralph bannered on sides and rear and covered all towns within 25 miles with heralds and 22 by 28's.

Compliments Old Folks

Hooking in with local Bureau of Old Age Assistance, Manager Bill Adams, of the Colonial-Brockton, Mass., ran ad over the name of director, inviting all persons, 70 years or over to see "Happiness Ahead." Guests were asked to obtain passes at the Bureau, in the City Hall. Unusual advertising kicked up some comment.

Editor Lauds "Cristo" At Preview Screening

A preview of "Monte Cristo" was held for newspaper men by John Goodno, advertising manager, Palace Theatre, Huntington, West Va., with the editor of leading paper writing ace review on the picture. Comment was blown up and used in theatre ad with free publicity carried in three other papers on fact that editor recommended showing.

Ad was placed in college paper with endorsement of professor of speech department. Special front (see photo) was built and sandwich boys with one sheets covered opening college football game and four junior high schools entered essay contest on "What I would do if I fell heir to a Million Dollars" with two tickets to each class as prizes.

Hauschild Gives Grace Moore Swanky Opening

A little extra dog was put on by Thor Hauschild, at the Palace in Akron, O., for his "One Night of Love" date. Black and white checked congoleum was laid over sidewalks at both entrances, inflated balloons and serpentine hung from marquees and two large flood-lighted display signs used atop the marquees. Thor gives credit to Vic Bonnetti, who executed entire art front (see photo).

Opening day blimp with trailing copy was in air for five hours. Special invitation screening held two days prior for press, Akron University faculty and heads of various luncheon and musical clubs. Heralds stuffed in Liberty magazines and bundles from largest department store. Portraits of Grace Moore were placed in display frames at all jewelers, "One Night of Love" cocktail featured, and Italian one-sheets used in select locations in Italian district.

WHEN it was introduced in 1931, Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative was definitely a "new and different" product. And there is still no other film like it...no other has wrought comparable changes in motion picture procedure, or contributed as much to motion picture quality. It is only natural that this Eastman film should be unique, also, in the enthusiasm which it continues to arouse among cameramen and producers. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

"ONCE IN A BLUE MOON"

"ONCE IN A BLUE MOON," is right! No oftener does the screen uncover a comedian with such a glorious sense of humor... such a rare gift of pathos! Your heart will ache for him, but you can't help laughing as he delightedly brings joy to all the world, never realizing the laugh's on him!

WITH WHICH IS COMBINED "THE SHOWMAN"

January 12, 1935

IN 1935: The new corporate leadership is going to contrast sharply with that frequently met with in the near past, which was, for all practical purposes, synonymous with power. Power seldom does create a leadership based upon progressive forethought and true ability. Power has been the type of leadership characteristic of "rackets." The new leadership will be based upon sound, forward-looking business practices; sincere relationships to the public; character and ability in personnel; quality production of entertainment; and a co-operative study of the employe problem.

In 2 Sections — Section 2

Neglect is False Economy

EXHIBITORS MUST AWAKE TO THE ULTRA-IMPORTANT PART PROJECTION IS PLAYING IN THE LIFE OF THEIR THEATRES. They must realize that the paltry few dollars they may succeed in saving on their projection repair bill will assume unrecognizable proportions as compared to the falling-off in attendance as registered by the box office report. And they must realize that good projection is no longer a matter of speculation—but a 100% gold-bond investment, with the resultant profits bearing a distinct relation, comparatively, to the original sum invested.

TECHNICS AND ECONOMICS, NOT POLITICS

Among reactions to the article in the December 15th issue by Charles S. Bassin on the reduction of electric power costs, is one expressed in a letter from a power company executive. He is far enough removed from Mr. Bassin's field of operations in Boston to have responded on principle, rather than in direct reply. Particularly does he protest against Mr. Bassin's use, in referring to practices of power companies, of such phrases as "lecherous methods" and "persuasive lobbyists." These our correspondent believes to have been suggested by certain political theses now current. And the technical progress of motion picture theatres, not politics, is what he believes our pages should be devoted to.

To the latter we hasten to agree. But in no wise were we aware that we were engaging in political propaganda by allowing Mr. Bassin the autorial freedom represented in the terminology objected to. Indeed, we are assured by Mr. Bassin's position and activities that he himself could not have considered any portion of his remarks as political propaganda. Like ours, his interests were only technical and economic. Any political meaning attached to the phrases in question could not have come from a consumer like Mr. Bassin, or from a journal like this one, but from interests better versed in the ways of politics than either.

ANOTHER "MR. BROWN" WITH FIGHT

A letter has come from Viroqua, which is a small town in Wisconsin, telling of a showman's enterprise that must have had quite a dramatic victory. It is from Mr. B. C. Brown, who operates "Wisconsin's Finest Home Owned Theatre," the Vernon.

"About a year ago," he writes, "you had in Better Theatres an article about 'Brown' who lost his lease to the Big Fellows and remodeled a garage with the result that 'Brown' got his old customers and business back. This case was so parallel to mine that I actually thought (from the first installment) that it was my identical case.

"Well, my Vernon was opened two and a half years ago, after I lost my lease on the Temple, which I operated nine years. On the 16th of last November I took the Temple back and will endeavor to operate both on a paying basis, if possible. The Temple will be open Saturdays and Sundays for the present, but the Vernon is going strong. Moral: It pays to co-operate with the public.

"This is my 27th year in Viroqua. I started in 1908 and have had four oppositions during that time. Last year I bucked the five-and-ten-cent proposition and held my price to 25c. The big house was decorated at a cost of $8,000. But the Vernon got the business! I think I was up against as tough a break as history chronicles."

Such a letter needs no comment. But isn't it curious that the fictitious name chosen for the ingenious, courageous exhibitor in that article should also have been Mr. Brown?

SETTINGS FOR TWO NOVELTY DANCE ACTS

Practical suggestions for dance-concerts using home talent—the fourth article of a new series on stage presentations

By O. T. TAYLOR

COOPERATION WITH dancing schools in staging dance recitals or dance concerts, offers possibilities worthy of serious consideration. This is true not only because of the proven box office worth of an attraction of this type, but also, and often equally important (if not more so) from the standpoint of good-will building. Parents and friends of the young dancers turn out to see them perform, and this is often the beginning of regular theatre attendance by some who have not been theatre-conscious. And (looking to the future) the youngsters of today are the adult patrons of tomorrow.

Participation in the dance concert by the older and more advanced students of dancing should by all means be encouraged. It lifts the dance concert from what might be deemed strictly amateur entertainment, into a more or elss semi-professional class, insofar as entertainment value and finished performance are concerned.

Given dancers of ability, who are under the direction of competent dance instructors, there is no reason why a very entertaining and pleasing dance concert of a definite box office value cannot be staged. The presentation could be in two or more parts—one part built around a plot, an idea; the other straight divertissement.

The more elaborate offering, but well worth the effort, and within the scope, and ability, of the dance instructor of the average town or city, will consist of several interpretative episodes of a distinct character. A dance concert on this order was staged recently by the author. Credit for conceiving and producing the idea goes to Robert and Norma Taynton, able and progressive exponents of the dance in the Pacific Northwest. The Taynton's Dance Concert program consisted of three parts: (I) Prologue and Ballet, (II) Divertissements, (III) Oriental Festival.

Of the ten or twelve numbers offered as divertissements two were exceptionally noteworthy. One, "In a Grecian Garden" because of the harmonious relation of dances and setting; the other, "Kol Nidre" because of its impressive and novel interpretation. The program carried the following explanation of the latter:

"We believe that religion and dancing in its true art form are inescapably united. We have chosen the Jewish prayer 'Kol Nidre' for our first illustration in this school because of its beauty and poignancy, and because of the reverence in which it is held by the Jewish people."

The dancers, representing the candles of a huge candelabrum (Menoraw), interpreted in slow, rhythmic motion and poses the prayer "Kol Nidre" while this was being chanted by a singer stationed in front of the candelabrum. Tap, novelty, comedy and toe numbers made up the balance of the presentation.

The physical makeup of the dance concert, consisting in special scenic novelties, lighting effects, costumes, etc., is an important factor and must be given serious consideration to make the dance concert a successful financial venture, as well as a pleasing entertainment. The "Grecian Garden" and "Kol Nidre" settings are of simple construction and inexpensive to build.

The "Grecian Garden" setting consists of a white colonnade (Figure 1, A) in sharp contrast to a dark blue sky drop or cyclorama. The columns are placed upon a platform with steps to the stage. Garden wings (C), if not too modern in treatment, and borders complete the setting proper. The decorative plants (B) can be natural or artificial. Empty 100-pound white lead kegs, or similar receptacles, make splendid plant tubs for stage use. A striking effect is obtained by banking the orchestra pit in front of the stage apron with flowers.

Instead of the customary flat columns painted to appear round, try built-up columns. Obviously the columns need not be full-round, as the rear sides do not show to the audience. The full-round effect is obtained with half-round columns. And these are easy to build and handle. The advantage of the rounded columns over the flat ones becomes apparent when the scene is lighted. The lighting brings out a fullness of lights and shadows that can not be equalled with flat, painted columns.

The simple construction is shown in Figure 2. Half-round segments, cut from plywood or ¾-inch pine board, are spaced

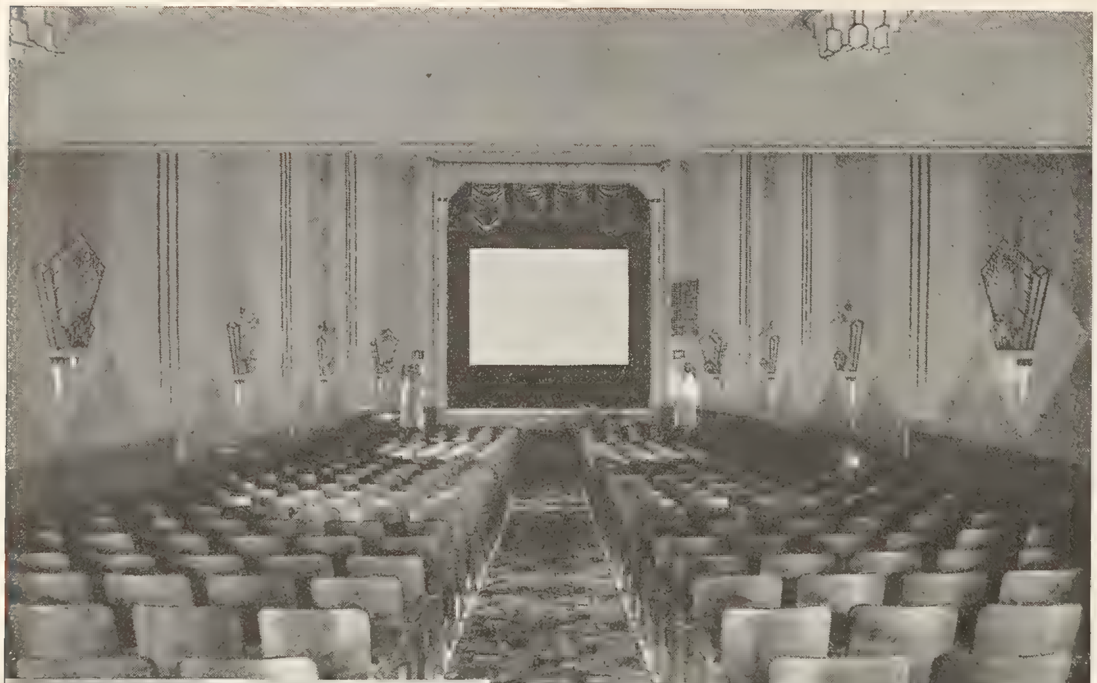
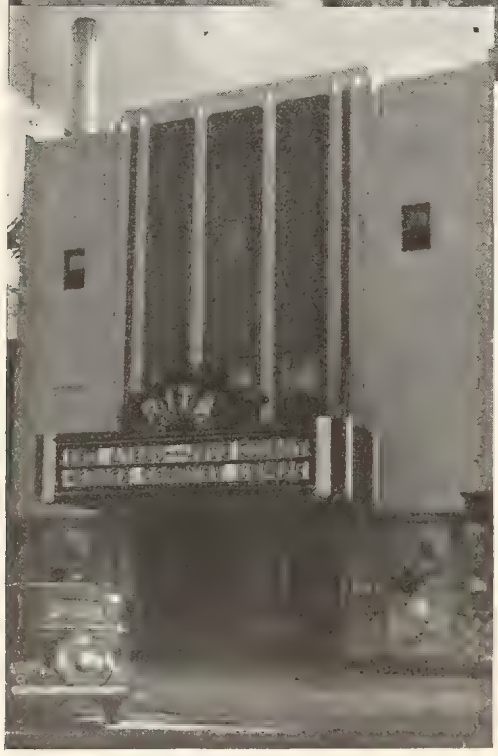
REVAMPING A SMALL STORE BUILDING FOR A THEATRE





The views above are of the auditorium, looking toward the screen, and the foyer, while at the bottom of the page the rear of the auditorium is shown. The auditorium walls are of composition board above a plaster dado with colored decorations.

THE RITA THEATRE in Victoria, Tex., represents the alteration of a two-story free-spanning store building situated on an inside lot 30 x 100 feet, with an alley at the rear. The original building was of brick walls and mill-constructed floors and roof. The purpose was to produce a smaller theatre of modern appointments and facilities, using as much of the original building as possible. The house is operated by the Jefferson Amusement Company. The architect for the alterations was W. Scott Dunne of Dallas.

The existing side walls and roof structure were retained, with a new 20-foot extension at the rear. The front wall was altered by the addition of new lower piers and lintels and closing up existing openings where these were not incorporated in the new scheme.

Interior alterations consisted in the removal of the second-floor construction and stairways and reuse of this material in a balcony, in mezzanine and projection room floor construction, and in the rear addition. The plan now provides for an entrance lobby, foyer (standee area), toilet facilities stairways to balcony, sound platform and auditorium-proper. The total seating capacity is 495.

One the mezzanine floor are the office and stairway platform, leading to the small balcony seating 125, and the projection and motor-generator rooms. The auditorium walls are finished in a composition board above a plaster dado set in patterns with sponged color decorations and applied color striping. The balance of the interior is finished in color plaster, glazed and with color stenciling at cornices. Toilet rooms are finished in tile wainscots and metal partitions.

The theatre front is of color stucco with ornamental tile bases, while the marquee is of metal and glass. The sidewalk has been relaid in colored patterns.

The Rita has ventilation and cooling by the U. S. Air Conditioning Corporation system. Heating is by gas unit heaters.

The total cost of the alterations, which were entirely attained with mill construction, was $12,500 without equipment.

QUALIFYING FOR LEADERSHIP IN 1935

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Some timely suggestions for the kind of theatre management that can end confusion, waste and bossism

WITH THE TURN of a New Year, theatre managers as well as circuit executives and owners can well afford to take time to inventory the old year and appraise the incoming one. In order that our points of view shall not be biased, it would be a good thing if all opinions could be heard and the most worthy thoughts set down as a basic guide for the incoming year. Such a plan might tend toward a more uniform and better distributed degree of progress, for individuals as well as corporations, and should also bring about a more whole-hearted, healthy and effective form of self-regulation in industries than that which is now resulting from, for instance, the Amusement Code.

Individuals within this industry must take the problem of self-regulation as applying to themselves more seriously, if they are to further the self-regulation of the industry in any way. The United States Government is undertaking the task of directing the industry's program along these lines. It is proposed that each manager, in attempting to solve his problems, become an active influence in the policy of self-regulation.

There is one law that cannot be denied —the law of the survival of the fittest. It was not created by the New Deal, but it is going to be active during 1935. You can't evade it, so study it and apply it to your individual situation and to your company's policies.

The law of the survival of the fittest means that on January 1, 1936, the industry will be composed of those individuals and companies that are able and prepared to meet the problems presented by a changing order, which has rapidly been taking hold and will more fully express itself in 1935.

How are we as individuals going to prepare ourselves; by a let-good-enough-alone attitude, or a why-worry-this-is-my-lucky-year approach? Or shall it be by an aggressive and an advanced type of leadership? My guess is that a new type of leadership will be necessary. Then if leadership is going to be the keynote, let's try to see what leadership demands and meet those demands ourselves, so that we may be prepared for increased responsibilities.

WHAT TRUE LEADERSHIP IS

THE NEW corporate leadership is going to contrast sharply with that frequently met with in the near past, which was, for all practical purposes, synonomous with power. Power seldom does create a leadership based upon progressive forethought and true ability. Power has been the type of leadership characteristic of "rackets." The new leadership will be based upon sound, forward-looking business practices; sincere relationship to the public; character and ability in personnel; quality production of entertainment; and a co-operative study of the employe problem. When the leadership of the industry is so shaped and directed, there are going to be solutions to cut-throat admission price cutting, zoning evils, box office irregularities, dual features and protection policies.

True leadership is the establishing of worthy objectives and the harmonizing of the efforts of all involved for the accomplishment of those objectives. The individual leader must be able to influence others to use willingly their capabilities and energies in the general plan.

Leadership should be energetic, creative and self-generating, and it is these features that should be emphasized. Do not think for one moment that energetic leadership is to be confused with the now old-fashioned driving method that was founded on compulsion resulting from economic pressure. Energetic, as used here, means rather wide-awake anticipation of events, combined with enthusiastic planning and put into action with vigor and courage. Leadership, to be productive, does not result from a formula or rule of thumb; it is individual thought, applied to specific conditions. The elements of leadership are flexible. Leadership must be continuous, not a temperamental here—today and gone—tomorrow quality. One step leads to the next, and in this way the plan and pattern is established.

Leadership must not be a clumsy, corporate tradition; it must be alive, alert, flexible, making use of every idea, facility and person capable of adding to it and eliminating worn-out ideas, policies and individuals that have become inoperative.

LEADERSHIP IN MANAGEMENT

WHAT DOES this all mean to the theatre manager? Just this: every manager to be sure of his job has got to become a leader. The idea that leaders are born and can't be made is a fallacy. If you accept it you have very definitely established your own limitations. On the other hand, a leader is not made by constant affirmation that one is as good as, or smarter than, someone in a bigger job. A good leader is always critical, he can't be otherwise, because mistakes must be eliminated or at least reduced to an absolute minimum. A critical person is seldom entirely satisfied with results 100%, because there is nothing executed in an absolutely perfect manner; but this critical attitude must be combined with tact and a very definite understanding of human nature. Very often the opening wedge in criticizing is mild praise. By no means allow yourself to become a super-critical individual.

Forcefulness is another quality that can be developed. One has got to be forceful to put ideas into action with any hope of seeing them executed. Of course, the idea must be right basically or else all the persistence in the world won't sell it or put it over. A leader must be dependable if he himself demands that quality in others. The smallest task or the execution of the simplest plan carried out thoroughly, will develop dependability. The quality and policies of leadership must always be constructive, and true kindliness towards people is the earmark of a good leader.

A leader is active, never passive; he plans, commands, co-ordinates, trains, energizes and criticizes and is a technician in his particular business—above all a demon for work. His instructions and direction must be positive. When instructions are once given, do not becloud them or confuse

MOTOR BEARINGS: If there is heavy rumbling sound when starting a fractional horsepower motor, it is very likely that one or more bearings are worn out and need replacing right away. There is only about .010-inch to .015-inch clearance between the rotor and the stator iron. If the bearings wear enough to let these two touch, the result will very likely be a burned-out motor.

● Write us your electrical problem. An expert reply will be promptly Electrographed.

the main objective by going into all the details of execution. Let the subordinate have some leeway for the use of his own imagination and initiative. Instructions should be given clearly, in simple, understandable language. Very often ideas are so clear to the originator that when others hearing them for the first time do not grasp them, you judge them stupid by the questions they ask. At such times, impatience or reprimand is very much out of place and unbecoming to a leader. Reprimand in private, commend in public, is always a good policy. Sarcasm, ridicule or personal remarks always react to belittle a leader of men. All leaders must allow time for the proper execution of their plans by subordinates. There has been a great deal of "eleventh hour" leadership in the operation of motion picture theatres. There is really no excuse for such last minute changes and discussions; they are apt to destroy confidence in the ability of the leader more quickly than wrong decisions.

No leader is justified in feeling or believing that his plans, aims or ideas are the only ones worthwhile. Such a conceited and "cock-sure" attitude is ruinous to successful leadership. The individual's will and desire ought not to be repressed, nor is it just to expect them to conform to such methods. Leadership must be for a purpose—for emphasis; leadership is not just an expression of power, superiority or authority.

LEADERSHIP VERSUS BOSSISM

THE MOST notable difference between being just a boss and a leader is intelligent planning, order, execution and purpose. The leader has developed, in nine out of ten cases, as the result of a definite effort and self-planned, deliberate application. The most successful leader seldom expresses anything new—he merely guides the already existing organization, with forethought, alertness and awareness. The real problem is the continuous reforming, transforming and direction of the organizational efforts to meet changing conditions. Leadership does not superimpose any scheme of mystery or magic over the everyday activities of business, but it utilizes every existing fact, figure and bit of experience and imagination to direct and control the future of the theatre.

Men in our business fall pretty generally into one of three classes: those who look upon the theatre as representing a task to be performed; those who look upon the theatre as just a routine to be administered, as an enormous machine; and, those who regard the operation of a theatre as a problem to be solved.

In the first case, the theatre is just routine work, no initiative or individual thinking is needed. (The strongly centralized circuit organization of a few years ago developed many like this.) In the second case, to such individuals, systems, order, a lifeless sort of efficiency and organization become ends in themselves. The large "super-deluxe" theatres, excepting the managing directors and publicity men, seem to develop this attitude. In the third case, the theatre is a living, breathing, vital thing, an opportunity for constructive thinking and planning. This approach is the natural one to leadership.

Those managers who, being honest with themselves, are in the groups one or two mentioned above, might just as well make up their minds now to change their attitude and make their plans to get into group three. The young, aggressive leader is the type of manager that will survive, for initiative, coupled with intelligent application, will be demanded.

Management in 1935 is to be that in which leadership is the keynote. Leadership imposes the obligation to use initiative, individual thinking and fair regulation in the pursuit of greater net profits.

A COOLING PLAN (Answering R. L. K.): Your general plan for cooling is all right. Its success will depend upon the way you work out the details of the installation of the additional equipment. Here is some general data pertaining to air-washer design that will help you.

Air-washers properly designed will handle 4 to 5 hundred cubic feet of air per square foot of cross sectional area. Spray nozzles operated by a pump at a pressure of 60 pounds require 4 to 5 gallons of water per minute per 1,000 cubic feet of air. A spray nozzle of the rotary type is rated at $1\frac{1}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ gallons of water per minute.

From this information (using the lower figure in each case) it will require $2\frac{1}{2}$ square feet of cross sectional area of air washer for every thousand cubic feet of air; and it will require four spray nozzles for each $2\frac{1}{2}$ square feet of cross sectional area of air washer.

If the velocity of the air going through the air washer is kept below 800 feet per minute there will be no appreciable loss in capacity of the fan due to frictional pressure.

The average depth of a well in Indiana is 40 to 60 feet. A well producing 50 gallons per minute will be required; that is, if you are going to use fresh water all the time. This won't be necessary all the time, but the equipment should be ample to take care of it should you find it necessary during hot spells. As long as you plan to have a well, plan to supply all of the water requirement of the theatre from that well. This will mean a small saving.

Here are some controlling factors in determining the efficiency of an air washer: (1) Fineness and uniformity of the spray. (2) The length of the spray chamber. (3) The impact of air and water (water pressure and air velocity). (4) Quantity of water per unit quantity of air.

It would be a mistake to consider the use of the air washer only for summer cooling. Air washers are humidifiers and should be used throughout the winter. For winter use there must be installed a pre-heating coil installed between the washer and the fresh air intake. This coil must be of such capacity that the air at all times striking the air washer will be above the freezing point. The higher the temperature of the air the more efficient humidifier the air washer becomes.

HEATING PLANT TESTS: If you have any automatic devices, such as water feeders or regulators, oil cut-off valves that have been installed to protect your boiler and theatre, make arrangements to test them out the first day you have steam up in your boiler. Blow off the float chamber, or otherwise deliberately lower the water level in the boiler to see whether the protective devices function properly. Such tests should be made at least every week during the regular heating season.

SAFE LADDERS: Are the ladders in your theatre safe, are they strong enough to hold a man's weight? Cheap and broken ladders are expensive for any theatre. Don't risk a broken leg, neck or back to save the cost of a good ladder. A good ladder should have long, straight grain spruce for side rails and white ash for rungs or steps. Home-made ladders are not worthwhile. The rungs or steps of a well-made ladder should be inserted into the side rails and anchored there. Step ladders should have well put together strong spruce braces. The steps on all ladders should be a uniform distance apart (the usual distance is 12 inches). Portable ladders should have some sort of non-slip bases. Corrugated rubber makes a fairly satisfactory base for general purposes: however, it is useless on a wet floor. Have a man hold the ladder.

BUSINESS LAW AFFECTING EXHIBITION

By LEO T. PARKER

Reviewing for theatre operators higher court decisions in cases involving commercial relations common to showmen

DURING THE year 1934 many important legal controversies involving theatre owners were decided by the higher courts in various localities. Chiefly it is interesting to observe that in numerous instances the courts take into consideration present economic conditions and governmental rules and regulations intended to return prosperous conditions.

STATE SALES TAX LAWS

OBVIOUSLY in view of the large variety of tax laws and regulations to meet federal, State and municipal expenses, a great many of the recent theatre litigations involve payment of taxes. Recently numerous states have passed laws requiring payment of taxes on sales of merchandise, commonly known as "state sales tax." Therefore, it is interesting to review the established law on this subject.

It is well settled that a state cannot compel payment of taxes on interstate business, although it may legally collect taxes on intrastate business. Usually, a transaction is intrastate if any part of the transaction is fully completed within the state. If, however, a seller located in one state sends a representative into another state, and orders taken by such representative are sent to this employer outside the state, and the goods are shipped directly from the seller's location, the transaction is interstate, for which the state cannot legally collect tax.

CASE

For illustration, in the leading Supreme Court case of Robbins v. Shelby (120 U. S. 489, Memphis, Tenn.), it was disclosed that a salesman from another state stopped at different points within a state to solicit orders. These orders were shipped directly from the foreign state to the purchasers. Controversy developed over whether the state into which the goods were shipped could legally collect a tax thereon.

The Supreme Court of the United States held that the sales actually were not completed until the goods were delivered and accepted by the buyers, and therefore such transactions are purely interstate for which no state tax is collectible. This court said:

DECISION

"The only way in which commerce between states can be legitimately affected by state laws, is when, by virtue of its police power, and its jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits, a state provides for the security of the lives, limbs, health and comfort of persons and protection of property."

On the other hand, the law is well established that a seller is transacting intrastate business if he has title to merchandise stored in a foreign state and then ships or delivers such goods to purchasers within the state from this stock of stored goods.

CASE AND DECISION

For instance, in a leading case Eisenmayer Company v. George E. Shelton Company (3 S. W. [2d] 688, Little Rock, Ark.), it was disclosed that a seller shipped a carload of merchandise to a broker in a foreign state and had the same stored in a warehouse. The merchandise was shipped to purchasers within the state on orders received from the seller. These transactions were held to be intrastate and therefore taxable.

CASE

Also, in another case (247 S. W. 389, Murfreesboro, Ark.) it was shown that a company, through its traveling salesman, obtained an order for merchandise from a purchaser in another state. The goods were shipped directly to the purchaser but the seller retained title in the merchandise. The court indicated that this is intrastate business, saying:

DECISION

"One test laid down differentiating an interstate transaction from an intrastate transaction is the ownership of the property after it arrives within the state. . . . An interstate transaction contemplates a consignor without and a consignee within a state, or vice versa."

WHEN SOLICITOR COLLECTS MONEY

THE MAJORITY of persons believe that if a solicitor collects money when an order is taken, this act results in the transaction being intrastate, although his employer is located outside the state and the goods are shipped from this foreign state. However, this is not the law.

For example, in the recent case of Mills v. City of Portland (268 U. S. 325, Oregon), the Supreme Court of the United States had occasion to consider this question thoroughly. In this case a municipality enacted an ordinance requiring all solicitors, who collected a deposit on orders for future delivery, to pay a high license. A company located outside the state contested the validity of the law, and the higher court held the ordinance invalid, saying:

DECISION

"The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state, in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce. Manifestly, no license fee could have been required of appellant's solicitors if they had traveled at its expense and received their compensation by direct remittances from it. And we are unable to see that the burden on interstate commerce is different or less because they are paid through retention of advance partial payments made under definite contracts negotiated by them. Nor can we accept the theory that an expressed purpose to prevent possible frauds is enough to justify legislation which really interferes with the free flow of legitimate interstate commerce."

AGENT DELIVERS MERCHANDISE

IT HAS BEEN held that although an agent of the seller delivers goods and collects money therefor, this fact alone does not result in a city or state being entitled to levy a tax where it is shown that the agent's orders are sent to the headquarters, or main office, of the company for which he works.

CASE

For illustration, in Cason v. Quinby (53 So. 741), it was disclosed that an agent and traveling salesman of a Pittsburgh, Pa., corporation canvassed for the company and took orders for merchandise by displaying samples. When orders were taken he sent the same to the company at Pittsburgh and when he received the goods he delivered them to the customers, received the money therefor, and remitted it to the company in Pennsylvania. The goods were the property of the company until they were paid for and delivered. The agent received a salary from the company and no commission on sales.

DECISION

In this case it was held that this business is interstate commerce and that the Pennsylvania state taxation laws are void.

Also, the fact that an agent is paid on a commission basis does not convert an otherwise interstate transaction into an intrastate one. For instance, in Wilk v. City of Bartow (97 So. 307), it was disclosed that an agent sold merchandise made by the company, at Hartford, Conn.

His method of doing business was to go from one place of business to another in different states and display samples of his goods to prospective purchasers, solicit orders, and make sales at retail prices direct to the purchaser. If a sale was effected, an order was taken. At the end of each week the agent compiled a sales representative's order, upon which order articles sold during the week were enumerated. The order was mailed to the company's distributing station. receipt of shipment the agent selected the articles called for on orders and delivered them to the purchasers, collecting the purchase price and retaining 40 per cent. as his compensation.

It was held in this case that the transactions were interstate commerce, and that the ordinance of the city requiring payment of a license was invalid as a burden upon interstate commerce.

WHEN GOODS ARE SHIPPED C. O. D.

ALTHOUGH GOODS are shipped C. O. D. from a seller in a foreign state, this kind of transaction is interstate. For example, in the leading case of Myers v. City of Miami (131 So. 375), it was disclosed that the city of Miami, Fla., enacted a taxation ordinance.

CASE

A corporation located in Indianapolis, Indiana, maintained an office in the city of Miami consisting of two rooms, upon the outer door of which was the name and location of the corporation. In these offices were located desks, stenographers, telephones, files, cabinets, order books, and samples of equipment and other material. Each Sunday advertisements were inserted in newspapers for salesmen to solicit orders. All of the orders were mailed by the branch manager to Indianapolis and were shipped by the corporation to the purchasers C. O. D. In holding this corporation not required to pay the license fee, the court said:

DECISION

"A municipality cannot by ordinance lawfully impose a burden upon interstate commerce. . . . The question to be determined is whether the ordinance of the city of Miami, as applied to the facts of this case, is invalid, as an attempt to impose a burden upon interstate commerce. . . . The business actually carried on by petitioner in the instant case was exclusively interstate commerce. The tax sought to be imposed upon the office or business was one upon a means or occupation of carrying on interstate commerce."

WHEN TAX LAW IS VOID

A STATE TAX law is invalid if it violates either the United States Constitution, or the state Constitution, or a United States statute. Moreover, it is void if it is unreasonably restrictive, or disadvantageous to the general public. A city ordinance is void if it violates the United States Constitution, the state Constitution, or United States statutes, or a provision in the municipal charter. Also, it is void if it contradicts a state statute, or if it is unreasonable, or if it is against public policy, or if a particular class or business firms or individuals are favored, or if its enforcement is delegated to a city official.

On the other hand, it has been consistently held by the higher courts that the intentions of the buyer and the seller, with respect to title to shipped goods, is a most important consideration when determining whether a state may collect a sales tax on merchandise shipped from one state into another. A recent court held that the state, into which merchandise is shipped, may tax the merchandise if it is proved that the title to the merchandise did not reside in the purchaser until after it was delivered, providing the seller and the purchaser are located in the same state.

For illustration, it has been generally held that legal title to shipped goods remains with the shipper during transit, if the price of the merchandise is F.O.B. the place of delivery. In other words,

FORMATION OF CORPORATIONS

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member New York Bar

THE MOST important form of business organization in existence today, in this country, is that of the corporation. An understanding of the elements of the law of corporations is most helpful to a theatre owner, for while his business is not always organized as a corporation, he may hold stock in one, and he deals with corporations every time he rents a foot of film, and usually when he buys equipment.

For an understanding of the corporate form of organization, it is necessary to picture the corporation as separate and apart from the people who own its stock or manage it. A stockholder is an owner of a corporation to the extent of his ownership of its stock, so that if he owns one share out of the million outstanding shares of the "X" corporation, he owns, in effect, one-millionth part of the corporation.

However, the stockholders owning a corporation are not the corporation. The corporation is legally considered to be a third person—so much so, in fact, that the stockholders may even make contracts with it or sue it.

The features distinguishing a corporation from the individual or partnership form of organization, are:

1. It is organized by permission of the State in which it is formed, and is at all times subject to regulation by that State.

While any person may go into business or form a partnership without the sanction of the State, a corporation must be organized as provided by the law of the State in which it is to be formed, and a charter or certificate of incorporation must be filed with State authorities.

2. It may legally do only those things which its charter or certificate of incorporation permit it to do.

An individual or partnership may go into business and change from it to another, but a corporation may conduct only the business which its charter permits it to conduct. To do things not permitted by its charter, a corporation must first have its charter changed. For example, a corporation organized to brew and sell beer may not go into the field of motion picture exhibition without a change in its charter. However, to carry out the business of brewing and selling beer, it may do all things necessary to that end, such as buying land for the erection of a brewery, even though this power is not mentioned in the charter.

4. It survives the death of its stockholders and its life is permanent.

As has been previously pointed out in these articles, a partnership is dissolved by the death or bankruptcy of a partner. A corporation, however, remains in existence even though its stockholders die or dispose of their stock.

5. The stockholders of a corporation may dispose of their interests in it by transferring their certificates of stock.

Transfer of interests in a corporation is simple compared with transferring an interest in a partnership, for by merely indorsing his certificate of stock to another, a stockholder transfers his interest in the corporation.

6. A stockholder, once having paid for his stock, is not individually liable for the debts of the corporation.

A person who has subscribed to the stock of a corporation, but has not paid the price, may be compelled to do so by creditors of the corporation. With this exception, the stockholder ordinarily may not be compelled to pay the obligations incurred by the corporation.

The last mentioned feature of a corporation, limited liability of the stockholders, as well as the factors of permanency and easy transfer of ownership are the chief advantages of corporate organization. On the other hand, corporations are more expensive to organize than individual or partnership enterprises, are subject to control by the state and must pay taxes, such as franchise and corporation taxes, which an individual or partnership is free from.

title to shipped goods ordinarily passes to the purchaser at the F.O.B. point.

Another important rule of the law is that under these circumstances the shipper, or consignor, is liable for any injury to or loss of the goods during transit. Therefore, if the purchaser becomes bankrupt or, for other reasons, the consignor decides to stop delivery, he may order the carrier to return the shipment at any time before it reaches the destination. However, this rule of the law is not always applicable, especially if the F.O.B. point specified in the bill of sale or lading is not the real intention of the parties.

CASE

For instance, in Commonwealth (173 Atl. 404, Pittsburgh, Pa.), it was shown that a seller, whose principal place of business is in the state of Pennsylvania, sold certain merchandise to a purchaser located in Pennsylvania and ordered the goods to be shipped from Wilmington, Del.

The shipment moved under a bill of lading showing the seller as consignor. The place of shipment was indicated as Wilmington and the destination was at Philadelphia. The invoice made out by the seller, and sent to the purchaser, stated that the shipment was made F.O.B. Wilmington, thus indicating that the title of the merchandise resided in the purchaser before the shipment began to move.

The legal question involved was whether the shipment was subject to tax in the state of Pennsylvania. It was contended that since the purchaser took legal title to the goods in Delaware, that the state of Pennsylvania could not tax an interstate shipment. However, the higher court held Pennsylvania entitled to tax the goods as an intrastate shipment, and said:

DECISION

"The contention of appellant (seller) arises out of the circumstance that the price was fixed F.O.B. Wilmington. This, however, does not necessarily mean that title passed there. . . . The authorities (Courts) holding that delivery to a common carrier is delivery to the vendee have no application here, because the intention of the parties, which is controlling on the the question of delivery, shows that the title was not intended to pass until the goods reached their destination."

CASE AND DECISION

Also, in Minnesota v. Blasius (290 U. S. 1), the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, said:

"But because there is a flow of interstate commerce which is subject to the regulating power of the Congress, it does not necessarily follow that . . . a state may not lay a non-discriminatory tax upon property which, although connected with that flow as a general course of business, has come to rest and has acquired a situs within the state."

Therefore, a state may tax an interstate shipment, if the buyer and seller both are located in the same state and the title to the merchandise does not pass to the purchaser until after the shipment arrives. Under these circumstances the sale is not completed in a foreign state, nor is the shipment an interstate one.

On the other hand, in the late United States Supreme Court case of Sonneborn Brothers v. Cureton (262 U. S. 506, Dallas, Tex.), it was disclosed that the seller was located in a different state from the purchaser. The contract, therefore, clearly contemplated a shipment from the seller to the purchaser in interstate commerce. In other words, the movement in interstate commerce was not merely incidental, but was intended by the parties to the contract of sale.

Under these conditions it was held that

A NEW MODERN FRONT DESIGN

Pictured above is the new front of the Southern theatre in Oak Park, Chicago suburb, erected for Essaness Theatres, Inc., in place of the one shown below. The design includes the use of carrara glass with door trim and frames of alumilited aluminum for the lower portions. New doors and hardware were also installed. Parapet walls were raised and straightened, and the brick was painted to harmonize with the balance of the scheme. The marquee is of sheet metal with polished aluminum strips. The theatre operated as usual during the alterations. The architects were B. Leo Steif & Company of Chicago.

DESIGNS USING PREFABRICATED CONSTRUCTION

FRONTS AND GENERAL INTERIOR PLAN BY M. B. BOHM ADAPTED TO A METHOD OF STEEL AND CORK CONSTRUCTION FOR SMALL THEATRES OF MINIMUM COST

THE BUILDING construction method employing steel units in combination with corkboard, which is an insulating as well as structural material, has been further adapted to theatres, following its rather recent introduction for this purpose, through the formulation of a standardized plan and the incorporation with this of fronts and outer lobby portions in other materials.

Essentially, the method consists in the erection of steel uprights and trusses prefabricated in sizes proportionate to established auditorium sizes determined by a series of seating capacities, and the walling and roofing of this skeleton with 3-inch corkboard (see floor plan and structural diagram). Partitions, of course, are similarly constructed, while the flooring consists in a mixture of cork and concrete. The exterior (except for the front or other portions prominently exposed to the street) then requires only some such surfacing as stucco.

The plan calls for a simple interior treatment (see sketch at top of page). Across the upper portion of the auditorium is of course the trusswork, in somewhat of a vaulted span. These can merely be painted. Exposed steelwork along the walls, however, may be covered with enameled metal in a selected color.

The cork is left exposed, but it is laid on in layers of dark and light natural shades. The cork surface is varnished to protect it from dirt. Along each wall is a truss, made up of metal plates, containing a ventilating duct. Provision is thus also made for wiring and any other conduit. The underside and the side facing the audience could be covered with a fabric of texture and color having a decorative effect.

Three of the front elevations designed by M. B. Bohm, New York architect, are shown in the accompanying sketches (on opposite page). In Sketch No. 1, the upper portion is designed for construction in blocks of suitable material, and "Corkcrete" (mixture of concrete and cork) may be used. The slabs would be cut to pattern and clamped to the structure like stone facing, the blocks being chaffered to create a line pattern. At the marquee level a metal strip is provided. Above the marquee the design calls for a decorative motif in some ornamental material, possibly incorporating the name sign. The sign could also extend out, facing up and down the street. Lobby wall facing may be in enameled steel, vitrolite, carrara glass or a similarly suitable material.

Sketch No. 2 visualizes the possible use of tinted stucco with moulding motifs of enameled metal, and a central decorative motif in terra cotta or even metal. The strip at the marquee level could be of metal with red ornamentation. The base could be of a material like vitrolite, rather than of metal, which is impracticable at the sidewalk level because of its susceptibility to scratches.

Sketch No. 3 shows a design calling for materials similar to those noted in the previous designs, employed in much the same manner. This sketch, however, presents a marquee with a stepped soffit lending itself to a variety of lighting effects.

The scheme calls for isolation of the projection room structurally.

A THEATRE IN A BIG BRITISH REALTY PLAN

Views of the auditorium, facade and foyer of the Odeon. The front elevation had to be adapted to zoning laws forbidding removal of trees. Auditorium lighting is principally of the trough type.

ONE OF THE most interesting developments of recent theatre enterprise in England has been the incorporation of a cinema theatre as part of a much larger building scheme, embodying business premises or residential flats, or both. While the principle of employing sites to the utmost advantage is an old as well as an obvious one, and the incorporations of shops and offices in frontages one of its most frequent manifestations, the new schemes are quite different and much more ambitious.

Ordinarily, the provision of rentable premises is a case of making the most of a site bought for cinema purposes; what is now happening in England is that sites are being acquired of such a scale that in each case a theatre necessarily occupies only a small portion of it. From the financial angle, the cost of the whole building scheme is such that the theatre becomes only one of several sources of revenue.

An interesting example of the new type of enterprise is to be found in the Odeon theatre in Haverstock Hill, London, the latest addition to the Odeon Circuit controlled by Mr. Oscar Deutsch of Birmingham. The site in this case is situated in the inner suburban district of Hampstead, where the cost of land is very little less than in London itself. Its size was such as to render its use for a theatre alone impracticable.

There was the further difficulty that the site was subject to town planning restrictions. These not only limited the number of flats which might be erected, but offered extensive regulations applicable to cinemas adjacent to domestic buildings.

The method of planning adopted was to devote the main road frontage to shops, with two floors of residental flats above, and to throw the cinema auditorium back, leaving only its entrance (adequate but considerably more narrow than the auditorium) in the frontage.

Another big block of flats was erected in the rear of the theatre building, but separated from it, and entered from a courtyard, to which access is obtained from a side road.

Car parks are embodied in the scheme, but even after allowing space for these, there was ample space to provide gardens, in which old trees were preserved, as well as ample free space between the three sections of the scheme—the frontage with its shops and flats, the theatre, and the rear residential block.

In the public main road in which the frontage is placed, more trees were preserved and form an unusual frame to the cinema entrance, while the residential amenities of the flats above the shops are increased by the fact that they are set well back from the frontage, with a small garden space over the shops.

The scheme as a whole has resulted in

PROJECTING COLOR FILMS

A technician in color photography considers some of the practical problems this medium brings to projectionists

WITH IMPROVEMENTS in color processes in motion picture photography bringing color back to the screen, after a period when color had all but disappeared from at least feature pictures, the special factors, if any, controlling the projection of color product, should be noted by the projectionist. Little or nothing has been seriously said about the projection of color films despite the fact that they have been the source of much fretting in projection rooms. The material here presented is rather tentative, but it is all that could be achieved in response to inquiry from those who may perhaps be judged as knowing most about color photography and projection.

The most important factor in the projection of color films is focus. This is on the authority of J. A. Ball, vice-president and technical director of the Technicolor Corporation. Declares Mr. Ball:

"If you were to join together black and white prints from two different laboratories and project them, you would discover that if equal sharpness of focus is maintained, at the splice between the two a slight shift of the projection lens would be necessary.

"This is in part due to the difference in the way the two films will lie in the aperture, either because of humidity or the manner in which the two films were handled at the laboratories, etc. This effect is particularly in evidence where technicolor film is spliced to black and white. True, the difference is slight, but it nevertheless is there, and is of just sufficient amount to be of very real importance. The really able, conscientious projectionist will therefore check his focus at all such splices. After the first projection he will know which way to move the lens, and approximately how much.

"In photographing color insert sequences we try to arrange a 'transition scene' similar to the newspaper insert in the color sequence at the end of "Kid Millions," a production recently released. This provides the projectionist with an excellent opportunity to check the focus, and we hope he will avail himself of it.

"Along the same line I would like to protest against the use of a Grandeur screen for color sequences. I witnessed this at one New York City theatre and the result was bad. It is a sufficiently hard job to analyze a scene into its three component primary colors, and then recreate that scene by printing those components on the small area of the motion picture film frame, without having the result manhandled by Grandeur projection. Not only is its effect bad for definition, but it makes for a very much decreased level of illumination because of the great space over which illumination, forced through the tiny photograph, must be spread, to say nothing of the literally terrific magnification.

"And now let us pass on to secondly, which has to do with the spectral quality —the color of the projector light source. We balance our prints for, and inspect them by a high-intensity light. I believe you call it a Hi-Lo arc. However, from actual tests we know our prints will give satisfactory results when projected by any arc light source, whether it be high-intensity or low-intensity.

"If, however, our prints are projected with an incandescent light source there is, of course, a considerable loss in values, particularly at the blue end of the spectrum. This does not necessarily mean that the result is ruined, but it does mean that it will be inferior as compared with results from arc light projection. There is just now a new a.c. low power arc designed for use in small theatres that produces light of the same spectral quality as that of the high-intensity arc. This low-power light is much to be preferred for color projection as against incandescent light.

"My third point has to do with brightness of the screen itself, usually stated in terms of foot candles. In a great many theatres, especially the smaller ones, the screen brightness is inadequate for best results either with black-and-white or color. Technicolor does not require any more illumination on the screen than does black and white, but it has an added value to the screen when properly projected, and by that same token, when projected with inadequate brilliancy the 'failure to deliver' is more noticeable.

"With high power equipment it is of course possible to err on the other side, and ruin the effect by over-illumination. However, the most common fault, especially in the smaller houses, is inadequate illumination. Not only is dim illumination bad for color, but it is bad for everything and everyone concerned. The art of the actor, the director and the cameraman suffers."

The question has been raised that despite the belief that color films require no more illumination on the screen than black-and-white, more light might very well be required if the color image were to have the same illumination value as black-and-white. Mr. Ball explains this as follows:

COLOR DEFINITION

"Using the color red as an example, if we absorb all the light forming true white light except the orange-red band, which we visually recognize as red, there still will remain a brilliancy of red comparable to that of the original white light, because those are the conditions in nature under which the eye is accustomed to view all scenes.

"As a means for comparison and to completely illustrate the point, suppose we consider a red, white and blue flag, having for background a foliage green. Were we to photograph this in black and white, the red, blue and green values would appear as shadows on the green. They would be differentiated from the white by varying degrees or amounts of white light.

"Now did we photograph this same scene in color, instead of having a band of neutral gray, we would have a band of red, the brilliancy of which would materially exceed the corresponding brilliancy of the gray band in the black and white picture. This would be true, not only because of its transparency, but also because of the color contrast between the white and the red. This same analogy applies to all colors."

As has been indicated, this is all rather tentative and incomplete, giving rise to certain questions and suggesting further inquiry, most logically emanating from the men in projection rooms themselves on the basis of their most recent experiences in color projection.

PROJECTION AND THE STAGE EMPLOYE

THE ADVENT of motion picture entertainment and its rapid advancement in the favor of the public, has gradually reduced the number of so-called "legitimate" theatres, vaudeville houses and so on until stage employes by the thousands have been thrown out of work and forced to find other means of livelihood.

Unfortunately, and for some reason unknown to me, projectionists were not originally organized into a union of their own, but were taken into the stage employes' organization. The situation is just that today. While there are many unions composed wholly of projectionists, there are many more in which the stage employes and projectionists are in the same local union. And so it was that when jobs for stage employes were reduced by something like 80%, it was decided to take up the surplus, since it belonged to the same organization, and too often to the same local union, by giving unemployed stagehands jobs as projectionists whenever possible.

Now that might be all right were the stagehands competent projectionists. However, not one in ten of them has anything more than perhaps some little knowledge of how to thread a projector, trim a lamp, make some sort of a splice and perform a few other routine duties.

Surely projection has suffered enough by incompetent outsiders who have "busted in" as machine operators, who still are such, and probably always will be just that, and nothing more. Conditions often compelled their admission into unions (anyhow the unions thought they did)—and after their admission some unions made absolutely no effort to force them to advance in knowledge and competence in projection.

It would really seem that it is about time to call a halt. If stage employes can show themselves to be really competent projectionists, well and good. They then may justly be deemed to have preference. If they cannot, then most emphatically they have no right to expect, much less demand, the privilege of filling a projectionist's position until a suitable apprenticeship in projection has been served, (six months, at least), coupled with such study as will equip them to do the job properly.

Fairness, not only to the profession, but also to the exhibitor, the public and the motion picture industry, demands that this course be followed. The exhibitor and theatre manager have not always treated projection, the projectionist and the IATSE & MPMO fairly, but that doesn't lessen the projectionist's responsibility.

ABOLISH "MOVING PICTURE OPERATOR"

I HAVE JUST had a talk with George E. Browne, International president of the IATSE & MPMO, who impresses me as a serious minded, "square-shooting" officer who is not bound by traditions and precedent. During our chat I told President Browne that I thought retention of "moving picture machine operator" in the title of the organization does considerable harm. Somewhat to my surprise he listened attentively and at the end of the talk agreed that the continued use of such a title did do harm. He was quite able to understand the psychological effect of it, which up to now no International president has been able to do.

The term "machine operator," or its abbreviated form, "operator" cheapens the whole profession, reducing it to a mere mechanical "trade" for which employers can see no reason except compulsion for paying any considerable sum of money. Men are willing to pay "big money" for ability and brains. They do so more or less willingly. But who can imagine the necessity for any abundance of ability or brains merely to operate a machine?

Whether President Browne will further any attempt to change the name to one more intelligently descriptive of the work of projection, I cannot say, but I am quite certain he at least will not oppose one. I therefore suggest to advanced I.A. men that a determined attempt be made at the next convention to discard the term "machine operator," substituting therefor the modern, otherwise almost universally adopted term, motion picture projectionist, in such form as may seem best; or if it seems still better, to discard the division of terms entirely, making the union name something like International Alliance of Theatrical Workers, or International Alliance of Stage and Projection Room Employes? Those are, of course, merely suggestions. Doubtless something very much better might be devised. The only thing I am interested in is the discarding of the antiquated, misleading, belittling term, "moving picture operator."

UNION LOYALTY AND PROJECTION

SOMETHING LIKE twenty years ago I dropped in on the boys down in the city of Washington. It was one of the many trips which have brought me into personal contact with thousands of projectionists all over the country and Canada. Most of them were then little more than boys—at least as viewed in comparison with conditions today. A few, however, even then stood out for the serious way they took their work. They were not satisfied with the results they were then able to get and were looking forward to something better—not only "looking" forward, but working hard to improve things.

One of these men was Lester Isaac, who certainly has since traveled a long way in the right direction. Always a one hundred percent I.A. man, he was for many years very active in the affairs of his local. He organized the Washington and other chapters of the American Projection Society. For a considerable time he was White House projectionist, an honor in itself. Isaac has indeed been a very busy man in a variety of ways that have helped to improve conditions in projection and conditions for projectionists.

He has been with Loew's, Inc., for twenty years. Eight years ago he was appointed director of projection for the entire circuit. I have previously commented upon the business-like, efficient manner in which he has organized and conducted his department. The job is a big one, as a recent meeting of Loew projectionists more than amply shows.

At this meeting, with M. D. O'Brien, Isaac's assistant acting as secretary, nearly 500 men answered rollcall, every one of them a projectionist in a Loew metropolitan theatre and a member in good standing of Local Union 306.

In addressing the men Isaac made no bones about telling them pointblank that for the company he represented he expected, not hot air, but real projection service. He emphasized the point that while a man must be a union man, he must also be both able and willing to deliver the goods.

"The time has gone," said he, "when a union card and conversation is all that is necessary. There must be a union card, but the card must be backed up by knowledge and real ability, plus energy enough to apply them in the work."

From time to time Isaac calls midnight meetings of the men working in Loew's New York City projection rooms. This is in addition to the many personal contacts he has through frequent visits to the theatres. He has found that such meetings provide an opportunity to get over some of his ideas, to develop a better understanding between him and the men.

He strongly emphasizes his views that the inefficient or careless projectionist is a distinct detriment to the I.A., and that, more and more, recognition of the I.A. is going to be based upon the basis of service rendered by its members. Conditions and methods change in every field of human endeavor, and it is obvious that I.A. men will be compelled to fall in line and keep up with the procession.

Many of the strongest-organized cities are those in which the officers of the I.A. locals demand that their members be on the job while on the job (if you know what I mean). It is all very well to boast of hundred-percent loyalty to the I.A. but just how really loyal do you call the man who discredits the union he belongs to by delivering inferior work? And mark you, inferior work may be done even when the screen and loudspeaker results are good, for the reason that the excellence is not secured at a minimum of operating cost.

The truly loyal I.A. man not only delivers the very best possible screen image and sound, but he does so at a minimum of

Some years ago my friend, P. A. McGuire, advertising manager of the International Projector Corporation, wrote something that is illustrative of the advance in projection. Said he, "The motion picture projector is no longer a mere mechanical contrivance, cranked by hand or made to operate by the simple closing of a switch. The projectionist of today must have an excellent knowledge of mechanics, electricity and optics and is in charge of a delicate and complicated mechanism made with scientific accuracy to handle a fragile and somewhat inflammable material.

"The projectionist has a great responsibility—for failure to measure up to the right standards means that all the producer, director, actor and cinematographer have striven for loses much of its artistic and commercial value, the pleasure of the audience is lessened, the exhibitor is subjected to constant and unnecessary expense, and lives and property are endangered."

Every word of which is gospel truth. Truly the day has come when union membership and conversational loyalty is not enough. There must be, in addition to those things, an excellence of work that comes from knowledge and pride.

A HURRY CALL FOR 2,000-FOOT REELS

THE FOLLOWING interesting letter comes from John T. Seiler, Long Beach, Cal., concerning the proposed 2,000-foot reel:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: The organization of which I am president took up discussion of your article on reel lengths in a recent issue at one of our meetings. After examining the situation from our viewpoint, and taking into consideration the production and distribution problems involved in making the change, it was decided that nothing less than 2,000-foot reels would be satisfactory. This conclusion was transmitted to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, from which a reply was received to the effect that that body was working on the proposed changes and hoped for some of them to materialize in the future.

"It may be that I am a bit impatient, but it really seems that it is taking entirely too long to bring about so important an improvement. It also seems as though the projectionists could themselves hasten the process materially did they make a major issue of it by taking action and writing the Academy, giving a few 'gentle hints' that we don't want the improvement to come about after we are dead, but while we still live and can enjoy getting a show we don't have to double up and then un-double again when through with it.

"Surely it is not a selfish demand made solely with a view of avoiding the work of doubling up, but also one which has directly to do with improved screen results, and prints in which the actors speak all their allotted words, instead of soon having a lot of them chopped off by repeated doubling and un-doubling.

"Another improvement is this: To any experienced projectionist it is very apparent that the end of a reel is coming some while before it arrives, for from 10 to 20 feet from the end, the film is usually covered with a moss-like deposit composed of dust and dirt which has been gathered up by the wax and static charge, the latter set up both by friction in projection and rewinding, followed by the tail end of the reel coming into more or less intimate contact with either the floor or the rewinder table. In this I say nothing (much) about the myriad scratches, dots and punch marks affixed by 'machine operators' at the near end of each reel (1,000-foot or otherwise) for their convenience, plus a lot of small scratches inflicted by friction under the excessive pull on the film roll near the end of the reel.

"In short, I am thoroughly and heartily in favor of taking such action as we may to force action on the 2,000-foot reel at the earliest possible moment.

"And now, Friend Richardson, I have a little personal problem upon which your help will be welcome. Am using a pair of Bausch & Lomb Super-Cinephor projection lenses, projecting a picture 33 x 26 feet at 115 feet. I find it impossible to secure sharp focus on both sides of the screen. Either one side or the other may be brought into sharp focus, but not both sides.

"The manager assures me that when the projectors were installed they were placed equi-distant from the center line of the auditorium, which, it appears, is true. They are 6 feet apart, which setup should not produce any distortion due to lenses not facing the screen squarely. The only conclusion I have been able to arrive at is that the optical system itself does not lie on the optical axis of the light system. I have seen adapters that would permit the shifting of the projection lens laterally across to give proper alignment. Can you tell me where they may be had?"

I have heard of no such adapter. I believe, however, that you are in error in supposing the fault to be due to the optical system, or to the misalignment of some part. Such a fault would hardly produce the effect you have described. The fact that you can sharpen either side, but not both, merely by adjusting the projection lens, makes it pretty evident that the trouble is wholly due to a lens which is not facing the screen squarely.

You have not given consideration to one phase of the matter, and that is the huge width of the screen image, which makes a lot of difference. You tell me you have a screen image 33 feet wide. In the name of the prophets, why? What is the idea in thus enormously enlarging every photographic fault, besides making even the perfect parts more or less "fuzzy," spreading your light over the enormous area of 858 square feet and compelling the patrons seated down front to try to follow motion over that great space?

While so little as 3 feet off center would amount to nothing in a picture of reasonable width, with one 33 feet wide it mounts up, as you will discover if you lay the thing out to scale on paper. Moreover, such a picture size makes everything wholly unnatural. You have, for example, giants on your screen and sound voices that most emphatically do not match them. You would get a far, far more pleasing picture were these dimensions reduced to not more than 20 feet wide. The image would be far better illuminated, immeasurably sharper in detail, and in every way better; also, your trouble would, I am very certain, wholly disappear.

As to the reel matter, I thoroughly agree. I believe the Academy is making an honest effort to get the thing cleared up, but that the producers are very slow in making any real attempt to give practical aid in the matter. I thoroughly agree that unions should take action, as bodies, communicating an emphatic request for the thing to be sped up. If it were something the producers wanted for themselves, it would be forthcoming pronto, regardless of what the theatre men might or might not want—that is, unless it had the effect of cutting down business. Cost or trouble of making the change would be as nothing. I agree that we all should proceed to raise a littlell until something is forthcoming in the 2,000-foot matter besides conversation.

A LENS PROBLEM DELIBERATELY MADE

DOWN FLORIDA way an exhibitor or projectionist seems to have pulled a bad boner (even as we all do once in a while). Two Snaplite lenses that were delivering the goods acceptably, were removed, and two new lenses, described as "adjustable," were installed in their place. While my informant does not say so, "adjustable" certainly must here mean lenses the E.F. of which may be altered by changing the distance between the front and rear element—a thing that cannot possibly be done with any projection lens without serious disturbance of the corrections, one result of which is likely to be reduction of depth of focus. The letter tells me the new lenses will not sharpen the picture on both sides of the screen and that the result from both lenses is the same.

Whoever authorized the removal of lenses that were doing good work had considerable confidence in himself, for the E.F. of the lenses is only 3.5 inches. It is very difficult to get really good definition all over a screen when using lenses of a focal length as short as 3.5 inches. Because of curvature of field, it would not be too easy were the lens central in all directions with center of field. In this case there is a 12° projection angle and the side throw usual where two projectors are used.

The condition is very bad for the best lenses. For a lens that is so-called adjustable, I would consider it quite impossible. The only possible thing to do is to get the

WHAT PROJECTION REALLY INVOLVES

THE OLD TOPIC of foolish ideas regarding projection, on which I have written many times, has been brought up by Pasqual Valenti of Trenton, N. J. He writes:

"Your articles are very educational to me, as I am certain they are to other men in the projection field. I write to ask a question, an answer to which in your Comments, will be greatly appreciated; also, I am sure it will benefit your other readers. It is this:

"I have heard many men, not projectionists, remark upon how simple projection is, that it should take only six months or possibly a year to learn it thoroughly. I have heard electricians say they could learn it very quickly and easily because they already understood electrics. Not only that, but many men who have learned to thread a projector and make a changeover have the idea that that is all there is to projection. Text books, study, etc., are wholly unnecessary, say many of them. I have talked with such "projectionists," invariably finding it impossible to convince them that projection consists of anything more than a few simple, more or less mechanical acts.

"Now, F. H., I would appreciate it very much if you would, in your own inimitable way, explain just what projection consists of and what there is to learn. I ask you to do this for the sake of the many who have secured a position as projectionist with nothing more than a minimum of knowledge, and now have the idea there is nothing more to learn. For the sake of those who are not in the profession, but consider it very simple; for the sake of those many who want to learn, but think they can do it in a very short time without any text books at all, please do this."

I fully realize that the three classes named are with us; also, it is almost a total waste of energy to talk to them—until something happens. But wait until something does happen—an examination law passed for example—and observe how they scramble!

Such talk has its foundation either in a total lack of knowledge of projection, or in just plain stupidity. Its result is, insofar as the matter has to do with projectionists, mostly evident in increased operating costs, relatively inefficient performance of equipments, waste in electric power, and comparatively poor results in both sound and image.

Many times I visit theatres where the manager and projectionists are very evidently quite proud of both sound and picture excellence, yet in ten seconds I have picked anywhere from two to half a dozen remedial faults. Neither manager nor projectionist has made any real study of projection, therefore they are unable to recognize minor faults, or perhaps even major ones, especially in sound.

Projection fundamentally involves expert handling and operation of (a) mechanical assemblages functioning at high speed and under heavy strain, that are built and for best results must be adjusted with all the fine precision of a high grade watch; (b) electric and magnetic assemblages that are extremely complex and must be handled and adjusted with great care and complete understanding if the best results are to be attained; (c) optical trains that have sadly puzzled many an expert optical gentleman, which must be kept in perfect adjustment by the projectionist.

The qualified electrical engineer may reasonably believe himself to have some advantage, since he has general knowledge of one phase of the projection structure, but that by no means qualifies him, even electrically, in projection. He may be ever so expert an electrician in the general acceptance of that term, without fully comprehending, for example, the application of the light from an electric arc to screens.

The real trouble lies in the fact that projectionists, by their own actions, have set up the idea that projection is a very simple matter—so simple, indeed, that they need only to glance at the working projector once in a while. After some little practical experience, one may put on a show of sorts, and since many theatre managers do not themselves have the training permitting them to check up on either picture or sound results, or to form any intelligent judgment as to what harm is done to costly equipments through wrong procedure in adjustment and care, such "amateur" projectionists sometimes get away with it.

HOW TO PROJECT A SINGLE FRAME

THE PRINCESS THEATRE in Republic, Pa., asks if there is any method by which the projector may be stopped and a single frame of the film projected upon the screen indefinitely.

I hesitated about answering this query, but finally decided to do so on the grounds that I know of such stunts being attempted with disastrous results because wrongly done. Possibly, therefore, instruction may be beneficial rather than otherwise. However, let it be clearly understood that such a thing should not be attempted unless careful preparation is made as follows:

In some cases only the center of the picture will appear. How much of the frame would be illuminated would depend upon the diameter of the cone of light that might be projected, and that would depend upon the diameter of the light source and the distance between the converging lens or mirror and the aperture.

First, it is necessary to ascertain exactly the optical axis of the light at the plane of the mirror. This may be done by stretching a thread from light source center, to center of aperture, and in some manner supporting a pointed object in contact with the thread at the plane of the rear surface of the dowser. Remove thread, drop dowser and mark on its surface the exact position of the point.

Now at that exact point, drill a hole 1/16-inch in diameter through the dowser. Energize the light source, and a beam of light will go forward to the projector aperture, exactly central therewith if the hole has been drilled exactly at the right point.

Next, removing all other film, hold a short piece (by means of plyers) in the light as close as possible to the aperture. If there is not enough heat to affect it (there should not be), thread in a piece of film and see if (a) the entire frame is illuminated, and (b) if there is sufficient light to cause the picture to be plainly visible on the screen. If only the center of the frame is illuminated—well, it is just too bad, for there is nothing that can be done about it. If the frame is entirely illuminated, but the picture is too dim, that may be remedied by running a 3/32-inch drill through the hole, or possibly one even a bit larger than that. However, be very cautious. Try it out thoroughly on the short piece of film.

Remember, all this is perfectly safe if done carefully and intelligently, but it is not a thing to be careless about. The small hole in the dowser may be covered with a small piece of sheet metal so riveted to the dowser blade that it may be moved to cover or uncover the hole.

And now here is a stunt I wish some of you would try out and report results on. I believe a single frame might be projected at least fairly well by one of the big flash lights, the beam of which may be so concentrated that it is almost parallel. Probably I'm all damp on that, but anyhow some of you try it out and advise me. You doubtless can borrow one of the lights (they are about a foot long) from your local hardware dealer.

EXCESSIVE TENSION AT THE APERTURE

LUKE HALL, projectionist of the Rio theatre in Sayre, Okla., writes, "I have two 6B Powers projectors in fairly good condition except for the intermittent movements, on which the stars and cams are pretty badly worn. There are new intermittent sprockets recently installed.

"On one projector a film with strained or weak sprocket holes will go through okay, but I can hardly get the same film through the other. It tears out the sprocket holes, loosens the lower loop, and often breaks the film. I have set and reset the tension and readjusted the idler roller brackets, but it does not seem to help. What causes this and how may it be remedied? Where can I buy the latest edition of the Bluebook?"

You may have reset the aperture tension, Brother Hall, but I think it is nevertheless the seat of your trouble. Too much tension on that projector is almost without doubt where the fault lies. It could not very well be anywhere else. Loosen up that tension until the screen image becomes unsteady. Then tighten it just enough to stop the unsteadiness, and I'll bet you dollars to dimes the smile of contentment will again be on your face. An unlikely but possible contributing factor might arise if the inter-

FLICKER FOLLOWING A NEW SCREEN

JOHN R. SNOW of Harvard, Ill., reports some trouble as follows:

"Again I call on you for advice on a very important matter. Your opinion on the following will be highly appreciated.

"Ten days ago we installed a new screen in the Saunders theatre, where I am projectionist. Since it was put in we have been compelled to tolerate a very nasty flicker, from about 30 feet back from the screen all the way up to it. It is visible only in light scenes.

"I admit the screen has very high illumination. I cut down the current flow from 42 to 22 amperes upon installation of the new screen, and still the illumination is 100% brighter than it was on the old one at 42 amperes.

"This theatre has a width of 23 feet. I project from the rear of the balcony at about a 5° angle. The projection distance is 97 feet. The screen image is 13 feet wide. I use Peerless low-intensity lamps at, as I said, 22 amperes. Simplex mechanisms with front shutters. Width of blades, 7⅛ inches. Was using a 6½-inch blade, but widened it to clear up all travel ghost.

"Another thing, Mr. Richardson: If I installed two new castiron E-16 film trap plates, would it relieve me of picture being out of focus on one side—the same side—with each projector?"

My advice probably will not be very welcome. First of all, it would be to install rear shutters immediately. There are many reasons why this should be done, not the least of which is that with the front shutter you are subjecting both your mechanism and the film to more than twice the heat that would reach them with rear shutters.

You say you have widened the shutter blade. Do you mean only the master blade or both blades? Either way, however, you have probably thrown the shutter badly out of optical balance and made flicker almost certain with a brilliant screen.

You probably could have eliminated the ghost by locating your front shutter at the right point. Try this experiment: With the projector standing still, the fire shutter blocked up and the shutter in "open" position, project the white light and pass a thin, opaque sheet (cardboard will do) down through the beam at varying distance from the lens until a point is reached where a shadow starts from both top and bottom of screen, meeting in the center. If you can get your lens out far enough to reach this point you probably can use the old shutter without travel ghost. If you cannot, then see if you cannot get it out to a more narrow point of the beam.

You have an unbalanced condition that causes the flicker and you may or may not be able to eliminate it by reducing your screen illumination, or by doing as I have suggested. However, the right thing to do is to get a rear shutter. It will end your troubles and make all conditions far better.

As to the out-of-focus effect, you surely have very poorly corrected lenses. I doubt that your proposal would help much, if any. Better try to get better lenses. You should not have this trouble with that little picture at 97 feet, unless you have your projectors spaced too far apart. For that projection distance the lenses should not be more than 4½ feet apart.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THEATRES

JOHN L. GRAINGER, an exhibitor of St. Louis, Mo., writes, "Both myself and my projectionist follow your writings and find in them very real help. May I ask you two questions, as follows: How many motion picture theatres are there in this country, and just how do the number of theatres in cities of more than 10,000 compare with those in smaller places? We hear all kinds of tales about these things and would like to have the low-down.

"My projectionist asks me to express his thanks for the aid your Comments and books are to him, and since anything that helps him to do better work helps me and my customers, I add my own thanks."

I am grateful for your generous remarks, Friend Grainger. As to your questions, I just yanked down the Motion Picture Almanac for 1934-35 (a 1,114-page pamphlet published by the Quigley Publishing Company), turned to Page 889, and there was the whole thing spread out.

The total number of motion picture theatres in the United States is 16,849. Of this number, 9,185 are in towns of less than 7,500. Incidentally, there are 9,260 cities, towns and villages having theatres. There are 110 theatres having in excess of 3,000 seats, 346 between 2,000 and 3,000 seats, and 8,190 between 200 and 500 seats (only 1,975 have less than 500). You're welcome.

HEAR LECTURES ON PROJECTION

IN CONNECTICUT the I. A. unions formed a state association at Hartford, back in 1928, the idea being, as I understand it, to bring about co-operative action among the unions of the state, and to take such action as might seem beneficial to the various organizations. The association now has 18 union enrolled, with a total membership approximating 550.

Recently I was advised that the association had obtained the services of Professor H. A. Macfield, for lectures to the projectionist members in Hartford, New Haven and South Norwalk. There is one lecture per week, so that each city and the unions in its surrounding territory, enjoys the privilege of a lecture each third Wednesday. Deeply interested, I arranged to drive to New Haven to attend one of the lectures, and believe you me I was most agreeably surprised. I had expected (Mr. Macfield being a college professor) to listen to some academic speech worth about one cent a rod in practical affairs.

It was not so at all. The night I attended the meeting the professor lectured upon fundamental matters in electrical action, making things very plain. For example, he explained the reason for torque motion in a motor, and never in any textbook or elsewhere have I heard the matter set forth in such thoroughly understandable form.

At each meeting the professor gives out papers containing matter for study during the interim between sessions. My compliments to professor Macfield. If what I heard that night is a fair sample, there are many large unions (306 and 110, for example) that might with very real profit engage him for a series of lectures.

The officers of the Connecticut association are Thomas J. Shea, president; George Beazil, vice-president; J. S. O'Connell, secretary-treasurer. My compliments to those gentlemen as well as to the association as a whole. As I understand matters, it is not the purpose of the professor to deal with working details of practical projection. He intends rather to impart an understanding of fundamental things in electricity and allied subjects.

It does seem to me, however, that it might be well to make the sessions of two-hour duration rather than of one, devoting the last hour to what might be termed projection practice. The trouble would be in finding a really good lecturer. Relatively few men, regardless of their technical ability, are capable of imparting knowledge to others effectively.

The Connecticut association has taken an advanced step. At the meeting I attended possibly 50 men were present. Just how many were eligible to attend I do not know, but certain it is that every union man who might have been there and was not, should be thoroughly ashamed of himself. I say "union man" for the simple reason that since the unions are paying all the expense, ($50 a week, I understand it to be) the meetings presumably are for union men only, though it would seem to me that men in small places surrounding the lecture city who are not members, though possibly they have applied for membership and been refused, might be admitted to the meetings upon payment of a small fee. It would indeed be a generous thing for the association to invite them on that basis, provided, of course, they have a "clean slate"—have not declared themselves, by act or word, as enemies of the union.

HOW TO GET AHEAD IN PROJECTION

FROM A SMALL TOWN in New York State comes a most sensible letter. Space is scarce, but such letters should be read by dissatisfied ones and those who believe projection offers nothing worth really striving for. Here is the letter, almost word for word:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I am writing to obtain information that is of great importance to me. Having noted your honest, sincere opinions in Better Theatres and Motion Picture Herald, I am sure your advice will be helpful.

"For the past four years I have operated motion picture machines. Before starting on that job I took a short course in projection that taught me some of its fundamentals, and passing an examination, obtained a license to operate in Buffalo. I also passed an examination in Pennsylvania and received a state license. I am a member of local union 676, Hornell, N. Y.

"I have been quite successful in projection. At least my work has satisfied my manager, as well as the Western Electric service engineer whose equipment I am operating. However, the field of projection is very large, and I feel my knowledge does not cover one per cent of it. Therefore, I come to you for advice. I want to study projection, to the end that I become fitted to handle any job in that field, or to pass any examination that may confront me.

"From the financial viewpoint I am able to meet my expenses, but little more. The town is a small one and the wages are in the same category, but knowing the conditions I am thankful to have what I have. Can you suggest any way in which I can broaden my knowledge through study? Please advise me."

I suggest that you get the first two volumes of the Bluebook of Projection, and Nadell's "Projecting Sound Pictures." Nadell's sound book is newer than volume 3 of the Bluebook, which is the sound book. It is written in excellent style. I recommend it. Before very long we hope to have the sixth edition of the Bluebook ready, and you may take it from me, it is going to be very excellent in both sound and projection.

Moreover, you should make a real attempt to follow "The Bluebook School" in the weekly Herald. Work out the answers and send them in each week. The work will soon grow interesting.

You are wise to stay where you are until things get better, but as soon as you think it safe you will do well to make an effort to get work with some local union in a larger place as a permit man, which will start you well upon the right road, or at least it should.

BRITISH BOOK ON PROJECTION

THROUGH THE COURTESY of S. Rayment, editor of the Kinematograph Weekly, London, England, I am in receipt of a British book on projection published in Kinematograph Publications, Ltd., has 237 pages of combined text and illustrations, the latter numbering one hundred and forty-six. In addition, two blueprints and one black-and-white are tipped in. The author is R. Howard Cricks, A.R.P.S. (whatever that last may mean). The covers are of the same color as my own Bluebooks.

I compliment Mr. Cricks on writing for the most part understandably.

1934 PROGRESS

● Advancements in the field of applied electricity and electro-mechanics during 1934 show that year to have been as productive of progress as many another that was far more prosperous industrially. This is indicated by the review recently issued by Mr. John Liston of the General Electric Company. The significance of these developments bears so importantly upon all activities that we should like to present the report almost entirely did space permit. The progress made was sufficient for Mr. Liston to state that despite the modernization which has already been undertaken, it may be conservatively estimated "that more than half of all American industrial machinery is today obsolescent in part because of recent improvements in electric equipment." To consider only those advancements which concern in some way the theatre field, Mr. Liston reports:

"Practically every element necessary for complete air conditioning was improved to make possible the effective heating, cooling, humidifying, dehumidifying and circulation of the air with co-ordinated units.

"There was developed a complete new system for the transmission and distribution of electric power, making it possible for the first time to interconnect, with static apparatus, non-synchronous systems. This was done by the utilization of electronic devices including Thyratron tubes and Phanotron tubes. It was found, in the operation of this new system, that a higher order of stability had been obtained as contrasted with previous practice and that faults similar to short circuits result in a reduced instead of an increased power flow."

Among scores of devices of great practical importance in diversified industrial and technical fields, is an audio noise meter, an automatic sound recorder, and the "Lumiline" tubular lamp. In the latter a single coiled filament is drawn out into a continuous line from end contract cap to the other. An improvement was made in watt-hour meters, consisting in a jewel screw, which without the use of gaskets or special fits, prevents the leakage of oil.

And don't theatre folk own automobiles? Then: Automobile headlight lamps were improved to minimize the variation of filament position with respect to the reflector —a development "which makes practicable the use of smaller headlights."

"SUPREX" AMPLIFIER

● A rectifier rated at 60 amperes especially designed to supply curent for "Suprex" carbon arcs, has been developed by the Baldor Electric Company of St. Louis. Its complete rating is as follows:

From 25 to 60 amperes, 30 to 40 d.c. volts, with an additional tap to supply 55 d. c. volts. The voltage range of 30 to 40 volts is for the "Suprex" carbons, while the extra voltage tap of 55 d. c. volts is to supply current to low-intensity carbon arc lamps.

This rectifier, marketed under the trade name of "Handy," is supplied for operation from a 3-phase, 60-cycle a. c. circuit, and cannot be operated from a single-phase circuit.

FROZEN PIPES

● A timely warning concerning frozen water pipes has been sent out by the National Fire Protection Association. The warning points out that a burning match, torch or open flame should never be employed for thawing out frozen water pipes. Property owners and managers are advised to wrap the frozen section with cloth and pour hot water upon it until the ice in the pipe gives way. Rags on the floor at the base of or under the pipe will absorb the waste water.

And if you are constructing a new theatre, or revamping your plumbing, avoid running water pipes along outside walls. It usually can be done, and to do so is likely to save trouble and expense.

VACUUM CLEANER

● A new model vacuum cleaner adapted to theatre use has been brought out by the Kent Company, Inc., of Rome, N. Y. The force of the suction has been doubled in this model by use of newly designed fans powered by a ¾-horsepower motor. The hose has been increased a quarter of an inch in size. The motor is a Westinghouse, encased in aluminum. The base of the machine is also constructed of aluminum.

The bag is double and is entirely enclosed in a steel can, preventing dust from filtering through. The can rests upon the base above the motor and fans, making the design vertical. The entire unit is mounted on two rubber-tired wire wheels and a swivel castor.

NEW REEL

● A reel recently developed and exhibited by Herman A. DeVry, Inc., of Chicago, has been made ready for the market in both 16-mm. and 35-mm. models. A special feature of the reel is its "non-dishing" character, due to spring steel construction and to a sliding contact of spokes with the hub, preventing the molecular displacements that cause distortion.

The 35-mm. model is made for 2,000 feet of film.

NEW AMPLIFIERS

● A new line of amplifiers has been brought out by the Clough-Brengle Company of Chicago, to meet the demands of sound reproduction over the present extended frequency range. The amplifiers are designed for installation with any existing sound system, without other change.

OPEN SHOWROOM

● A new exhibit and sales room has been opened by the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Inc., in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago. The room contains over 10,000 square feet, and facilities include exhibit space for the company's entire line. The Chicago headquarters are in charge of Mr. E. P. Schuneman, manager for this territory.

a complete estate with three sources of revenue: shop rents, flat rents, and box office receipts. The overhead on the theatre enterprise is in no way comparable to those which would have had to be faced on a straight cinema investment, even if the rest of the site had been sold.

The theatre itself is a good example of modern design on the stadium principle favored by the Odeon Circuit. The seating capacity is 1,500.

The front elevation is in biscuit-colored terra cotta with green bands and ornamentation. In the auditorium there are metallic gold walls in alternating textured broad bands finishing on the proscenium margin, which consists of five lines of trough lighting framing the stage opening.

The ceiling in concentric golden panels rises to a large central fibrous plaster fitting, from which the main auditorium lighting is obtained. The underside forms a metal and glass feature usually illuminated, but capable of admitting daylight for cleaning purposes.

The architects of the Odeon were T. P. Bennett & Son of London.—BRUCE ALLAN, LONDON.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE ARE PLANNING on remodeling a building formerly a garage, which is 104 feet long and 46 feet wide. This building is glass across the entire front, and we thought the front could be used as it is, with the exception of a marquee over the doors.

The building is 15 feet high, sloping to 12 feet in the rear. Would it be possible to slope the floor enough to make the height 18 feet? We thought the building would be high enough after we dig the floor out, but we would like to know how much pitch we could allow and not make it too steep.

Could we go above the roof with the booth to allow for head room and outside air? What is used for booths?

What kind of a floor would you suggest for the inside? The front part has cement, and we wish to get by as cheaply as possible.

The inside is just rough brick. What would you suggest for covering that would be inexpensive and yet look nice?

I'm enclosing a diagram of this building so you can get an idea of what it is like. Would appreciate suggestions.—E. R. K.

The Answer:

AFTER STUDYING your floor plan I do not consider it advisable to use the present glass front. The doors are too small for a theatre entrance. Why not build a new front about 3 feet, 6 inches back from the sidewalk line with a ticket booth in the center and with double 6-foot doors on each side of it? As the ticket booth and doors do not require more than 18 feet in width, there will be left on each side of lobby ample space for men's and women's retiring rooms. Make the lobby 12 feet deep and plan for a foyer 8 feet wide. By removing the present three compartments on the floor, there will be left space to accommodate 25 rows of seats.

By planning the projection room above the lobby, you can obtain air and ventilation by placing windows in the front wall, and the construction of the projection room will be quite a bit cheaper, as it has to be constructed out of fireproof materials. The ceiling in the lobby could be lowered to 8 feet, 6 inches, and as the front of the building is 18 feet high, you do not have to increase the height of the front. The ceiling in front of the projection room is 15 feet, so there will be room for the projection room port shutters.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

Materials for the construction of a projection room are concrete, hollow tile, metal lumber or iron channels with cement plaster on metal lath on both sides. If possible lower the floor to obtain an 18-foot ceiling, then the ceiling height in the lobby can be increased. But in your case it is not strictly necessary and perhaps impossible, as the auditorium floor should have at least a 3-foot slope (3 feet, 6 inches would be better). But I doubt that the foundation walls are that far down, unless there is a basement under the building. I advise you to use cement flooring in the auditorium, as it can be laid directly on the excavated ground. Be sure to reinforce this floor to prevent settlement.

Since the inside of the walls are of rough brick, I suggest that they be stripped to obtain a plumb and even surface to be covered with some sound absorbing or wood-grained materials. This would give a dry wall. Or plaster directly on brick surface with acoustic plaster. This however needs decorating. Be sure to have the joints raked before plastering to obtain a good key.

For seating arrangement, I suggest a center bank of 12 seats across, with an aisle 3 feet, 4 inches wide on each side, and two wall banks of five seats each.

The Question:

I HAVE A building 47 feet, 6 inches wide, and 125 feet long. I want to put a theatre in same. Ceiling is 16 feet high. I think a French door in front to keep out street noise is advisable. Then I want a ticket office and lobby.

I would like only two aisles, but three sections of chairs, also an indirect lighting system so all chairs would be visible when pictures are showing, but not to interfere with pictures. I would like to have at least 600 chairs, if possible, but not any at angles on extreme sides so pictures would look out of proportion. I want the ticket office under the booth, both to occupy the same space. I also want booth soundproof.

How long should the elevated floor be? How many feet from rear should it extend toward screen? What elevation should floor be? How much fall to the foot? What would be advisable for covering bottom of skylight that is shown on sketch.—R. G. S.

The Answer:

FRENCH DOORS are all right for theatre entrance. For seating arrangement use a center bank of twelve or fourteen seats across (whatever amount the theatre building code in your state allows), with an aisle on each side, then two wall banks of five or six seats across, giving a total of 24 seats across the width of the house. You can obtain an indirect lighting system by suspending metal light troughs from the ceiling running the full length of the rows of seats. Three rows will be necessary to get the effect you are asking for. You will be able to place more than 600 chairs.

The walls and ceiling of the projection room should be insulated to prevent any noise from getting into the auditorium. For elevation of floor, leave first 15 feet near screen level, slope next 15 feet, 9 inches, the next 15 feet twelve inches, the next 15 feet fifteen inches, and so on in that manner for the full length of floor.

Remove or close up the skylight, cover the bottom the same as the ceiling. The width of the screen is generally one-fifth of the distance between the screen and the last row of seats, so it can be from 20 to 22 feet wide.

The Question:

I AM DESIROUS of some information from you, as well as suggestions, as to a show house for me. Will you not please advise me as to maximum seating arrangement in a building which has inside measurements of 69 feet by 23 feet, 2 inches. Wish to put in as many as is possible, and only wish minimum space for front and box office—in other words, have those practically on the street front, with only a small foyer. How about B. O. on side?

We have an RCA Photophone sound outfit, Style 28S2, a small one, and wish screen to be as near to back wall as sound box will permit. State how much space is needed there.

The rear exit is on left side rear at extreme back corner. Our idea is to get in as many as possible here, for we have second-run, and people come here for pictures, good sound and good seats and not for fancy work. We get 10c and 15c, so you see we wish volume in numbers.

We wish to get in from 225 to 250 seats. We have at present two aisles, but would wish drawing for the two on the side, or one wider one in the middle. Can use, we think, one in the middle, as that is the way it formerly was, and can put back, we understand it, since it was that at one time. Below is a sketch, very rough, of what we now have.—B. B. H.

The Answer:

THE BEST ADVICE I can give you is that to obtain the maximum seating capacity for a theatre of 23 feet, 2 inches by 69 feet, you plan for a center bank with one wall aisle on each side. You may be able to get from ten to eleven seats across the width of the house, depending on the width of the seats you are going to purchase, also on the thickness of the outside walls, which you did not show on your sketch.

You will be able to have 19 rows of seats, so the seating capacity will be about 190 seats. Place the box office in front at sidewalk, with entrance door on each side. As the lobby will be rather small, the box office on the side will not be as satisfactory as in front. Three feet may be enough in your case for horn space between screen and wall. By placing an aisle in the center of the auditorium you may gain 19 seats, but I do not advise you to do so, as the house is very narrow and you would lose the best seats.

Business Law Affecting Exhibition

the state in which the merchandise was received could not tax the shipment, but it could tax the goods, as being valuable property, after it was accepted and stored by the consignee or purchaser.

LAW OF BANKRUPTCY

A GREAT MANY theatre owners have incorrect information about bankruptcy law. Therefore it is very advisable that all theatre owners, managers and officials receive correct and dependable knowledge with respect to various phases of the law on this subject, in order to avoid serious legal difficulties in event it becomes necessary and advisable to take benefit of the bankruptcy laws.

The bankruptcy laws originally were formulated to relieve persons and firms of all debts contracted in good faith. In other words, the bankruptcy laws are not effective with respect to persons or corporation officials who exercised any degree of fraud or dishonesty to obtain credit.

For example, a debtor who intentionally files an untrue financial statement may be denied a discharge in bankruptcy. Moreover, a business man or corporation, who assumes a debt without fraudulent intent, cannot obtain a discharge under the bankruptcy laws if the equivalent of fraud is present.

CASE

Also, the Supreme Court of the United States in Morimura, Arai & Co. v. Taback (49 S. Ct. 212, New Jersey), held that carelessness in filing an incorrect financial statement is equivalent to fraud and, therefore, is a bar to discharge in bankruptcy.

The facts of this case are that a partnership firm rendered an incorrect financial statement. In view of the contents of this statement many sellers extended credit to the firm which became insolvent.

During the bankruptcy proceedings the creditors requested the court to refuse the firm a discharge of debts of the partners, on the contention that irrespective whether the incorrect financial statement was filed intentionally or carelessly it accomplished the same results. In other words, it enabled the partners to obtain credit and thereby effect the equivalent of fraud.

DECISION

It is important to know that the Supreme Court refused to discharge the partners in bankruptcy, which decision means that this debt remains forever against the partners until paid.

CASE AND DECISION

In another case, Barber v. Whitaker Manufacturing Company (20 S. W. [2d] 864, Little Rock, Ark.), it was shown that a person wrote a letter to a creditor in which it was indicated that his financial condition was good, when in fact it was bad. The court promptly held the creditor entitled to take back all shipped merchandise, although under ordinary circumstances a seller cannot take back goods sold to a bankrupt.

The fraud on the part of a debtor in such case consists in inducing the creditor to part with his goods or other valuables by statements which are false, or made when the debtor has no reasonable ground to believe that they are true. Obviously, a debtor who makes false claims under oath stands liable to be prosecuted for this offense.

Also, it is interesting to observe that a theatre owner cannot have a discharge of his debts in bankruptcy, if the evidence fails to prove that he acted honestly throughout the bankruptcy proceedings and previous thereto. Therefore, any testimony which proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the purchaser concealed his assets, or otherwise practiced fraud, justifies a court in disallowing the claim. So held a higher court in Lawand v. United States (33 F. [2d] 582, Toledo, O.).

TRANSFER OF ASSETS

MANY COURTS have held that a bankrupt's creditors may recover title to assigned property, if the testimony indicates that the purchaser knew or should have known that the seller was insolvent when the transfer was made. So held a higher court in the case of Unger v. Mayer (147 Atl. 509, Newark, N. J.).

CASE

The facts of this case are that it was proved that six months before a purchaser was adjudicated a bankrupt he recorded mortgages on his real estate valued at $24,000, it being stated that this money was borrowed from his father.

Certain creditors contested the validity of the mortgages. In holding the mortgages void, the court said:

DECISION

"Circumstances such as would put a reasonable person upon inquiry with respect to the financial condition of a transferrer will charge creditors or others dealing with a failing debtor with such facts as they would have learned had they properly investigated."

RIGHTS OF CORPORATIONS

THE LAW IS well established that different corporations usually are distinct entities in law. It is only where the corporation is a sham, or is used to perpetrate deception to defeat a public policy, that it can be disregarded. Facts not infrequently exist which warrant or require that courts look through corporate forms to the dominating personality behind them in order to prevent fraud, to protect the public, or to accomplish some essential justice. On the other hand, although one person may own all of the stock in several corporations, yet if no fraud is evident each of the corporations will be considered by the courts as being entirely separate from the other corporations.

CASE

For illustration, in New England Theatres v. Olympia Theatres (192 N. E. 93, Boston, Mass.), it was shown that the Paramount Publix Corporation owned all of the stock in the New England Theatres. Its officers and employes constituted all the directors and officers of the New England Theatres and a majority of those of Olympia Theatres, Inc., but a substantial minority represented other interests.

The Olympia Theatres were heavily indebted to the New England Theatres and other debts of closely associated corporations were apparent. In view of the close association of the various corporations the legal question arose over validity of appointment of receivers for the Olympia Theatres. In holding the appointment valid, the court said:

"There was no fraud or collusion in securing the appointment of the receivers. . . . There is nothing to indicate that all these corporations were not genuine and separate persons having independent capital. So far as appears, each carried on a distinct business in its own field. Each contracted its own debts and received its own revenue. Each occupied a well defined field in providing moving pictures to suit the public taste. . . . Ownership of all the stock in several corporations by one person does not create a single unit or justify a disregard of separate corporations. All the facts must be considered and due weight be given to each."

DISMISSAL ON TECHNICALITY

FREQUENTLY SUITS may be won by proper application of legal knowledge with respect to technical legal practice. At any time a suit is filed on improper grounds, the party against whom the suit is filed may request the court to dismiss the suit without further procedure. So held a higher court in the case of Lillie v. Warner Brothers Pictures (34 P. [2d] 835, Los Angeles, Calif.).

CASE

The facts of this case are that, by a contract in writing Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., engaged the services of Beatrice Lillie to appear in a Vitaphone Talking Production being produced under the temporary title of "Show of Shows." In the contract it was provided as follows:

"It is understood, that for her services in this production, Miss Beatrice Lillie will receive a flat sum of $15,000, payable in two weekly installments. It is understood that the one scene, which we supply her with, will not run less than six minutes or more than seven minutes, and the other scene is to run between two and three minutes. It is understood, that . . . the two above scenes are only to be used in connection with this revue, and not to be used in 'Shorts.' . . ."

Miss Lillie sued Warner Brothers Pictures to recover damages for libel contending that Warner Brothers Pictures "against her will and consent, wrongfully, unlawfully, wilfully, maliciously and fraudulently and in violation of her right to privacy, did subtract and separate from the film and records of said all-star production . . . and did present and exhibit said portions so separated in various theatres and at various public performances before large audiences of people as a 'short' or performance of short duration and inconsequential importance, and not in connection with or as part of the said major production . . ."

However, it is interesting to observe that the lower court held Warner Brothers Pictures not liable, and the higher court sustained the verdict, saying:

DECISION

"By the contract respondent (Warner Brothers Pictures) acquired a full ownership in the picture, subject only to the limitations contained in the contract. This ownership included the right to use the picture publicly in any form of exhibition, except as such right is limited by the terms of the contract. It seems clearly to follow that the exhibition of the scene as a short would not be a tortious invasion of the plaintiff's right of privacy. If wrong at all, it necessarily was only a breach of the contract."

ADJOINING PROPERTY RIGHTS

A PROPERTY owner may sue and recover damages from the owner of an adjoining theatre which is conducted or constructed as a nuisance, or in any other illegal manner.

On the other hand, it is important to know that an individual complaining of an unlawful structure must show that he has suffered some exceptional damage, other than that suffered by the public generally, otherwise he is not entitled to recover damages. For instance, an increase in fire hazard or in insurance rates has been generally held not to constitute a legal right of action for damages. The fact that property will be depreciated in value by the mere proximity of an unlawful structure does not entitle the owner of adjoining property to sue and recover damages.

CASE

For example, in Biber v. O'Brien (32 P. [2d] 425, San Francisco, Calif.), the owner of property sued to recover damages from the owner of a newly constructed adjoining building on the contention that the new building interfered with light and safety. In refusing to allow damages, the court said:

DECISION

"The fact alone that an unlawful condition exists is not sufficient to constitute a private nuisance. . . . As the intent or motive of the person who erects or maintains a structure or makes certain uses of his property is not material in determining whether there is a nuisance, so, if a structure is not of itself a nuisance, it cannot be complained of on the ground that it was erected and maintained with the object of annoying an adjoining owner unless the statute declares such structures to be nuisances."

LINOLEUM HELD FIXTURE

A LANDLORD can legally prevent a theatre operator, or any other person, from removing from the building anything whose removal permanently damages the premises. This rule of the law is applicable although the theatre operator purchased and installed the items in controversy.

CASE

For instance, in Gordon v. Cohn (30 P. [2d] 19, Napa, Calif.), it was shown that during the occupancy of leased premises the tenant covered the floor with linoleum which was cemented to the floor. Also, he furnished the material for an awning which was attached to an iron

CHECKING YOUR LIGHTING: A SERIES OF FORMS

The following form concludes a series prepared for guidance in inspections and covering the entire theatre.

AUDITORIUM

| ITEM | CONDITION FOUND | SUGGESTIONS |
|---|---|---|
| 31. Direction Signs Adequate? | | Strategically placed signs answer questions and relieve ushers. They minimize confusion. |
| 32. Gradual Change in Intensity from Foyer to Auditorium? | | Intensity from lobby to auditorium should be reduced gradually to allow eyes to accommodate themselves. |
| 33. Aisles Well Marked? | | Aisle lights help patrons to find seats and avoid stumbling. |
| 34. Enough Light in Auditorium? | | Patrons should be able to find seats without groping. Too dark an auditorium strains eyes, adds to usher expense, encourages familiarity, and boosts insurance rates. Light should be provided on side walls rather than on audience. |
| 35. Auditorium Over-Lighted During Picture? | | Too much light on people causes movements to be distracting. Provide light on side walls rather than on audience. |
| 36. Lamps and Fixtures Soft and Pleasing? | | Lighting should encourage looking about at intervals to rest eyes. There should be no unshaded lamps where they are likely to be seen. Sometimes glossy surfaces cause glare. Refinish with matt finish. |
| 37. Picture Clear and Distinct? | | If picture is washed out, light is spilling on it. Reduce illumination at front of auditorium to minimize light on screen. Too sharp contrast between picture and adjacent area is undesirable. |
| 38. Picture Free from Eyestrain? | | Picture may be out of focus, or have flicker or travel-ghosts. In these cases projector should be adjusted. |
| 39. Burnouts Noticeable? | | Periodic Group-Replacement, especially for inaccessible locations, minimizes burnouts and effects economies. |
| 40. General Effect Smooth? | | Poor quality lamps and non-uniform colored lamps cause spottiness. |
| 41. Lamps Operate at Full Brightness When Full Up? | | Dim lamps caused by lamps of too high a voltage rating or operating under voltage because of excessive line losses. Use lamp of proper voltage and use heavier wire where necessary. |
| 42. Decorations Bright and Cheerful? | | Refinish if decorations are too dark. Clean if they are dirty. In general, use matt rather than glossy finishes. |
| 43. Lighting Equipment Clean? | | Cleaning reflectors, lamps, and fixtures will increase amount of light obtained and eliminate dull and lifeless effects. |
| 44. Statuary Effectively Lighted | | Light from behind produces a silhouette. Best lighting usually from the front and above to one side. |
| 45. Coves Smoothly Lighted? | | Lamps too close to edge cause spottiness. A baffle may help. White paint in cove reduces spottiness. Matt finish should be used. |
| 46. Ceiling Lighted Over Entire Surface? | | Proper reflecting equipment needed to project light smoothly over entire ceiling area. Supplementary flood-lighting may sometimes be used. |
| 47. Coves and Sky Surfaces Free from Spilled Light? | | Lighting units should have baffles to prevent spilled light. |
| 48. Glass Panels Smooth and Uniform? | | Lamps should be moved further from glass and interior of box painted white. Use glass with higher degree of diffusion. |
| 49. Lights Brought Up at Major Picture Changes? | | With added light, patrons can see empty seats and movement of crowd and will empty and fill seats more quickly. |
| 50. Lighting Changed at Appropriate Times? | | With several colors available, lighting changes are a desirable feature. The all-blue theatre is time-worn. Other colors, selected for harmony and proper brightness provide a desirable change. Green is an essential color for mixing. Highlights of contrasting colors are attractive and enhance the other colors. |

Business Law Affecting Exhibition

frame set in the front of the building. The iron frame was fastened to the walls of the building by means of bolts and screws, and it was made to fit the particular space which it occupied.

The tenant became insolvent and sold his equipment, including the linoleum and the awning to an operator named Cohn. The owner of the building filed an injuction suit temporarily restraining Cohn from removing the awning and linoleum from the building on the ground that they were affixed to the premises for the purposes of trade and domestic use only, and could not be removed without injury to the building. There was ample evidence that, in order to remove the cement and the stains, which the laying of the linoleum upon the floor had caused, it would be necessary to remove the upper surface of the floor to the depth of a sixteenth or thirty-second fraction of an inch.

DECISION

In view of this testimony the higher court refused to permit Cohn to remove either the linoleum or the awning, and said:

"The question as to whether the linoleum and awning are movable fixtures is the only question in the case. . . . While the removal of the surface of the floor was not great, it was nevertheless a reduction of the floor thickness, and the owner was not required to sacrifice any part of his building in an effort to restore it to its former use and attractiveness. As to the awning . . . there was evidence to the effect that the bolts and screws, if removed, would make it difficult, if not impossible, to refasten another frame to the woodwork from which said screws and bolts were taken."

RESTRICTIVE DEED VOID

THE LEGAL QUESTION often has arisen whether a clause in a deed is valid which prevents the purchaser of a theatre building using it for amusement purposes.

Restrictions of the kind under consideration are not favored by the courts, and the rule is well settled that this court will not aid one to restrict another in the uses to which he may lawfully put his property unless the right to such aid is clear.

Further, the courts are uniform that the restraint imposed must be reasonable, and the test to be applied in determining whether it is reasonable or not is to consider whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interest of the party in favor of whom it is given.

In other words, if the restriction in either a deed or sale contract is greater than is necessary to give the seller a fair degree of protection, then the restrictive clause is void and unenforceable.

CASE

For instance, in Stanley-Fabian Corporation v. H. J. Theatrical Enterprise Company (174 Atl. 26, Newark, N. J.), it was disclosed that a theatre corporation sold a theatre building and included in the deed the following:

"As long as Stanley-Fabian Corporation, and/or Stanley Company of America and/or Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or their or any of their respective successors or assigns, or any corporation of which they or their or any of their respective successors or assigns own 51 per cent. or more of the capital stock, is the owner, lessee, or operator, or is interested in any place of amusement in that entire part of the State of New Jersey, which includes and is north of the City of Trenton, no part of the within described premises or of any improvements thereon erected or hereafter at any time, or from time to time, to be erected, shall be used or occupied, or permitted to be used or occupied at any time, or on any occasion for the exhibition of any motion pictures of any kind or nature whatsoever, or for the exhibition of any dramatic, theatrical, operatic or vaudeville performances without the prior written consent and approval of said Stanley-Fabian Corporation, Stanley Company of America and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. . . ."

Obviously, the intention was to restrict the premises (a theatre building) against the exhibition therein of any motion pictures, dramatic, theatrical, operatic or vaudeville performances, without the written consent of the seller thereunder, except that the present theatre building existing on the premises may be used, as to amusement purposes, for exhibition of legitimate theatrical performances only so long as the present theatre building stands. In holding this restriction void the court said the limitations imposed were greater than necessary.

approximately 4 feet apart on three 1 x 2-inch battens. (see front elevation, B, and side elevation, C, mortised as shown in end view, A). The facing, A, is blue plaster board bent over the side battens and tacked or glued on the back sides of the battens, G. A 2 to 3-inch band of heavy chipboard or wallboard can be used to finish off the top and bottom of the columns. (See Figure 1.)

The architrave, D, is a frame-covered with heavy manila paper. The under side, E, can be a like frame (or a 10-inch pine board of the required length), and the two nailed together at a square angle and braced (F) as in side elevation, C. Attach the columns to the architrave and hang on a set of lines. Peg bottoms of columns to the platform with stage screws or large screw eyes. Coat entire set with white or very light gray calcimine. Detail with grays and black. Flat white wall paint is best for steps and platform.

The "Kol Nidre" plan calls for a candelabrum (Figure 3), which is self-explanatory. To facilitate setting up and striking (handling) the platform structure, it is built in two sections. The candelabrum is cut from wallboard, each arm and the central shaft in separate pieces, and braced with 1 by 2-inch battens. Three arms and the shaft are assembled on one section, the remaining three arms are placed on the other section. The front and ends of the platform structure is draped with black fabric to match the black backing. The draping is, of course, done before the candelabrum is attached to the platform structure. The use of black for draping, and for the backing (back drop) is important. Black absorbs the light rays, causing the two, draping and backing, to blend together. This creates an illusion of the dancers being supported solely by the candelabrum itself.

The lighting on this number is equally important. A battery of eight baby spots on a batten about 10 feet in front of the candelabrum, spots the dancers and the singer. The stage is in low blue light, just strong enough to stand out the candelabrum.

Finish the candelabrum in gold bronze. Highlights are cream yellow, shadows and dark definitions in burnt sienna.

Costumes are flowing white robes with high necks and tapered sleeves. The chanter's garments may be borrowed from a local Jewish Society.

The suggestions offered in this series of articles on local talent stage presentations are based on actual performance. This is what proves them practical. Furthermore, the ideas submitted are not difficult to produce, not costly to stage. The manager who goes in for occasional home-talent stage presentations with whole-hearted enthusiasm will be delighted with the response and reaction of his patrons. Put a little extra effort behind stage entertainment, invest a few dollars in additional stage equipment as needed, dress the show with effective, yet inexpensive scenic novelties. Sloppy, careless staging mars the best of shows. Careful staging, good lighting and neat settings go a long way toward raising average entertainment to a higher level.

THE 1935 PUBLIC WILL DEMAND MORE PHYSICAL COMFORT FOR ITS MONEY

Moviegoers shop around for good pictures, but they continue to favor the most comfortable and agreeable theatres.

A comfortable seat, a soft carpet, good, clean air, a clean screen, a bright light upon it with no flicker or distortion, a theatre that is warm in winter and cool in summer, clear, audible sound—these are persuasive box office factors and the solicitude of every true showman.

The years since 1930 perhaps compelled an under-emphasis of the theatre's physical appointments. But times are improving, box office receipts are generally higher and credit for modernization is available through the Government's Federal Housing Administration. The 1935 public will demand more physical comfort for its money.

Better Theatres continues to bring to more than 14,000 exhibitors each month the most seasoned advice on the economical and profitable up-keep of theatres available in America.

CLASSIFICATION

THE evolutionary process by which the motion picture is being led into classifications and stratification of product and theatres for the service of the several publics—a favorite forecast of this page for several years—is now becoming much more apparent. Several of the manifestations accompany, rather than grow out of, the Legion of Decency movement, which must be understood, by-and-large, as a customers' movement.

Mr. Ben Schulberg, talking production the other day, anticipated two classes of theatres, one for strictly adult screen fare and another for family service.

Classifications, gradually evolved, will go considerably beyond age groups, and rather more importantly into differentiations of social strata. Currently in some parts of the country the process is to be discovered making differentiations of appeal even within the policy of single theatres. For instance, in several Connecticut houses adjacent to the metropolitan area, Thursday programs are definitely attuned to the tastes of the house servant class, where Sunday nights offer as sophisticated and intelligent material as the art affords. Also all through the towns of the interior where farmers come to trade the theatres, which through the week have presented upper bracket material, break out in a rash of westerns and serials on Saturdays.

The middle millions will always rule by buying power, but specialization in theatres and pictures will go on as long as there is an unserved class with enough money to pay for service.

It would also seem inevitable that as the motion picture develops its capacity for specially addressing its product at special audiences, production will be on much more assured ground, with perhaps narrower but much more certain profits.

As a part of this trend, somewhere in the distance, maybe too far for forecasting, there is to come a rebirth of the small neighborhood type of theatre of the years gone by, served cheaply, safely with sixteen millimeter mechanisms and films—escaping many of the costs and legal limitations imposed on the exhibition of today's standard films. The sixteen millimeter, sound-on-film machine, evolved largely in the service of merchandise propagandists and advertisers, is too important a retail instrument to be long ignored by the amusement industry.

IMAGINATION IS BETTER

A LONG plaintive plea for the preservation of the screen's masterpieces of the past and the establishment of "a permanent American theatre of the cinema" is uttered by Mr. Seymour Stern of Experimental Cinema. Mr. Stern, be it known, has been for years, from adolescence in fact, probably the world's most poignantly esoteric writer on the complex subtlety of our simple and obvious art. He fears that the Feast of Belshazzar and the ride of the Clansmen may one day be lost forever. It is at this moment our opinion that that fading out of the past is all that permits it glamour, and we would rather have glamour than facts. Just for instance imagine what a debacle of disappointment would be precipitated by the discovery of a bonafide photograph of Helen of Troy or Cleopatra. The motion picture world, despite the statute of limitations, has always had a distaste for history. Perhaps it is an instinct of wisdom.

THE ART OF AD LIB

THE stammerings and stutterings with which the big radio networks announced the arrival of Miss Amelia Earhart in Oakland at the end of her flight from Honolulu remind us again of the reportorial inadequacy of the art.

When the radio gets ringside it just has to keep on saying something whether anything is taking place or not. This involves the ad lib at great lengths and frequent intervals. The sonorous voice and unctuous diction of the radio announcer is no substitute for mental agility and imagination.

The radio could use for its spot news jobs men trained not so much in mouthing words as in reporting events. An oldster of the business is reminded of the casual competence of such a reporter as Mr. Arthur James Pegler, who without note or pencil could, and probably still can, pour into telephone or the ear of the telegrapher a sequential running story of the thrilling frenzy of a motor race, interpolate the accidents in sequence, and wind it all up in a lead-all announcement at the finish without missing a period, comma or paragraph mark, a story ready for the reading as it came off the wire.

When the story is better than the reporter the story gets the worst of it. It usually does on the air.

A MID-WESTERN viewpoint on the status of the Legion of Decency movement is presented by Mr. John C. Moffitt, writing in the Kansas City Star, saying: "To date results seem entirely on the asset side (so far as the public is concerned). The moral tone of general family entertainment has been raised, which was necessary. The intellectual tone of distinguished films has not fallen to any notable extent. In some cases the film companies held the bag with costly flops. . . . However, it was worth something to put the movie house in order."

LEGAL BATTLE

The legal battle between Marshall Square Theatres and Fox West Coast over the sale of the Fox circuit's assets to the new National Theatres, under reorganization, is continuing. Latest phase: Marshall Square petitioned the circuit court for the allowance of an appeal from an order given last month by the district court of appeals. . . .

COHAN MUSIC SUIT

George M. Cohan, author, actor and song writer, brought suit in the New York supreme court, for $150,000 against the Robins Music Corporation and Pioneer Music Company, charging they published and sold numerous of his songs without remuneration to him, and licensed others to use the songs in motion pictures. . . .

CENSOR REFUSAL

Despite local complaint that "The President Vanishes" at Loew's State, Memphis, is "psychologically wrong and encourages criminal tendencies," the local censor board has refused to take action on the ground it can cut or bar a film only in instances of immorality or obscenity. . . .

COLUMBIA BUILDING

A new concrete and steel fireproof dubbing stage, on which construction has started, is the first step in Columbia's 1935 studio building program. The latest acoustical construction will feature the building.

STOCK REPORTS

Samuel Carlisle, last month named a Warner director, has reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington ownership of 1,000 shares of Warner stock. Apparently, however, no other film executive has so reported, despite a law, in effect six months, requiring the holder of more than 10 per cent of the stock of any corporation to report any changes in his holdings within a month.

SUNDAY FILMS

Called to a city hall conference last week in Richmond, Va., exhibitors won the right to continue to operate on Sunday with the proceeds going to charity, as directed by a local court recently. The conference resulted from Police Chief Jordon's charge that exhibitors were not submitting financial reports as requested. The exhibitors contend their Sunday operation is at a loss. . . .

The New York supreme court last week granted to Du-Art Film Laboratories, Inc., a stay until this week in its suit against Universal, claiming that company is attempting to disregard a contract the plaintiff claims to hold for printing Universal product, in favor of Consolidated Film.

RADIO TRYING UNIT SHOWS AS POPULARITY DECLINES

National Broadcasting and Columbia Taking Control Away from Advertising Agencies to Get Showmanship; Rates Up

Alarmed over general dissatisfaction of the listening public at the constantly lowering standard of radio entertainment, the broadcasting corporations are going back into show business, taking radio production control and staging of programs out of the hands of the advertising agencies which represent large commercial sponsors.

Today some 90 per cent of the leading radio programs are produced by advertising agencies or production groups associated with advertising agencies.

Now the broadcasters want to become producers again. To do this they face the prospect of expanding their skeleton sales staffs, engaging the services of first class theatrical producers with a background of practical radio production, hiring better talent as a general practice for all programs

Not that the networks cannot afford to employ more and higher priced production officials. NBC and CBS finished 1934 with an estimated combined gross of $42,888,730, an increase of 37 per cent in gross business, a 30 per cent gain by NBC and 44 per cent by Columbia over 1933.

In tests made by the Loew-owned radio station WHN in New York, and called highly successful by station executives, sponsored programs are presented with only the name and business of the sponsor and no further sales talk.

Columbia Broadcasting has set the pace and in the last few months has created several outstanding programs and, more important, has sold them to advertisers.

At this writing, NBC is in the throes of reorganization of program presentation. Although officials of the network have declined practically every day for a fortnight to reveal details, it is known that much of the change will be incorporated in a plan for regularly scheduled full-length shows in which time will be sold to advertisers for prescribed periods. The office of John S. Royal, program director of NBC, this week said such a plan is under discussion, but Mr. Royal would not discuss the matter further. NBC on several occasions has attempted three-hour broadcasts sponsored by a single advertiser.

NBC is talking the matter over with several national advertisers, Mr. Royal explained, but he would not name them. As far as can be ascertained, the NBC shows would run for one, two or three-hour periods, and would incorporate many forms of entertainment, from grand opera to musical comedy, Shakespeare to burlesque and Mendelssohn to Gordon and Revel.

So certain are the broadcasters that new production policies will meet with public approval, and based definitely upon audience reactions to programs, that NBC—and probably CBS—is increasing time rates. NBC already has announced its new charges and Columbia is reported to be working on a revision of its network rates. It is expected that the new CBS card will be released within the next two weeks.

Besides National Broadcasting's revised network rates, effective February 4 and tabulated on the following page, here are NBC's new regional group charges:

THE CAMERA REPORTS

NATIVE STARS. Mara and Manui—Mara being she, and Manui he—as they appear in "Hei Tiki," a romantic drama of the South Seas produced and directed by Alexander Markey and Zoe Varney on the Isle of Ghosts, New Zealand. "Hei Tiki" is a First Division release.

BISHOPS VISIT STUDIO. Jean Muir, who is Helena in Max Reinhardt's "Midsummer Night's Dream," as hostess on the Athenian Woods set to three bishops visiting the Warner studio while in Los Angeles for a conclave of the Methodist Episcopal church. They are Bishops James C. Baker, San Francisco; Titus Lowe, Portland, Ore.; and Edgar Blake, Detroit.

BORROWED. Rosita Morena, Fox player, as she arrived in New York to appear in a Paramount foreign production. She is the fiancee of Melville A. Shauer, Paramount executive.

NEWARK MANAGER WINS EXPLOITATION HONOR. Sig Solomon of the Regent theatre receiving the Quigley Award for November at a luncheon given by Don Jacocks, Warner division chief, at the Hotel Douglas, Newark. Shown are A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table; Frank Damis, assistant to Jacocks; I. J. Hoffman, assistant general manager of Warner Theatres; Jacocks, Solomon, and A. Williams.

EVERYBODY OUT. Including Bert, the Wheeler of Wheeler and Woolsey. It's Newark airport, with Mr. Wheeler grounding himself en route from Hollywood to Manhattan. RKO Radio's latest Wheeler-Woolsey is "Kentucky Kernels."

TWO STUDIES. Above, a rather whimsical portrait of the Hungarian Irene Biller, signed by Universal. Below is pictured Douglass Montgomery as he appears in Universal's "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," a February release.

TIME OFF. Carole Lombard, Paramount star, as she arrived from Hollywood for a short vacation in New York before beginning her next picture. She recently completed "Rumba," in which George Raft has the masculine lead.

BUBBLES. Symbols, one might suppose, of an airy world of make-believe, wherein Kay Francis so much must dwell. Or, more likely, Elmer Fryer, who did this study of the Warner star (she's now making "Living on Velvet") was thinking merely of certain contrasts in substance and color.

Mr. Lippmann Does a Piece!

A discussion of a discussion of Morals in the Movies—or a piece about a piece

By TERRY RAMSAYE

IF you would unscrew the inscrutable, if you have any problem of politics, or economics or sociology, national, international or cosmic—if you want the solution of the riddle of the universe in a few easy words—read Mr. Walter Lippmann.

Mr. Lippmann is currently the world's biggest journalistic highhatful.

He knows and he tells all with the greatest of ease.

This Mr. Lippmann is one of the habits of the New York Herald Tribune and has a considerable following in the great metropolitan area. He is taken with the vitamins of the matutinal tomato juice by the thousands who commute each morning, an hour or so after the millions who travel by subway have had their Brisbanalities with their coffee-and. Those young men with the serious mien and heavy rimmed spectacles, who used to take Mencken's Mercury for what ailed them, now appear with the Tribune folded to the column headed "Today and Tomorrow by Walter Lippmann." The title is obviously a contraction of "Today, Yesterday and Tomorrow and Forever and Ever."

Life need hold no problems of import for one who has three cents and can get the Herald Tribune, for Mr. Lippmann will take care of all the answers just as rapidly as he can get around to them. He is complete, final, absolute, and as direct as a one-shot oiler.

So—as Mr. Ed Wynn has so ably remarked—so, it came the other day that Mr. Lippmann got around to taking care of the motion picture, both art and industry, in two columns with one swift motion.

Mr. Lippmann attained this position of pontificating authority on the motion picture by a route which began Harvard A.B. '09, and included the New Republic, Military Intelligence service, labors for Colonel House, the New York World, and now the Herald Tribune daily column.

In his encyclical entitled "The Moral of the Movies," published January 12, Mr. Lippmann gives evidence of having prepared himself for the task by the customary process of reading the papers, and to have aligned himself carefully with the many others inside and outside the industry who are entirely unaware of the facts or the documents of the current special concerns of the motion picture, including the platform and purposes of the Legion of Decency and the Production Code Administration, and the Production Code itself.

Again and again the movies have been reformed. After each spasm of virtue there is a period of calm, then a relapse, and then another spasm, he says, introducing his subject.

We should like to see Mr. Lippmann's notes on dates and occasions. He has beer reading pieces in the files, or remembering some, hazily.

. . . it may be asked whether the reformers have thought out clearly what it is that needs to be reformed and how the reform is to be brought about, he continues.

Mr. Lippmann's clipping service has not taken him the answer, but it is "Yes."

However, Captain Lippmann has a column to do, every day, so he assumes the answer is "No," and proceeds, ignoring, quite, the fact that the Legion of Decency movement has substantially no kinship with the bickerings of the "reformers" who have bedeviled the screen these many years, and that its effective influences have been and are being achieved entirely within the production machine of the industry. To be sure, he is neatly evasive enough to name neither the Legion nor any other specific organization. He even discusses Mae West in the "Belle of the Nineties" without name or title. That's a technique he may have learned from Colonel House.

Hence, naturally, Mr. Lippmann talks of today's affairs of self-regulation in the industry in terms of censorship—the very censorship from which the motion picture by current adjustments is escaping. With reasonable accuracy Mr. Lippmann describes the shortcomings of the censorship he is talking about—with accuracy, but irrelevancy. Which leads him presently to say:

"It is clear, I think, that the kind of censorship we have, or could have, cannot hope to deal with the real vice of the movies. It can do almost nothing of consequence about their power to set bad examples, their vulgarization of the spiritual values by the exaltation of cheap personalities and the idealization of wealth, success, acquisitiveness, sensation and brutality. . . . It operates in that realm of taste, insight and feeling which cannot be governed by the matter-of-fact standards which a censor must inevitably apply."

What Mr. Lippmann in a circuitous manner is seeking to say is that no censorship can make good pictures. The process of making good pictures by taking precautions at the source is, to be sure, so simple and obvious that it has not occurred to Mr. Lippmann. Probably he has not heard of the Production Code Administration, and, if so, is certainly unaware that it is an integral part of the production machine. But after all his chief material, in this piece, is what he does not know about his subject.

The real entertainment of Mr. Lippmann's creed is reached at last when he writes his prescription for the solution of all the problems, saying:

The best way to improve the movies would be to open the door to intense competition by independent and experimenting producers.

If the customers had freedom of choice, each community would be able to enforce the moral standards it believes in. Each exhibitor would have to take the business risk of estimating correctly the tastes of his customers, and educators, dramatic critics; moral leaders in each community would be able to exert effectively whatever influence they can command. This is the system under which theatres, books, magazines and newspapers operate, and it is not an unsatisfactory system. Anyone who can find a little capital can produce what he chooses.

Then Mr. Lippmann goes off on the worn, worn trail of plaints about block-booking and blind-buying and circuit operation, etc., trade practises and conditions about which he seems but slightly informed.

In the industry we have had the impression that there was competition enough with respect to screen material.

If Mr. Lippmann would make an even casual study of merchandising and production conditions in the history of the stage, including Klaw & Erlanger and Shubert control, of book selling methods, including the block-booking of the book clubs and the blind buying of subscribers to publications, including the franchise system of the Associated Press, including the chain newspaper, and circulation methods; he would find some flaws in the system he recommends for the screen.

"Anyone who can find a little capital can produce what he chooses," says Mr. Lippmann. About how much capital does he fancy would be required to start a really independent newspaper in New York City? He thinks that the cost of production is extravagant. What of rotogravure and multicolored comic sections?

After having damned the motion picture for everything else, he charges it with a sterilizing effect on creative endeavour, and asks: "How many writers of distinction have the movies found and developed? Is it not the fact that Hollywood lives by drawing to itself authors who have made their mark first in the legitimate theatre or in writing book and magazine fiction? Except perhaps for the cameramen and some of the technical directors, Hollywood is an artistic parasite living upon the talents evoked in the healthier open competition of the older arts."

Mr. Lippmann is obviously unaware that the silent picture had become substantially a self-contained creative institution, and he is unwilling to admit that the talking picture, the picture of words, has been in existence scarcely seven years. What list of "writers of distinction" in his own world of the printed word can he attribute to the first seven years, or first seven decades, of the art of printing?

In sum it seems that Mr. Lippmann just did a piece for the paper—and it is such pieces, garbed in ill-founded authority, which continue to make the course of motion picture development more difficult.

One plaque a month was the plan of awards for 1934, but a deadlock in the voting for top honors in December resulted in a decision to present duplicate plaques to the showmen tied for first. Thus 13 plaques were given in the year.

The monthly winners and the campaigns that won them their honors were:

JANUARY

Kenneth Grimes, manager, Warner Theatre, Morgantown, West Va., on "Dinner at Eight."

FEBRUARY

Howard G. Sweet, now manager at the Franklin Theatre, Saginaw, Mich., won with "Queen Christina" at the State, East Lansing, Mich.

MARCH

Nevin McCord, now city manager, Publix Theatres, Twin Falls, Idaho, won with "Frontier Marshal" at the Granada, Boise, Idaho.

APRIL

Walter Golden, manager, Riverside Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., on "Nana."

MAY

Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay, on "20 Million Sweethearts" at the Palace Theatre, Montreal, Can. Curtis, then manager, is now sales promotion manager, Famous Players Canadian Theatres, and Finlay, then assistant, is now manager of the Capitol Theatre, St. John, New Brunswick.

JUNE

R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, manager, Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, West Va., on "20 Million Sweethearts."

JULY

Charles E. Curran, exploitation director, Strand Theatre, New York, on "Here Comes the Navy." Curran is now with Donohue and Coe Agency.

AUGUST

Ed M. Hart, manager, Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., on "Circus Clown."

SEPTEMBER

James M. Totman, manager, Warner Theatre, Erie, Pa., on "Dames."

OCTOBER

Bob Suits, manager, Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., on "What Every Woman Knows."

NOVEMBER

S. S. Solomon, manager, Regent Theatre, Newark, N. J., on "Judge Priest."

DECEMBER

Tied between Bill Hendricks, manager, Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., on "Six Day Bike Rider," and Morris Rosenthal, manager, Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., on "The Mighty Barnum."

2 YEARS of waiting

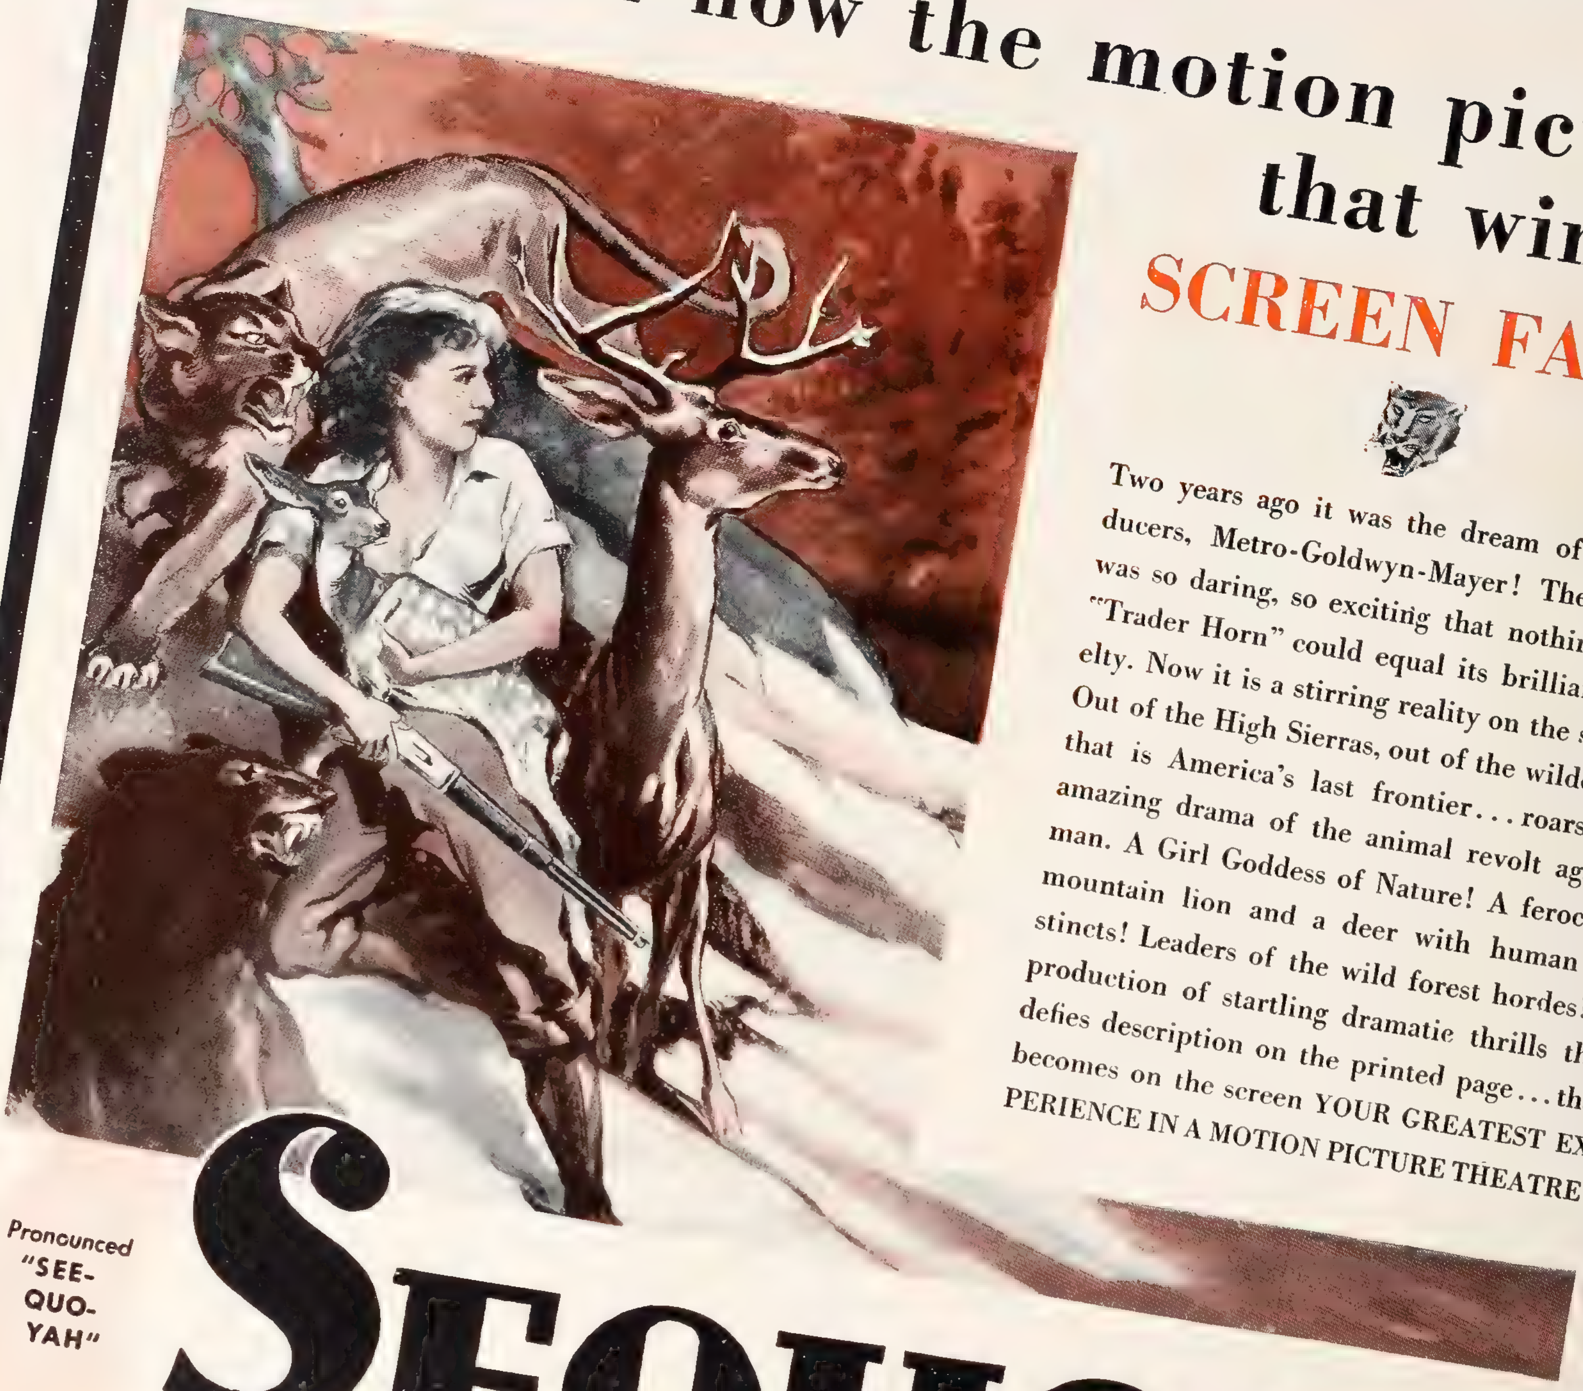
and now the motion picture that wins SCREEN FAME!



Two years ago it was the dream of its producers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer! The theme was so daring, so exciting that nothing since "Trader Horn" could equal its brilliant novelty. Now it is a stirring reality on the screen. Out of the High Sierras, out of the wilderness that is America's last frontier... roars this amazing drama of the animal revolt against man. A Girl Goddess of Nature! A ferocious mountain lion and a deer with human instincts! Leaders of the wild forest hordes! A production of startling dramatic thrills that defies description on the printed page... that becomes on the screen YOUR GREATEST EXPERIENCE IN A MOTION PICTURE THEATRE!

No picture in years has given me the same emotional quality which I derived from SEQUOIA. Combined with the most excellent photography,it is a magnificent social study of animals. The words of old,in the Bible, I think---the lion and the lamb shall lie down together--are made to glow again in SEQUOIA.

The director took a mountain lion,gave it a leading role and made of it a Jean Harlow. And all the deers that appear on the screen are much more natural and have more poise than most Hollywood players. There are moments in the film which reach emotional grandeur. The cub caressing its dead mother is a scene which I shall never forget. It is written on my heart forever. How any man can go out and kill a deer after seeing this picture is more than I can understand. While watching the deers in the film I recalled Walter Winchell's splendid thought--that the deer should be allowed to shoot back at the hunter.

SEQUOIA is an animal film which a man can leave without too much shame for his fellows. Those who made this film had a fundamental love of animals in their souls--and not their destruction. If I could do one thing for the youth of the world in order to make a cleaner and finer and more understanding generation when we at last are dust--it would be to send them each and all to see this film at my expense. I often grow discouarged about films. SEQUOIA renewed my faith. I congratulate its makers.

Sincerely

Jim Tully

"Should Be A Smash In Any Theatre"

After more than a year and a half in production, John W. Considine, Jr., has turned out for Metro what is probably the most unique screen feature ever made. Based on the Vance Hoyt novel, "Malibu," picture tells the story of a strange friendship, that of a mountain lion or puma and a deer, a story of palship, animal love and devotion that is rarely equalled, even among humans.

After viewing the finished product, it is not to be wondered at that filming required in excess of 18 months. Plenty of patience must have been required on the part of Director Chester Franklin, and all concerned in the production, to secure the unusually strange pictures, even granting that the two animals, around whom the story is built, must have been carefully and painstakingly trained.

"Sequoia" is fit fan fodder for young and old, and should be a smash in any theatre, from the metropolitan deluxers to the backwoods nickelodeons. It has everything. Thrills, pathos, comedy, majestic scenery and above everything else, humanness.

Orphaned shortly after their birth in the High Sierras, the baby puma and deer are adopted by Jean Parker, who is living in the mountain fastness with her father, Samuel S. Hinds, a writer. While engaged in rescuing the cat and the doe, Miss Parker is saved from savage dogs by Russell Hardie, a young Forest Ranger, and their love romance is adroitly carried out throughout the unfolding of the strange yarn.

Hardie insists the attempt to raise the two wild animals will fail as they are natural enemies, with Hinds contending that only sheer necessity makes them antagonistic to each other. The doe is named Malibu, meaning a hard row to travel, and Gato is the cognomen bestowed upon the puma, at first believed to mean misunderstood one, but later developing the meaning is outlaw and murderer.

Throughout the story puma and deer show the effects of a year spent together before they are turned loose to shift for themselves. Time after time both have narrow escapes with their lives, but in each instance the other animal comes to the rescue.

The climax comes when Paul Hurst, a rancher, and his henchman, Ben Hall, turn loose a herd of protected deer from the forest reservation for city hunters to shoot. Malibu effects their release, is tracked by Hurst and when cornered is saved through the interference of Gato, with the deer finally to the rescue. Fadeout has the strange friends of the wilds in affectionate gambols atop the snowcapped mountain.

Human characters are all well suited for their parts, with Miss Parker particularly effective.

"EXHIBITOR BAGS WINNER IN 'SEQUOIA'"

The entire story is wound around the strange friendship of the deer and cougar with love interest between Parker and Hardie worked in for story purposes. Otherwise it is a fascinating animal story playing to nature human interest. Tie up with the local zoo and sporting goods stores. Get a display of guns and hunting equipment as well as trophies. Work up a hunting license throwaway with copy "Stop Hunting for Good Entertainment. See 'Sequoia' and You've Bagged a Winner."

—Showmen's Round Table

"THRILLS, SPECTACLE AND EXCITEMENT"

Adapted from a book by Vance Hoyt, noted author of animal and nature stories, this is an unusual kind of outdoor picture. Fundamentally it is the drama, comedy, thrill, danger and the peculiar human interest attached to the struggle of wild creatures in native habitat.

Two animals, native of California's High Sierra Mountains, the locale, are the principal figures.

First demonstrating that natural enemies can become friends as Jean Parker, finding a cougar cub and a fawn, raises them to maturity in companionship, the animals are released again to the redwood forests. When danger comes to the doe, the cougar saves her. As her mate is killed the doe leads her fawn to Jean Parker's cabin with the protecting cougar tagging along. When hunters, rounding up a herd of deer, would kill the deer and fawn, it is the vicious lion that rushes to their rescue.

Accompanying these features is a human interest love story between Jean Parker and Russell Hardie. For spectacle, there is the beautiful photography of the wild Sierra Mountain country, the excitement of animal conflict and the spectacles of nature as it is unleashed in blizzards, thunder and lightning storms, forest fires and floods. One publicity feature that should not be overlooked in connection with this is the recent radio address made by President Roosevelt calling attention to the national park.

"A Worthy Attraction For Any Theatre"

This is an unusual wild animal picture filmed against the beautiful Sierra Mountains with Malibu, a deer, and Gato, a puma, natural enemies, starred. The picture seems destined to be outstanding and one of the most talked about. It is a worthy attraction for any theatre.

Essentially, the production maintains the theory that only hereditary instinct causes animal enmity. As exemplified by the pair, adopted in orphaned babyhood by Jean Parker, the theory is proved.

For entertainment it skillfully blends natural drama, comedy, romance, thrills, action, menace and conflict. When, upon maturity, the creatures are released in the forest, they continually befriend each other.

Marked by understandable sympathy-generating humanness, it builds situations so that full value is derived from every element. In the finale when death from humans menaces Malibu, the stalking Gato fights the mutual foe to exhaustion and Malibu administers the coup de grace. For an epilogue both gambol in friendly companionship.

Everyone connected with the picture is entitled to plaudits. Chester Franklin's direction, aided by Vance Hoyt, the author, is a triumph of patience and understanding. The screen play by Ann Cunningham, Sam Armstrong and Carey Wilson actually makes the animals human. Chester Lyons' photography is also a feature the patrons will talk about.

SEQUOIA PRAISES!

"SUPERIOR TO ANY ANIMAL FILM MADE"

It would be difficult and extremely unfair to class "Sequoia" with other wild animal pictures, yet it must come under this classification. Still, it is so far superior, not alone in actual thrills, but in the delicate handling, the unusual methods employed to capture the so-called "freedom of the woods" and the great amount of patience it undoubtedly required to undertake such a tremendous, vital task. One of the most interesting pictures I have ever seen is "Sequoia".

Special mention should go to Chester Franklin, the director, for his indomitable patience, his sympathy with his trying subjects and the most interesting manner in which he told his story.

—L. A. Herald Express

LIBERTY MAGAZINE SAYS:

There has never been another picture quite like SEQUOIA. One of the cinema achievements of the year.

"Worth Walking Many Miles To See!"

You can all just step up and take your hats off to Director Chester M. Franklin and Photographer Chester A. Lyons for making one of the most "human," beautiful animal pictures that has ever been captured for the celluloid.

You'll walk many miles to see and enjoy the life stories of "Malibu," the deer, and "Gato," the puma. There is more humor, naturalness and drama around those two than you've seen in a long time, and it will be decidedly worth it to any exhibitor to figure out a good advertising campaign, because once the audiences can be gotten into the theatre, they'll take the picture to their hearts and love it. It's elegant animal stuff.

You have never seen anything like the shots of both scenery and animal life that this picture boasts and Chester Franklin has patiently, so patiently, waited for every opportunity to catch these animals in their most appealing and dramatic moments. They do cute things, they do bad things, they do good things and they are at all times themselves.

So far as the cast is concerned, everyone acquits himself well.

There are swell fight scenes between various animals and a chase at the end that will have you sitting on the edge of your seat from sheer excitement. By all means, play it up to the greatest extent possible because this is really swell entertainment for the whole darned family. Incidentally, Herbert Stothart is again to be congratulated for his excellent musical scoring of the picture. It's the perfect background for this picture.

—Hollywood Reporter

"A Pleasure For Real Showmen!"

From prior publicity, practically every one in the show business knows that this is a native wild animal picture. But what comes up on the screen, in relation to that which is either known or surmised, is so vastly different that the picture's successful marketing most likely will prove a pleasure for real showmen.

"Sequoia" is filmed entirely against the beautiful Sierra Mountain scenery, an asset of which expert photography has taken remarkable advantage. Its stars are two animals; Malibu, a deer, and Gato, a puma. Wonderfully trained, they are great actors. Wearing neither makeup nor costumes other than those given them by nature, and everything done being the result of patient and understanding training, from the standpoint of creating and maintaining human interest, they actually give many an enameled Hollywood clotheshorse fact lessons in natural acting.

As the picture is unusual, it is difficult to describe it in an ordinary manner. As it unfolds upon the screen, a strange but understandable "humanness" predominating, it runs the scale of natural drama, romance, comedy, tragedy, spectacle, thrill, conflict, menace. There are times when the action of the animals provokes howls of glee. Then it becomes vividly exciting, a quality counterbalanced by soft tenderness. Its tragedy is tinged with sadness, and the whole is climaxed by a stalking chase and villain-man hero-puma fight, in which the deer revenges himself upon the would-be killer. Topping off the finale of the deer-puma palship came the most enthusiastic burst of applause heard in months.

Here are the entertainment and showmanship highlights. Toni Martin, refusing to believe that it is contrary to natural law, adopts and mothers Malibu, an orphaned fawn, and Gato, a puma cub. Human necessity causes their release to the forest. Then the pair become the whole show. Gato crouches to spring on a drinking deer, but recognizes Malibu and both drink and play together. There's romance in the spring time. No human ever made such tender love as Malibu to his doe mate. There is tragedy as the mother is killed, but Malibu leads his fawn to Toni's cabin for shelter. Chinese Baby Feng Soo and the fawn, tethered together, are menaced by a rattlesnake. The baby would play, but Malibu dashes up and kills the snake. Hunters come to kill. Guide Bergman leads them nowhere. Desperate, he raids the government game refuge. Stalked by Malibu, he leads the herd to his corral. Malibu shows his kind how to escape. Then comes the big punch, Bergman trailing Malibu, and Gato stalking Bergman. About to fire on Malibu, Bergman is hit by a bundle of enraged puma fury. Malibu watches. When Gato is exhausted Malibu rushes in and pushes Bergman over a cliff to death.

—M. P. Herald

"ORDINARY ADJECTIVES OF PRAISE INSUFFICIENT"

Ordinary adjectives of praise are inadequate.

So real is the story, so genuine is the picture, anyone will marvel at the painstaking effort and patience of Producer John Considine, Director Chester M. Franklin, and Cameraman Chester Lyons, who put this beautiful story on celluloid.

Any one who doesn't enjoy this picture doesn't enjoy life—or living.

This is the most interesting picture I have ever seen. Please don't change it as it is perfect now.

A very wonderful, thrilling and educational picture—wish everyone could see it.

"Sequoia" a most pleasing picture—enjoyed very much.

Needless to say much about the picture. Three cheers for M-G-M and Sidney Franklin.

I am but a child of 11 years old, but I enjoyed "Sequoia" immensely. Its beauty, its photography, its music and the animals. It was all lovely and I am sure the public will be immensely pleased with it.

Wonderful photography. Very different and most interesting. A little cutting in spots might improve the picture. Good acting by Jean Parker.

Grand—Ask my 4-year-old boy who didn't blink an eye thru the whole picture. Remarkable photography–ended just right.

The most natural, cleanest and most beautiful principal of any animal picture I ever saw

A wonderful and worthwhile picture which I will long remember. The scenery and musical effects very outstanding. More of Jean Parker and this type of picture.

Excellent! One of the kinds of pictures I've been waiting to see.

A very remarkable picture. Needs no changing or shortening. This type of picture was a real inspiration.

I saw your preview of "Sequoia" at the Wilshire. I think it is the finest picture ever produced. In other words, a picture you won't have to advertise.

A marvelous picture, and you are entitled to be congratulated. A very wonderful story, well directed and photographed. More pictures of this nature will restore to the picture industry the prestige and patronage they lost through the putrid sexy trash and gangster pictures, which drove practically every decent thinking person away from the theatre. Give us more of these pictures.

Something to be proud of in every detail. For a human being to carry away honors when surrounded by such an intelligent animal cast is astounding. Jean Parker did this—bless her!

A very unusual and entertaining picture. Splendid, as it is suitable for the whole family. I have never seen wild animals worked into a story in this manner before. Let's have more of this type of picture.

The scenery is superb. A remarkable animal picture. Very entertaining for children as well as adults.

One of the most interesting pictures I have yet seen, it gives one a more vivid picture of the wild life and their habits, in our State of California. Congratulations to Jean Parker and also to M-G-M.

Excellent! A truly fine and different picture. Photography superb.

Very refreshing!

Words fail to express my sincere feelings about this picture. It's too beautiful for words. Great work. Hope to see it again.

It was splendid. The loveliest picture I've seen.

Congratulations upon one of the finest, most remarkable and beautiful photographed pictures of the year. It was well worth all the time spent to make it.

It was my good fortune to see this preview, being connected with a publishing house in the east which reaches a large number of people. Will make this picture known to thousands. My hat is off to the producer and all who are responsible.

The most wonderful picture I ever saw—barring absolutely none.

This picture without a doubt is one of the most entertaining of the year.

Only really great one of its kind!

The best animal picture we have seen. Sorry you changed the name to "Sequoia". What was the matter with "Malibu"?

A very unusual and good picture. I believe it will be a big hit.

Wonderful picture.

One of the most remarkable pictures I have ever seen.

An exceptionally good and a remarkable picture.

Unquestionably the most beautifully produced picture M-G-M ever turned out. I compliment you on what I believe to be a screen masterpiece.

In my opinion "Sequoia" is the finest picture of its kind I have ever seen. It's beautiful, most interesting, and perfect in every way. It gave me great pleasure to see it.

Marvelous picture . . . 100% and should be a prize winner.

Let us have more pictures like "Sequoia", and your houses will be full.

BY PREVIEW AUDIENCE!

M-G-M Studios have held many previews. Never before has there been such applause during and after the showing. The post-card returns, printed below, are the most enthusiastic and numerous in the history of the studio.

"Sequoia" is a magnificent picture and very unusual. Everyone should enjoy seeing it.

Glorious and beautiful. I am going to see it again.

I never miss a preview if I can help it at the local theatre. You have a grand picture, very interesting and worthy of a prize. Will see to it that my children see this picture. Would only criticize the title.

Why not call this picture "MALIBU"? He is the REAL STAR—some of your "so-called stars" could take lessons from him. Someone knows his animals at your studio.

A good story. Wonderful photography. Give us some more of this. A relief from the common run of pictures.

I consider this picture a rare treat, suitable for juniors and grownups and I expect to announce my opinion of it at the next Parent Teachers Association. If only more pictures as clean and educational as this one could be made.

I think that is one of the best previews ever shown. I only wish more of them would be made.

Marvelous photography. Would have liked Wallace Beery as Bergman and Maureen O'Sullivan as Joan.

Having seen hundreds of pictures on account of my contact with motion picture people, so far this is the most outstanding picture. I have never seen anything more beautiful than "Sequoia".

The most real animal picture ever with a very helpful musical score. Could do without the Ranger's song and the human element at the end.

Enjoyed your picture. Think it one of the best animal pictures that I have had the pleasure of seeing.

Excellent! Should have more pictures like them.

Unusual, and very good!

Advertise and make it a great picture. I have never been so thrilled over any other picture. Every man, woman and child should enjoy the picture, "Sequoia". A "four star" picture!

Every man, woman and child in America should see the picture—it is astounding! The most enjoyable evening I have spent since I came to California.

The greatest animal picture ever made. Please try and make more like "Sequoia." Let Chester Franklin direct them.

A really great picture. Congratulations on the story, the unusually fine cast and superb direction. (If this director is a new one, hang on to him). He's great!

It is the best show of its kind I have ever seen. It is marvelous! I enjoyed it immensely.

"Sequoia" a most pleasing picture. Enjoyed it very much.

The preview picture was very beautiful and very interesting, and the animal life most instructive. Hope you have more like it.

I think your picture is most wonderful. It is the outstanding production of its kind.

In your picture "Sequoia" you have reached the ultimate in photography and direction in my opinion, and the animal training surpasses anything ever attained in cinematography. My heartfelt thanks for one of the outstanding pictures of all time.

Perfect! One of the best pictures of all time—certainly better than "Trader Horn", "Tarzan", etc.

I believe "Sequoia" to be the most beautiful picture I ever saw.

Just lovely, is all I can say

Adapted to sportsman. Good photography and educational.

Beautiful scenery. Interesting animal life.

At last we have a clean and wholesome picture suited for young and old.

A four star picture. Congratulations to you and Jean Parker for her wonderful acting.

Most wonderful story of animal life ever portrayed.

Have spent years with animals. This picture amazing. No criticism!

Positively wonderful! Enjoyed every moment of the picture.

You have a fine and unusual picture with a great cast. Jean Parker's work was especially good. The scenes between the deer and the mountain lion are the finest things in that line I have ever seen.

May I thank you for the pleasure of seeing your beautiful picture, Sequoia?

It is one of the finest productions brought to the screen. Beautiful in all its technical phases, finely directed, it has photography of unusual beauty with great human interest and high entertainment values for all ages."

Below is the official report Mrs. Burk sent to every woman's club in America. The report is headed "outstanding for all ages" and it says: "This delightful film, based on the novel, Malibu, portrays the wild life of California. It revolves around the birth and lives of a puma and a deer and has its setting in the beautiful high Sierras. An enthralling picture, directed with consummate skill, replete with human interest, magnificently photographed, beautifully staged, a real pictorial gem."

(Official report sent to all branches of the Society):

Merely its unique photography of the poetic beauty of the virgin forest with its herds of graceful deer, makes Sequoia an enchanting film for any audience. An exceptionally beautiful picture which no one can afford to miss and one which indicates the power the cinema can exert.

Laura O. Vruwink
The Women's University Club.

I believe that Sequoia is one of the most remarkable films I have ever seen because of the exquisite scenes of wild animal life in natural settings. Sound and photography were as nearly perfect as one could imagine. It seems almost impossible to have caught so realistically the feeling of perfectly unconscious behavior in wild creatures of the woods. A genuinely fine accomplishment which will have wide appeal for older children and family audiences (too emotional in latter part for children under 10).

WHAT OTHER NOTABLES THINK OF "SEQUOIA"

noted author says:

Last night I saw the preview of not only the best outdoor picture I have ever seen but for me the greatest picture of the last decade.

It was taken in the wilderness, among the big trees, a singularly beautiful setting. The principal roles were taken by deer and mountain lions. Jean Parker . . . plays the part of a woodland girl . . . a lover of wild creatures . . . she is simplicity itself, and all we could wish of youth and beauty and charm.

But outside of Jean you hardly realize the other human characters . . . It is only a motion picture but it tells the truth. I happen to know a great deal about deer and more about lions. Once I was a hunter of both, but no more! I think every hunter in the world should see this picture and that those of them who have intelligence and feeling will never kill another deer for sport . . . The children and the young folk and the lovers will make of Sequoia a grand success. It is a splendid augury of future pictures. Mr. Chester Franklin, the director, is to be congratulated upon a picture of supreme artistry.

TO CATHOLIC WOMEN!

Mrs. Thomas Hearn,
National Chairman of Films,
National Council of Catholic Women.

I wish to congratulate you upon your picture, Sequoia, and to thank you for the privilege of previewing it.

In this age of superficial living, this drama of wild animal life set in a background of flowing masterpieces of nature, touches a human depth that it is well to awaken.

This picture is so fundamental and fine... the story is so filled with thrilling action, that it will provide entertainment for all ages and classes.

(A personal letter...but a report of similar sentiments will be sent to every Catholic woman.)

Hugh Walpole,
Noted English Author.

It is a splendid picture. It thrilled me tremendously. The direction was fine and the photoplay hauntingly beautiful.

By Henry Chamberlain, President,
Los Angeles Chapter, Isaak Walton League.

I was fortunate last night in seeing the preview of Sequoia.

As representative of a large group of conservationists, the Isaak Walton League, known as "Defenders of woods, waters and wild life," I feel it incumbent on me to commend a picture of this type. The choice of Jean Parker as the youngster sympathetic with wild life is particularly fortunate in that the public has undoubtedly come to associate this talented young actress with everything that is fine and sincere.

The picture as a whole is a wonderful piece of work and cannot help but impress and interest the public. Our organization is particularly glad to note the accentuated difference, depicted in the picture, between the game law violator, a typical killer, and the respectable sportsman. This is a point that is very seldom understood by the general public.

Let me thank you, in behalf of my organization, for this very fine production.

Margaret Hughes,
Manager, Pacific Geographic Society.

The photography is superb and the animal work beyond anything we have ever seen, at times almost unbelievable. We could only show our approval by constantly breaking into applause. Sequoia...is direction, photography and acting magnificently combined.

Sarah McLean Mullen,
National Council of Teachers of English.

Your preview of the picture, Sequoia, gave me great pleasure, as it seemingly did to the entire audience, if one can judge by the enthusiasm of their response. Perhaps my pleasure was greater because both my mother as a child and I had played in those same great woods and know the life of the wild as shown in the picture to be authentic.

Sequoia is unique not only among the general run of pictures, but also among animal films, for the rarity of the action and emotional expression. The two leading animal actors in their simple and sincere response to the direction of their unseen owner excel the performance of any previous animals on the screen.

W. S. Van Dyke,
Director of "Trader Horn", "Thin Man", etc.

In my opinion Sequoia is one of the finest nature pictures I have ever seen. The animal sequences are superbly done. Having done a great deal of this kind of work myself, I can imagine the patience and efforts extended in getting it. But the results were well worth it.

This picture should contribute a mite to the preservation of our North American game, as I am sure that it will arouse in others as it did in me, an understanding sympathy with and for our game preservation commission.

On page 24 appears the text of the federal grand jury indictment returned last Friday against Warner Brothers, Paramount, RKO and seven of their subsidiaries and six officers, in the investigation by the Department of Justice of alleged violations in St. Louis of the anti-trust laws in distributing films.

The United States Government's investigation into alleged anti-trust law violations by large distributors who are accused of conspiring against independent theatre owners, in restraint of trade, brought the following developments this week:

1. Federal indictments were returned in St. Louis against Warners, Paramount, RKO and seven of their subsidiaries and six officers, charging conspiracy against three independent theatres, in violation of the Sherman anti-trust laws. The defendants denied the charges as they prepared to fight them.

2. Coincidentally with the receipt of a plea from California independents for relief from Fox West Coast "monopolistic" practices, the Department of Justice turned to Los Angeles to conduct a similar federal grand jury investigation in what was interpreted to be a nationwide probe of the whole distribution structure as it relates to independent exhibition, with block booking and "freeze outs" the targets.

3. Missouri was studying possible independent prosecution, under its state laws, of distributors indicted in St. Louis.

4. Extension of the Justice Department's probe to other exchange centers was accepted in some Washington quarters as precluding the furtherance in the senate of any demands for a Congressional film investigation at this time.

One of the most important legal struggles in the history of motion picture industry, between large distributors and the federal government, over practices pertaining to the selling and allotting of motion picture product to independent theatre owners, is likely to develop from the criminal indictments returned last week by the federal grand jury for the United States court in the eastern district of Missouri, at St. Louis. Three of the largest motion picture corporations and some of their subsidiaries and officers are charged with conspiracy to violate the Sherman anti-trust laws by "freezing out," productwise, the first-run Ambassador, new Grand Central and Missouri independent theatres in that city. Named in the indictments, obtained by the Department of Justice, were:

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.
The Vitaphone Corporation, a Warner subsidiary.
First National Pictures, Inc., Warner subsidiary.
*Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation.
*Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation.
General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., Warner subsidiary.
*Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation.
*Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.
*Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.
RKO Distributing Corporation.
Harry M. Warner, President, Warner Brothers and First National.
Herman Starr, Vice-president, Warner Brothers.
Abel Cary Thomas, Secretary and General Counsel, Warner Brothers.
Gradwell Sears, Western and Southern Sales Manager, Warner Brothers.
George J. Schaefer, President, Paramount Distributing.
Ned E. Depinet, President, RKO Distributing.

Fundamentals of Selling Involved

The very basic fundamentals of the method of selling and distributing motion pictures for exhibition are involved in the case and it is certain that the defendants will vigorously fight every charge. But back of it all there is the same problem which has confronted the industry since the first flickering image was illuminated on a makeshift screen—the struggle of the independent for the same product which the distributor uses to protect his circuit affiliates operating in competition, and which he also sells to others who represent large buying and bargaining power.

Attention was immediately diverted from St. Louis to Los Angeles, where the Department of Justice was preparing to repeat its performance before another federal grand jury, indicating that the Missouri indictment may be the forerunner of a sweeping governmental investigation into the entire machinery of distribution and exhibition, in the large exchange cities at least.

There were indications, too, that some of the state governments might join the federal prosecutors in probing motion picture activities in the field, or as in the possible case of Missouri, conduct an independent investigation after the federal grand jury has acted on Department of Justice findings.

Opinions in the industry of the potentialities of the St. Louis indictments were mixed. United States Attorney General Homer S.

Independent Prosecutions under State Laws Considered; Selling Fundamentals Are Involved in St. Louis Action

Cummings said at Washington that the St. Louis case was "just one of those things that come along in the day's work." Regardless, the anti-trust division of Mr. Cummings' Justice Department was reliably reported to have ready the results of four months of intensive and secretive investigation for presentation at once to the federal grand jury in Los Angeles for a more thorough and more embracing investigation than was undertaken by the St. Louis jurors.

The St. Louis indictments grew out of charges of Allen Snyder, independent exhibitor, and the Fanchon and Marco interests, who operate for him, that they were unable to obtain first-run motion pictures from Warner Brothers for their Ambassador, new Grand Central and Missouri theatres, because of alleged agreements of Warners with other large distributors. The indictment specifically charges that the defendants interfered with an attempt to prevent the operators of the three theatres from procuring first run pictures for use at these theatres in order to exclude them from the business and to enable Warner Brothers to procure and operate the theatres itself..

Whether the Justice Department's probings into motion pictures are designed to show Congress and the Nation that the Roosevelt Administration, by refusing to call off the investigation, will protect the "little fellow" against any unfair monopolistic practices of his larger rivals, or whether there is a political factor, as has been hinted by political writers, was one of the perplexing questions of the week. In any event, the indictments were the first returned in a major case against alleged anti-trust law violators since the National Industrial Recovery Act was enacted, and are being cited at Washington as definite evidence refuting the contention in Congress that the New Deal has nullified the anti-trust laws in its recovery effort.

The St. Louis indictment, the text of which appears in full starting on page 24, recited six methods by which the coercion allegedly was attempted. They include: (1) Threats to acquire control of the entire supply of films available for the three independent theatres; (2) Threats to prevent any other lessee of Warner films from obtaining pictures for use in these theatres; (3) Threats to cause the owners of the properties "great injury, loss and damage"; (4) Threats to injure other lessees of the houses; (5) Threats "to spend, use or lose a large sum of money if necessary and to use the entire resources of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.," to injure any rival operator; (6) Threats to compete "in a malicious and unfair manner" with independent theatre operators. Defendants were also said to have made disparaging statements.

NRA Compliance Director Sol A. Rosenblatt told the Associated Press at Washington that so far as he knew no code violations were involved.

The federal grand jury hearings got under

TEXT OF FEDERAL FILM INDICTMENT

The text of the indictment by the federal grand jury at St. Louis against ten motion picture companies and subsidiaries and against six executives was made public last weekend by the United States Department of Justice at Washington and reads as follows: (Boldface type is ours.)

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, EASTERN DIVISION OF THE EASTERN JUDICIAL DISRICT OF MISSOURI—ss.

In the District Court of the United States, within and for the Eastern Division of the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri, at the September term thereof, A. D. 1934.

The grand jurors for the United States of America, duly empaneled, sworn and charged in and for the District Court of the United States for the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri at the September term thereof, A. D. 1934, and inquiring in and for said district, upon their oaths present and charge:

1. That for many years heretofore to and including the day of the finding and presentation of this indictment, a very large part of the supply of motion pictures in the United States has been produced by corporations known as motion picture producers (hereinafter called producers), in studios in the State of California and elsewhere, by photographing scenes, including dramas and other subjects, on negative film, and developing and arranging the negative film, and printing large numbers of positive prints or copies in laboratories in the State of California and other States. During the period aforesaid there have been in the several States, and especially in the large cities thereof, many motion picture theatres, owned, leased, operated, or otherwise controlled by persons and corporations (hereinafter called exhibitors) who have been engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at said theatres, by projecting the images recorded upon said prints upon screens, accompanied by the reproduction of synchronized sound effects.

Interstate Phase Brought Out

2. The producers have been regularly and continuously engaged in offering to, and making and entering into with, exhibitors contracts for the exhibition by, and the shipment and delivery to, said exhibitors of the aforesaid motion pictures at the aforesaid theatres, the several producers making said offers and contracts directly and immediately or through other corporations or agencies acting in their behalf, affiliated with, or controlled or used by them as instrumentalities in that regard; and in pursuance of said contracts motion pictures have been shipped and transported from the aforesaid laboratories and other places to exhibitors located in other States; and after use by exhibitors in one State said motion pictures have been shipped to exhibitors in other States.

3. The Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres are motion-picture theatres located in the city of St. Louis, in the Eastern Division of the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri, and the exhibitors who have been conducting the motion-picture exhibition business at said theatres have been regularly and continuously engaged in making contracts for motion pictures in the manner aforesaid, and were, until approximately the month of February, March and August, 1934, making contracts, in the manner aforesaid, with Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., the Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company and RKO Distributing Corporation for motion pictures for exhibition at the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres; and, in pursuance of said contracts, motion pictures have been transported and shipped from the laboratories and other places aforesaid to the city of St. Louis for delivery to said theatres in the course of the trade and commerce among the States aforesaid.

"DEMOCRATIC MOVIE CURE"

Simultaneous with the Department of Justice announcement in Washington, last Friday, of the federal grand jury indictment at St. Louis of ten motion picture companies and six of their officers, in what was interpreted by some as the Roosevelt administration's first major drive against anti-trust law violators, the Washington Post said that James A. Farley, Postmaster-General, is being mentioned as a possible successor to Will H. Hays as "czar" of the industry, causing the conservative New York Times to editorialize thusly:

> Postmaster-General Farley has been mentioned as successor to Will Hays in the office of czar of the movie industry. The feeling seems to be widespread that Mr. Hays in his long tenure as autocrat of Hollywood might have ruled with a heavier hand. But after all, what is one to expect in this generation from czars? History has shown what they amount to. There might have been more impressive results if Mr. Hays had been made commissar of the movie industry.
> On second thought, it is not proved that a commissar would have done any better, though he might have shot a lot of Hollywood producers and sent several thousand scenario writers to the concentration camps. The good old democratic way seems to be scoring the best results in the films: Customers are organizing themselves to bring pressure to bear at the box office. This is neither censorship nor despotism.

And so there is added the name of another good Democrat to the long list of those who have been mentioned variously down through the years as successor to Republican Will Hays, this list including New York's ex-Mayor, James Joseph Walker, Herbert Bayard Swope, Alfred Emanuel Smith, Hugh S. Johnson, Bronx Democratic "Boss" Edward J. Flynn, Frank C. Walker, Joseph P. Kennedy, et al.

Individuals Are Named

4. The grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that during the three years next preceding the finding and presentation of this indictment, at and within said Eastern Division of the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (a corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware), the Vitaphone Corporation (a corporation under the laws of the State of New York), First National Pictures, Inc. (a corporation under the laws of the State of Maryland), Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp. (a corporation), Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation (a corporation), General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. (a corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri), Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc. (a corporation under the laws of the State of New Jersey), Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc. (a corporation), Paramount Pictures Corporation (a corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware), RKO Distribution Corporation (a corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware), Harry M. Warner, Herman Starr, Abel Cary Thomas, Gradwell Sears (otherwise known as G. L. Sears and Grad Sears), George J. Schaefer and Ned E. Depinet unlawfully have engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures for use at the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres; and, to make said restraint effective, the defendants have conspired to perform all acts and things, and to use all means necessary and appropriate to that end, including the means, acts and things hereinafter more particularly alleged, and other means, acts and things to the grand jurors unknown.

Others Made Defendants

5. Said Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; the Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corp., Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Co., Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, RKO Distributing Corporation, Harry M. Warner, Herman Starr, Abel Cary Thomas, Gradwell Sears (otherwise known as G. L. Sears and Grad Sears), George J. Schaefer and Ned E. Depinet are made defendants to this indictment.

6. The defendants Harry M. Warner, Herman Starr, Abel Cary Thomas and Gradwell Sears (otherwise known as G. L. Sears and Grad Sears) were during the time aforesaid officers and agents of the defendants Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; the Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corp., Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation and General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.

Coercion Is Detailed

7. The defendant George J. Schaefer was during the time aforesaid an officer and agent of the defendants Paramount Pictures Distributing Co., Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation and Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.

8. The defendant Ned E. Depinet was during the time aforesaid an officer and agent of the defendant RKO Distributing Corporation.

9. The aforesaid individual defendants participated in conducting the business and affairs of the several corporation defendants with which they were connected, as aforesaid, and especially in connection with the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures; and they have authorized, ordered, or done the acts and things in performance of said conspiracy hereinafter more particularly alleged.

way in St. Louis on Monday morning, January 7th, and were terminated abruptly the next afternoon.

Harry Warner, president of Warner Brothers; William Mallard, vice-president and general counsel of Radio Pictures, and Ned E. Depinet, head of RKO distribution, denied the conspiracy charges and said that they are not justified.

Mr. Depinet said that he had "never heard of any coercion against independent exhibitors of St. Louis," and, "It is ridiculous to think we would keep pictures from them."

"We are sure that the charges are groundless," declared Mr. Warner, "and we welcome an opportunity to test the matter in court." He explained that his company and Paramount had, some six years ago, formed an operating partnership to conduct the Ambassador, Grand Central and Missouri theatres, and that after Paramount went into bankruptcy the operating company lost the leases when Warners were unable to continue paying the high rents then in force. The prior mortgages were foreclosed, he said, and, "in order to protect our investments in these properties and to retain the right to operate them, we made fair bids" for them. These were rejected, he added, and, therefore, the company leased the Shubert and Orpheum, acquiring "the right to exhibit the product of Paramount and RKO."

The complaining operators, said Harry Warner, "desirous of securing Paramount and RKO and our product, complained to the Attorney General that we had bought the right to exhibit this product in our theatres and this is the basis of the indictment."

Arthur E. Simpson, St. Louis attorney for Warner Brothers, said: "There appears to be no basis for this charge; the indictment charges the withholding of pictures from these (complaining) theatres, whereas the contract by which these pictures were exhibited in the Skouras theatres was canceled by one of the Skouras companies." The three properties had been acquired originally from the Skouras Brother by Paramount and Warners.

The complete history of the events leading up to the complaints as filed by Allan Snyder, present lessee of the Ambassador, Grand Central and Missouri theatres, together with details of incidents which have occurred in a long fight to obtain and maintain first-run supremacy in St. Louis—all figuring largely in the situation which brought about the case—appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on January 12th, page 11.

Speculation Over Next Procedure

One of the major questions of the week was about the procedure to be followed by the government in the St. Louis case now that indictments have been secured. In many anti-trust cases in the past, after indictments were returned, those indicted have made an agreement with the Justice Department to discontinue the practices alleged to be in violation of the law. The agreement, together with a stipulation of facts, is laid before the federal courts, instead of having the case go to trial, and when approved it is admitted as a consent decree.

Whether the distributors will be permitted to make such an agreement—if they choose that rather than to fight the case—remains to be seen. There has been no evidence to date that any defendants would take such action.

The defendants were awaiting formal service of the indictments from St. Louis. As soon as this is accomplished they will be arraigned in New York before a United States Commissioner and will post bonds, probably of $2,500 each.

The offense is a misdemeanor, punishable by a jail sentence of one year and a fine of $5,000 each.

One of the outgrowths of the case may be the filing by the complaining theatre interests of suits against the defendants for triple damages, under the federal anti-trust law.

Concurrent with the admission by the Department that Los Angeles would be the second key city in which federal grand jury hearings would be held, the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California appealed this week to the Department for relief from asserted monopoly of Fox West Coast Theatres in that territory.

As a result of the St. Louis indictments, it is anticipated in Washington that there will be no great demand in Congress for an investigation of the motion picture code, at least for the time being.

Expressing approval of the Justice Department's action, Senator Nye declared this week that the St. Louis case could be followed by similar proceedings and prosecutions in other sections.

aforesaid conspiracy the defendants caused the cancellation of so-called franchises—to-wit, contracts which provided for a supply of motion pictures for use at the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri Theatres for many years, and acquired a large number of bonds of the owners of said theatres for the purpose of opposing and preventing the establishment and continuation of the motion-picture exhibition business at said theatres by any person or corporation except Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it.

11. For the purpose of effectuating the aforesaid conspiracy the defendants endeavored to intimidate, coerce and compel the owners of said theatres, their representatives or agents to transfer the possession and control thereof only to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, and to refuse to grant a lease or leases for said theatres, or the possession and use thereof, to any other person or corporation, and endeavored to intimidate, coerce and compel prospective lessees to refrain from leasing said theatres and engaging in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures (1) by threatening to acquire control of and to engross the entire supply of motion pictures which was available and necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres, (2) by threatening to prevent any other lessees than Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., from acquiring any of the motion pictures which were available and necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres, (3) by threatening to cause said owners great injury, loss and damage if said theatres should be leased to, acquired or used by any other person or corporation than Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., (4) by threatening to cause injury to any other lessee of said theatres by any and all means, including injury to any other lessee in his business, trade, reputation and property in the exhibition of motion pictures at said theatres, (5) by threatening to spend, use or lose a large sum of money if necessary, and to use the entire resources of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., to so injure any other lessee, (6) by threatening to engage in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at St. Louis, in competition with any other lessee, and to conduct said competing business in a malicious and unfair manner, that is to say, by engaging in any and all acts and practices of unfair competition which would cause, and for the purpose of causing, injury, loss and damage to any other lessee as an exhibition at said theatres.

Charges Attack on Credit

12. For the purpose of effectuating the aforesaid conspiracy the defendants disparaged to the owners of said theatres, their representatives, agents and others, the lessees and prospective lessees of said theatres and their representatives and agents with regard to their credit and business reputations and with regard to their ability and experience relative to the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

13. For the purpose of effectuating the aforesaid conspiracy, the defendants arranged and agreed that Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., the Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation and RKO Distributing Corporation would refuse to enter into contracts for, or to furnish motion pictures for use at said theatres to any person or corporation except Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, and would furnish motion pictures in the aforesaid motion pictures in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States for use at said theatres only to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it.

Contract Restriction Cited

14. In pursuance of the aforesaid arrangement and agreement, and to effectuate the aforesaid conspiracy and especially to enable Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., to acquire, hold and control all of the motion pictures necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres and which might otherwise have been available in the course of trade and commerce among the States to any lessee of said theatres, and for the purpose of preventing the lessee or lessees of the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres from procuring an adequate or any supply of motion pictures in the aforesaid interstate trade and commerce for use at said theatres, the defendants have refused to enter into contracts for, or to furnish, motion pictures except to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, and Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and RKO Distributing Corporation have entered into contracts granting to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with and controlled by it, the right to exhibit at St. Louis motion pictures distributed by them in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States.

15. And so the grand jurors aforesaid, upon oath aforesaid, do say that said defendants, throughout the period aforesaid, at the place and in the manner and form aforesaid, unlawfully have engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States; against the peace and dignity of the United States and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

AGREEMENT OPENS CZECH MARKET TO AMERICAN MOTION PICTURES

Commissioner Canty Signs the Pact After Two-Year Effort; Registration Basis Replaces Former Compulsory Quota

Government to Allow Subsidy to Company Making Films There, Allowance on Fees for Imported Pictures

BULLETIN

Opening of the Czechoslovakian market for American films was assured this week by the signing of an agreement ending two years of negotiation between the American industry and the Czechoslovakian government. George Canty, United States trade commissioner in Czechoslovakia, signed the agreement on behalf of the American industry which had made its representations through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Negotiations of details are still under way, but the following points have been agreed to by both sides:

1. Distribution of American motion pictures in Czechoslovakia will be on a registration fee basis instead of under a compulsory quota system, as formerly.

2. Where pictures are produced in Czechoslovakia, the government will allow a subsidy to the company producing such pictures, with allowance on registration fees for pictures imported by the producing company.

American distributors are awaiting action by a Czecoslovakian commission in the hope that its decision on import regulations will decide once and for all the fate of that market as far as product from the United States is concerned, a market which has been closed since early 1932 because of prohibitive restrictions.

Appointment of the commission, composed of representatives of the Czechoslavakian ministries of commerce, education and foreign relations, was the highlight of a law passed November 20th, which contained these provisions as well:

All imports of motion pictures must be licensed.

Films must be pre-censored before being admitted to showings.

Pictures must be brought into Czechoslovakia in their original language, and, as a corollary provision—

Dubbing must be done in Czechoslovakia.

Two additional troublesome points must be settled before the American distributors will feel that the air has been cleared. There must be a time limit established, they say. American industry scarcely can be expected to undertake the rebuilding of its Czech market unless it is assured, in fact, that the regulations decided upon will obtain for at least a sufficiently extensive period to make that re-establishment of distribution machinery worthwhile. Again, the Czechoslovakian law which bars the removal of any capital from that country stands in the way of renewal of film relations.

In the Commission and the regulations it hands down rests the removal of the impasse. To date no word has come from the Commission, though announcement is expected daily.

The aims of the Czech government in laying down the regulations, which have been in force since the beginning of 1932, were these:

1. To prevent large amounts of money from going out of the country, in view of the unfavorable exchange situation of the National Bank at that time.

2. Necessity of supporting home production. At great expense a motion picture studio had been established at Barrandov, near Prague, and the government set about protecting that project on both national and cultural grounds. And another studio is opening at Hostivar.

The entire matter was delegated to the ministry of commerce, and the ministry set up internal regulations for its guidance, though these did not take parliamentary or legal form.

Originally the proportion for imported pictures was combined in a kontingent system with a quota of 7 to 1, the kontingent value being reckoned at Czechoslovakian kronen 15,000 ($630). Later the quota was reduced to 5 to 1 and the value raised to Cz. kronen 20,000 ($840).

Some time ago, in the hope of bringing out an arrangement to which the Americans would agree, the authorities made a new proposal, this calling for unrestricted importation as to numbers but with the proviso that for each film to be imported the amount of Cz. kr. 20,000 ($840, as noted) should be paid to a film fund at Prague, from which home production should be supported. To this overture there was no rush of endorsement by American companies, hence the new commission and its awaited report.

When the kontigent-import system became operative in 1932 the American companies ceased supplying the Czechoslovakian market, and that policy has been maintained by member companies of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. RKO already was under a long-time contract with a Prague distributor whereunder 15 pictures were sold outright. This was the only exception to the MPPDA decision, nor can it really be classed as an exception.

In another direction, too, the kontingent caused immediate tension in the Czechoslovakian market. Exhibitors were placed in a difficult position. As soon as the Americans stopped supplying the country, German product assumed the place in the sun. Statistically, the import figures for the kontingent years took on this aspect:

| IMPORTED FROM | 1933 | 1932 | 1931 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Germany | 89 | 92 | 173 |
| France | 30 | 23 | 28 |
| United States | 21 | 56 | 209 |
| England | 8 | 1 | 5 |
| Austria | 6 | 4 | 6 |
| Poland | 6 | 6 | 6 |
| Italy | 5 | 5 | 3 |
| Russia | 3 | 8 | 8 |
| Switzerland | 1 | .. | .. |
| Denmark | 1 | .. | .. |
| Sweden | 1 | .. | .. |

In 1933 Czechoslovakia produced 33 pictures of its own, an increase of six productions above the preceding year. But that development has not helped the local theatre owners. On the contrary, their plight has been growing steadily worse, and the answer lies in inferior quality of available films. Now the German motion picture has lost interest, attendance at cinema has fallen off perceptibly and business is on the downward path. The reason is that the withdrawal of the American companies has made impossible the presentation of really varied programs. For three years the public has felt more and more keenly the lack of pictures with strong pulling power.

The authorities are well aware of this but insist that, above all else, home production must be developed. Yet, with a few exceptions, the trade feels that success in that direction is impossible. Therein lies the significance of the deliberations of the new commission.

Vladimir Wokoun, president of the Association of Czechoslovakian Exhibitors, expressed himself in an interview as follows:

"There is no question but that the American films are missed on our market, because our public is too developed and critical to be satisfied with what the present limited import offers.

"The Czechoslovakian film industry, through its organization, has convinced the authorities here of the necessity for a change in the import quota system, because it is our duty to offer the public a selection of films from all over the world, including America. American renters, familiar with the local circumstances, are certainly aware of this fact, and will therefore send us the kind of films our public has been longing for the last three years. They should be films of high quality. Under those conditions not merely an enrichment of cinema repertoires but a revival of cinema business in general, involving all branches of the industry, might be expected."

The following may be added, from a very well informed Czechoslovakian source:

"In their effort to protect and stimulate their own motion picture industry the Czechoslovaks just inspired themselves by those successful measures adopted in the British Cinematograph Act of 1927.

Called Better Plan

"The next days five American film exchanges brought their business in Czechoslovakia to a practical standstill and continue in this dolce far niente up to this very day. Only RKO, having the benefit of a long term contract with the Prague distributor of its product, did not participate in the boycott and—still going strong today after three years of kontingent—continues to prove by its flourishing Czechoslovak trade that the Czechs—contrary to all saying and rumors—did not mean to ruin the American motion picture industry."

THERE'S DRAMA TOO IN NEWSREEL COVERAGE OF HAUPTMANN TRIAL

Screen Journalism Makes Newspapers Move Over for Talking Films in Courtroom with Specially Sound-proofed Cameras

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The motion picture newsreel camera is focused this week on the trial room of the century old Hunterdon County Courthouse at Flemington, New Jersey, recording in sound and image the stirring incidents being enacted in the century's most dramatic murder trial—the State of New Jersey's prosecution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann in the kidnaping and murder of the 18-months-old son of Colonel Charles Augustus Lindbergh.

The story of the coverage of the Hauptmann trial by the newsreels has its dramatic aspects, too, more noticeable to the editors of the reels and the newspapers. And although their theatrical value in their relation to the completed subject are not nearly so spectacular as the histrionics of some of the performing witnesses, nor so ostentatious as the struggle between opposing counsel for the life of the defendant, they do, nevertheless, play no small part in one of the severest competitive engagements ever staged between newsreel camera and newspaper writer to picture realistically an event that grips the attention of most of the world.

Seldom has the press concentrated such a galaxy of writing talent in a courtroom and set up such elaborate and costly machinery for transcribing their copy over telegraph wires to the linotype compositors. And now screen journalism elbows its way into the trial chambers, recording in sound the actual proceedings.

All Known Facilities Used

The newsreel silently pictured the taking of testimony at the widely publicized "Monkey Trial" of ten years ago in connection with the evolutionary teachings in Tennessee of Public School Teacher Scopes, and recorded in sound the courtroom proceedings of "Machine Gun" Kelly's Oklahoma City murder trial, the courtroom testimony of the Communists in Germany for the firing of the Reichstag, the military court in Havana trying and convicting the rebels in the last Cuban revolution, and the proceedings of the Philadelphia magistrate's court which doses troublesome drunkards with castor oil.

There will be few, if any, photographic "scoops" in this instance, the while the five newsreels each employ every known facility of modern motion picture reporting in their coverage at Flemington. Too, because of the limitation of space in the courtroom, only two cameras—one silent, the other sound—are grinding away as the mysteries of the kidnaping are unraveled from the witness stand, and the negatives obtained therefrom are, by agreement, being syndicated to all.

RINGSIDE AT FLEMINGTON—The newsreel camera, the new reporter of the new art of screen journalism, elbows its way into court, bidding Blackstone move over to make room for the movies. Cameraman Douglas Dupont, of Paramount News, at the finder—shooting for the syndicated reels—and soundman Ralph Clements at the earphones.

Pathe News made the actual sound camera installation in the trial room. Arrangements had been made after strong arguments advanced for the equal right of the camera to report the story with the news press.

Permission for installing a complete sound motion picture camera and recording outfit was finally granted after a special sound-proofed recording camera and specially constructed sound proofed lighting equipment had been devised and had demonstrated to the satisfaction of Judge Trenchard and Sheriff Curtis that operating noises which might interfere with normal court procedure had been eliminated from the apparatus.

Two days before the trial opened on January 2nd, Sheriff Curtis called together all the editors of the five reels, and, with Judge Trenchard, told them that Pathe News had the right to the sound camera in the trial room, and that the other reels would be permitted to use a silent camera on the floor of the courtroom and a sound camera in the library to the rear of the courtroom (see picture on this page).

Subsequently the newsreels all participated in effecting an arrangement whereby they would rotate their camera and sound reporters on the three equipments and the prints developing therefrom would be interchanged among them. This arrangement, however, does not apply to coverage outside the courthouse, where individual ingenuity has free opportunity.

FIVE NEWSREELS ROTATE CREWS

One Crew for One Week

The rotating arrangement and interchange of prints is similar to the procedure being followed by the still photographers of newspapers, only four still cameras being permitted within the courthouse. And, as in the case of newsreels, no single newspaper or photo service could hope to monopolize any one location during the entire trial. The newspaper plates are hurried to a dark room conducted jointly by all the papers in adjoining quarters, where prints are distributed to press motorcyclists at the same time. The newsreel negatives are rushed to New York, the reels likewise sharing in the costs of laboratory treatment.

The newsreel rotating arrangement provides for assignment of individual company camera crews for one week at a time. During the first week Pathe's camera and sound men worked the sound equipment in the trial room balcony, while Paramount's reporters shot from the library—in sound and film—and the Hearst Metrotone silent cameramen roamed the courtroom floor.

Record Witnesses' Stories

Pictures from all three of these strategic locations are necessary for a complete photographic story. The witnesses traveling to and from the stand through the library are permitted, after testifying, to stop at that point to repeat for the sound camera the highlights of their interrogation by defense and prosecuting counsel. Actual photographing and recording in the courtroom is confined, by order of Judge Trenchard, to incidents taking place only when he is not sitting on the bench. The judge ruled that he will hold in contempt any person or company responsible for the making of pictures while he is sitting. The result is that no reel has had any material for release while the trial is actually in session, all the material in this connection showing the bringing of witnesses and principals into the courtroom, and their presence in the room before, after and between sessions.

Pathe News engineered a sensational piece of coverage when a sound crew working outside of the courtroom toured the streets of Flemington and asked the townfolk whether they thought Bruno Hauptmann was "Guilty! or Not Guilty!"

Because of possible repercussions from those of the public who advocate the withholding of personal opinions until a defendant is given a fair trial, Pathe had not made up its mind at press time to release this material. Too, some of its executives felt that such a release might, together with other similar treatments in the press, give the defense an opportunity to fight for a mistrial if Hauptmann is found guilty.

Virtually all the newsreels compiled as a special short subject release before the trial, all the coverage of events leading up to the Flemington Courthouse and starting almost from the hour after young Lindbergh had been stolen from his nursery in the Sourland Mountain country at Hopewell. Typical of these specials was Universal's.

SUPREME COURT TO RULE ON NRA VALIDITY

The Administration on Tuesday asked the United States Supreme Court to decide the constitutionality of the NRA, filing a brief contending that the Act and its Blue Eagle codes were a constitutional exercise of Congressional power over interstate commerce. The high bench was asked to overrule a lower court decision that the NRA was invalid, in a case brought by the Recovery Administration against William Belcher, Alabama lumber producer, who paid wages lower than code scales.

At the same time, the National Industrial Recovery Board recommended to President Roosevelt that the NRA be made permanent at this session of Congress.

Sound Truck Headquarters

Posted before the old Hunterdon County courthouse is a Universal Newsreel sound truck which serves as headquarters for the cameramen and sound technicians and their associates who are responsible for the coverage. On the roof of the truck is a sound camera which makes a daily film record of activities outside the courthouse, where throngs of curious surge each hour against the police line as celebrities enter and emerge and as the twelve jurors file diagonally across the road to their hotel confinements. Another cameraman with more portable sound equipment is stationed at the rear of the courthouse, which includes the jail housing Hauptmann and also is used as a means of entry by Justice Trenchard and Colonel Lindbergh, the state's ace witness.

Returning to the courtroom there may be seen a new type microphone installed immediately above and behind the jury box. With a special tuning device it was possible to focus the "peak" recording on the witness chair. This tuning, however, did not interfere with the general sound pickup in the courtroom during those periods when filming is permitted in the absence of Judge Trenchard.

The cable leading from the microphone to the sound camera in the trial room balcony and to the amplifier in the same place was hidden behind picture moulding running along the north wall of the old room.

Balcony Reconstructed

A portion of the north end of the courtroom balcony was reconstructed to make room for the amplifier and operator and for placement of the sound camera. The camera had been completely rebuilt for the assignment to avoid noise interferences in the proceedings. All metal gears were replaced with fiber, and other moving metal parts were incased in graphite. With these changes the camera was made almost silent in operation.

Justice Trenchard would not permit the placement of "Kleig" lights, and after testing the various sizes and types of incandescent bulbs in the standard courtroom fixtures, it was found that these either were too bright, or in the case of dimmer lights with high actinic value, the "load" was too great for the antiquated wiring systems.

Cooperating with leading illumination engineers, a type of bulb, with an intensifier attached, was installed in each trial room fixture, and these were satisfactory.

Pathe News has arranged with the authorities to present a complete copy of all the Hauptmann newsreel material to the State of New Jersey for placement in the archives of the Commonwealth.

Because of the sensational nature of the trial, and the number and importance of the principals, the newsreels as a whole assigned one of the largest crews on record to Flemington.

Paramount—and this is typical of the others—has on hand three complete camera and sound units of three men each, two silent camera units, electricians, helpers and contact men.

In addition, on most days, two sound and camera outfits are tied up in New York running down witnesses and others involved. Other crews are assigned to Philadelphia, working on leads developing in that territory, and also at Trenton to cover developments there.

As many as three automobiles are on the road at one time, racing between New York and Flemington with negatives, and for newsreel "makeup" days airplanes are being used.

THE VOICE OF TIME!

WASHINGTON, D. C.—One morning this week to the Nation's Capitol came a committee of motion picture executives for a conference with President Roosevelt. Promptly at ten o'clock big-wigs of Moviedom who hope to clarify many of the industry's murkier problems with executive aid, filed into the President's office. Introduced to the Nation's chief by Code Lawyer Louis Nizer, the conference began.

Roosevelt: Now, gentlemen, if you will be seated in the order I designate we can start business at once. Mr. Nizer on my right—Mr. Harry Warner on my right—Mr. Adolph Zukor next—then Mr. Skouras.

Goldwyn, softly: Excuse me for mentioning it, Mr. President, sir, but how about me? I voted against Sinclair, too.

Roosevelt: Oh, yes, Mr. Goldwyn—you sit there, Sam. Now, gentlemen, I think we're ready to begin business.

Warner: Excuse me, please, Mr. President—but haven't you forgotten—

Roosevelt: Eh? What's that, Mr. Warner?

Warner: The other two gentlemen present—Will Hays and Louie Mayer.

Roosevelt: No, I haven't forgotten Mr. Hays and Mr. Mayer. How could I? I've been thinking that perhaps we could make them honorary members of a sub-committee to investigate the evils of Block Booking.

Mayer: Pardon me, your honor—I mean, Mr. President.

Roosevelt: Yes, Mr. Mayer.

Mayer: We all make mistakes sometimes, if you see what I mean. How was I to know when Hays told me Hoover was a cinch?

Roosevelt: Well, as long as you and Mr. Hays are here—I suppose you might as well stay—I think we may start the business now. What's your problem, Mr. Warner?

Warner: Darryl Zanuck.

Roosevelt: No— No— I mean the industry's first problem.

Warner: The answer still goes.

Goldwyn: Positively I can tell you, Mr. President, or my name ain't Sam Goldwyn! What we've got to do is protect the big fellow. Things is getting so tough in our industry—what with Blue Eagles, and codes, and ethics, and relatives—I'm telling you in two words it's: IM-POSSIBLE.

Skouras: He's right, Mr. President—as a theatre owner I tell you, we gotta protect the big fellows. How are we going to do business when we can't give the customers premiums? Always when they come to a Skouras house they get something. A bum picture, maybe, but a premium they can take home.

Zukor, plaintively: "Could I say a word, too, President Roosevelt?

Roosevelt: Certainly, Mr. Zukor.

Zukor: I'm telling you we should have a code for receiverships—that's what we need.

Warner: If you want the opinion of the Warner Brothers, Mr. President—and there are three of us—we won't get any place unless they make it a law that all sound be on discs.

Goldwyn: Jokes you should make at a time like this, Harry Warner—us independents have our troubles too, don't forget—For three years I have to teach English to Anna Sten. And now she talks with an accent.

Roosevelt: Gentlemen — Gentlemen — we seem to be forgetting the purpose of this gathering. Mr. Hays, we haven't heard from you. What do you think is the industry's most crying need?

Hays, orating: From the rockbound coast of Maine, to the sunny skies of California; from the rugged Dakotas to the blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico—I tell you gentlemen—and mark me well—we want our industry to be—

Roosevelt, interrupting: That's all right, Mr. Hays. You needn't go on that way. You can save that for the women's clubs.

Hays: Excuse me, sir. Then I have nothing further to say.

Roosevelt: Mr. Nizer, we haven't heard from you yet. What do you think, Mr. Nizer? I say, Mr. Nizer—hey! —Nizer!

Nizer, sleepily: Eh? What—what was that?

Roosevelt: Won't you say something?

Nizer, glibly: I'm very glad to be here, and I'm sure it's going to be a great picture.

Roosevelt: You what!

Nizer: Oh, excuse me—I must have been dozing and I dreamed I was at an opening. We think the Senate has too much clearance over this industry. The Senate, Mr. President, is the biggest circuit (not circus) of them all.

Roosevelt: Maybe—but you fellows ought to stop being the acrobats on the bill.

Zukor, plaintively: If you boys will pardon me for bringing business into this meeting, I think there is a little something that the President should know.—Manny Cohen said I should be sure to tell you—the new Mae West picture is "NOW, I'm A Lady."

Roosevelt: Did I understand you correctly, Mr. Zukor. You say the picture's called "Now I'm A Lady?"

Zukor: Yes, sir.

Roosevelt: Well, gentlemen, if your industry has reached the point where Mae West is turning 'em out for the League of Decency, I recommend you all apply for jobs with either "Deac" Aylesworth at National Broadcasting, or Bill Paley at Columbia.

Curtain, Music.

TIME MARCHES ON!

Amusing is Lennie Hayton's quip, relayed by a Broadway columnist, about the big movie executive who was admiring the sunset from his penthouse office when one of his yes-men admiringly remarked: "Look, he's such an important and busy man, yet he finds time to admire such a little thing like the sky."

Horne Tries to Get Food from Exhibitor

Several hundred New York exhibitors donned their "boiled" shirts after the last show on Saturday evening to gather in the main ballroom of the Astor Hotel on Times Square for the annual midnight supper and dancing provided by the local Independent Exhibitors' Association—at 10 dollars per provision. Numerically, at least, the affair was a howling success, and a few did negotiate some food and a dance or two. But not Hal Horne, United Artists' praise agent, who, seated next to an unusually hungry and noticeably food-monopolizing exhibitor, was compelled to leave the table, and from the Western Union office in the hotel, send a telegram to his tablemate asking him: "PLEASE PASS THE CELERY AND A ROLL TO ME SITTING ON YOUR RIGHT."

"But why do we need an agent?" bellowed Bella.

"I can get you more money," zipped Zeppo.

"But we don't want any more money," spake the scriveners.

"Then I can get you less money," topped Marx.

"What's this for?" he asked.

"To your ghost writers!" they chortled.

BLOCK SALES CONTROL THREATENS IN CONGRESS

Corporation License Bill Seen As Borah Anti-Trust Move; State Legislatures Active

Threats of federal block booking legislation, to curtail or abolish entirely the practice in its compulsory form, were heard this week in Congress, simultaneous with the extension by the department of justice of its inquiry into distribution methods as they relate to independent exhibitors, and including block booking. Developments in the department's investigation appear on page 23.

Revelation that a measure dealing exclusively with the problem of block booking was being considered came unexpectedly from Congressman Francis D. Culkin, of New York, author of the bill for creation of a federal motion picture commission, which was introduced two weeks ago.

Making it known that he would seek to have the House Interstate Commerce Committee hold a hearing on his bill at an early date, Representative Culkin said he did not expect to push it beyond that stage, the understanding being that right of way is to be given to a block booking measure.

In all probability no bill will be brought up until the results of the department of justice activities are apparent, many members believing that the St. Louis prosecution and others which are supposed to be in preparation may bring about a change in selling practices.

The menace of censorship legislation has been ameliorated by the activities of the Legion of Decency, discussions with Congressmen disclosed this week. Representative Culkin, who has been prominent in the matter, disclosed that he is not considering censorship legislation, believing that the threat of the Legion of Decency to boycott the theatres has brought about an improvement in pictures. If the industry voluntarily were to abandon block booking it would have nothing to fear from Congress, he said.

Nye Backs Federal Actions

Senator William E. Borah of Idaho moved to strip all industry of its anti-trust potentialities by introducing a bill requiring every corporation engaged in interstate commerce to secure a license from the Federal Trade Commission. Under the provisions of the bill no company would be permitted to do business outside of its own state without such a license.

The commission would be forbidden to issue a license to any company found to be an unlawful monopoly or trust; would be permitted to suspend or revoke licenses upon showing that a licensee was engaged in violations of the anti-trust law, and would be required to recall the license of any company found guilty of anti-trust law violations by a competent court.

For the benefit of companies which object to this licensing feature, Senator Borah is planning to introduce another bill providing for the federal incorporation of such concerns.

Prosecution of the socalled "film trust" all over the country this week was seen by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota as an efficient method of eliminating some of the evils of the block booking situation.

Other Congressional legislative moves against the industry during the week included the report that Congressman Dickstein of New York, chairman of the House Immigration Committee, will seek prompt action in the House on his bill to extend the contract labor provisions of the Immigration Law to actors. The bill was before the Immigration Committee last year and hearings were held, but Mr. Dickstein does not believe it will be necessary to go through this formality again.

Legislative activity pertaining to the film industry as brought up in State Legislatures throughout the country during the week included the following:

Under provisions of a bill introduced in the Senate at Albany by Julius S. Berg, and referred to the labor committee, the labor law is amended by providing that every employer operating a place in which dramatic and musical productions are shown, shall allow employees, including performers, at least 24 hours consecutive rest in each calendar week.

Amends New York Censor Bill

Irving D. Neustein, Democrat of New York City, last week introduced a bill at Albany transferring the state censorship board from the education department to the office of the state comptroller.

On Monday New York State Senator John T. McCall made radical amendments in his film censorship bill. The altered measure provides a distributor shall pay an annual license fee of $5,000 instead of $50 and post a bond of $100,000, while the exhibitor's license fee is raised from $10 to $1,000 annually. The theatre man also is required to post a bond of $50,000.

In Michigan this week Allied and other state film interests were preparing to fight the 10 per cent amusement tax bill filed last week in the legislature by Representative Frederick Kappler.

Pennsylvania Censor Continued

Ending rumors that censorship may be abandoned in Pennsylvania, Democratic Governor George H. Earle on Monday announced the appointment of L. Howell Davis, prominent attorney and business executive of Philadelphia, to succeed Samuel D. Schwartz as chairman of the board of censors.

Determined opposition by exhibitors and merchants indicated an extended battle is in prospect in the Missouri legislature at Jefferson City over Governor Park's proposal to increase the sales tax from one-half of one per cent to at least one per cent. The levy, imposed on ticket sales, is absorbed by exhibitors.

A tax on theatre circuits is proposed in a bill filed in the Nebraska legislature. The rate of the annual tax would be $25 each for a circuit of two theatres; $35 each for three; $50 each for four theatres; $100 each for five; six to ten houses, $150 each and over 10, $200 each.

Five-Day Week Up in California

Among measures up before the California legislature is one calling for a five-day week of 30 hours, which is said to have found favor with Governor Merriam, who asserts no objections to such a law have reached him from the film industry.

The need of a more clearly defined Sunday closing law in light of late developments involving Sunday shows in Kansas, was pointed out last week by Roland Boynton, state attorney general, in his biennial report to Governor Landon.

How motion picture theatre attendance is affected by seasonal considerations is reflected by this specially prepared chart, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD's weekly compilation of receipt's in key cities during the years 1933 and 1934. P. H. Buchanan, of General American Investors Company, Inc., an investment trust company of 120 Broadway, New York, in submitting the chart, points out that because of variations in theatres reported from week to week, the graph was based upon 110 theatres and the figures were adjusted by adding or subtracting $5,000 for each theatre below or above 110. The average weekly receipts per theatre, he explains, were approximately $10,000 but as a rule the theatres which were missing at times from the reports were the smaller ones. In a few instances, when a city was omitted for one week, special adjustments were made.

The two lines show marked similarity in January and February. March and April are thrown out of line by the Bank Holiday in 1933 and the fact that Easter came two weeks later in 1934. However, both years show the drop before Easter, the sharp rise the following week, and the long downward trend culminating in midsummer. In 1933 the low point was reached the week ending June 10 and a secondary low was made on August 5, from which point there was a steady advance to September 9. In 1934 the summer low came in the week ending July 21 and was followed by an advance, with one minor interruption, to September 8. The September lines follow the same pattern in both years. October and November are quite dissimilar, but the December pattern is the same in both years.

Sequences Used In Educational Plan

Details of a plan which educators feel will enable those schools interested in a highly specialized form of character education to use selections from current motion pictures were discussed last week in New York by Dr. Howard M. LeSourd, dean of the Graduate School of Boston University and the chairman of the university's committee on social values in motion pictures. The plan was detailed in a lecture before the Lower West Side Motion Picture Council, in cooperation with the motion picture course of Professor Frederic M. Thrasher of New York University.

The plan is predicated upon the theory that the portions of popular motion pictures which are of greatest interest to the public, and which exert the most profound influence upon the average audience, are those sections dealing with "life situations" or problems which touch the everyday experience of the average individual.

Standard commercial films, Dr. LeSourd said, abound in situation "gems" of this type. These, he said, are of dramatic interest in themselves and offer provocative material for class discussion, in addition to being of constructive quality. These situations in a photoplay, according to Dr. LeSourd's plan, may be taken out for educational purposes.

Dr. LeSourd's committee has 24 one-reel sections cut from current films and it offers to supply them free of charge to educational and social agencies throughout the country. The 24 subjects compose an entire series, titled "Secrets of Success."

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, representing the industry, is cooperating with Dr. LeSourd in the plan, which was illustrated at his lecture with a reel from "Huckleberry Finn," one from "Broken Lullaby," for more mature students, and one from "Young America."

Theatre Injunction Stands

Vice-Chancellor Francis B. Davis in Camden, N. J., last week ordered an injunction forbidding the Earle theatre in Atlantic City to show pictures prior to the Hollywood and Astor theatres, independents, to stand for the time being.

Metro-Goldwyn Net $1,316,762

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and subsidiaries has reported net profit after taxes of $1,316,762, for the 12 weeks ended November 22, 1934. The net, equal to $8.75 per share on the preferred stock, compares with a net of $1,164,507, equal to $7.55 per share, for the corresponding 1933 period.

The net operating income for the 1934 period was equal to $7,835,101, which, with a miscellaneous income of $94,842, brought a total income of $7,929,943. Amortization of negative and positive costs and depreciation accounted for $6,403,263.

Loew's Theatre Company Reduces Losses for Year

Loew's Theatre and Realty Corporation, subsidiary of Loew's, Inc., reported a net loss of $239,544 for the year ended August 31, 1934, which compares with a net loss of $328,367 for the preceding year.

REVISION OF QUOTA IS REPORTED NEAR

Government Sympathy Evidenced for Objection to "Pound a Foot" Films

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

The air is full of rumors of a revision of the Quota Act which will have the effect of ruling out of court any British film lacking in entertainment quality. Just how the death of the "quickie" is to be achieved is not so certain, but the general belief is that amendment of the act will take the form either of imposing a minimum cost condition or of rendering all films put forward for registration subject to inspection by a committee which will decide whether they are fit for public exhibition.

It is an old story that one or both of these safeguards are sought by British producers and by British exhibitors. What makes it news at the moment is the recent speech by G. R. Hall Caine, M. P., chairman of the Advisory Committee under the act, to the effect that the committee had prepared a report to Mr. Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, which was likely to lead to legislation early in the year.

Has Government Sympathy

Mr. Hall Caine speaks with authority, but whether he speaks with certainty has yet to be proved. The attitude of the Board of Trade has been quite clearly stated. It is willing to legislate against the "quickie" if it is satisfied with the remedy proposed, but it has indicated doubts as to the practicability of trade policies. A lot therefore depends on the exact nature of the suggestions made by the Advisory Committee.

From the point of view of the American producer, the significant fact is that the attempt to control the "quickie" is taking definite shape, and that the British objection to the "pound a foot" film has at least the sympathy of the Government.

Apart from any possible amendment of the act, 1935 will witness a definite stabilization of the Quota position. The percentage clauses have imposed a progressively increasing proportion of British films, but these conditions will reach finality with the increase of the obligation to 20 per cent as regards both distributor and exhibitor. The one out of five ratio (in other words, the necessity to handle one foot of British film for every four of foreign) applies to the distributor as from April 1st, and to the theatre owner on October 1st.

Obligation on the Distributor

There are two points of special interest in this fact. It is only with this final increase of the quota, which began in 1928 at 7½ per cent for distributors and 5 per cent for exhibitors, that the obligation as regards exhibition has been leveled up to that governing distribution. And this increased quota extends, unless there is further legislation, only until 1938. Thereafter, the quota will cease to operate. It is unsafe to assume that there will not be a new act, but the original measure was framed with the assumption that British production would not need protection after 1938.

In its final form the quota will represent a heavy obligation on the distributor even if he spends the minimum amount on British footage. A 20 per cent quota is equivalent to a provision that two out of every ten British theatres shall show only British films. Quite apart, therefore, from the possibility of new legislation compelling the American distributor to take his quota obligations more seriously, a revision of policy in that direction looks like good business. A British film which costs £10,000 ($50,000) and books to £15,000 is a better investment than one costing £5,000 and bringing in very little more than nothing.

A.T.P. Studio Expanded

Extensions to the Associated Talking Pictures studio at Ealing Green were formally inaugurated by Mrs. Stephen Courtauld and Miss Gracie Fields. Two complete new floors have been equipped and the general impression made by the plant in its extended form is that it can stand comparison with anything in England and, in the opinion of American visitors, with most of the modern studios in Hollywood. All three stages now in use are wired for RCA high fidelity recording; there is space for a fourth and still larger stage, and the workshop, dressing room and restaurant accommodation is still all on the grand scale. The first Toeplitz production, "The Dictator," is one of many independent British films made at Ealing, and ATP has shot thirteen of its own. Financially backed by Major and Stephen Courtauld, the rayon millionaires, ATP looks capable of big things. Its active principal is Mr. Basil Dean.

National Control Threat

Possibility of national control of the British industry, going beyond the provisions of NRA, is envisaged in a bill introduced in the House of Lords by Lord Melchett. Under the measure, called the Industrial Reorganization (enbling) Bill, a majority in any industry would have the power to work out a plan of reconstruction for submission to the government. While adoption of the bill at this time is considered unlikely, significance is attached to it as a reflection of trend of opinion.

Infringement Charged

Infringement of patent rights is charged in an action brought by RCA Photophone, Ltd., against Gaumont British Picture Corporation, Ltd., and British Acoustic Films, Ltd., GB subsidiary. RCA charged violation of patent No. 361,907, concerning measures by which variable width is obtained in sound track. The defense says that the patent is invalid because of lack of inventive step and because of insufficient detail of specification.

Associated Talking Pictures recorded a loss of $61,345 on the year. The previous year's loss was $7,245 and the total debit balance on the company's profit and loss account is $602,180.

British International Pictures has signed Henry Hall, chief British broadcasting musician, and his band, for a series of pictures, and is putting Jane Baxter in "Dance Band" with Buddy Rogers. Arthur Woods, after his success with "Radio Parade," has been given the direction of "Drake," with Matheson Lang.

Supreme Court To Hear Tri-Ergon Case Next Month

The United States supreme court in Washington will not hear argument in the Tri-Ergon suit before the week of February 4, it was learned this week. It had been expected the case would come up this week. A crowded calendar, and a two-week recess to enable the justices to write opinions on cases already heard, accounts for the delay.

The Tri-Ergon action involves suit by William Fox against virtually the entire film industry, over the Tri-Ergon sound reproducing "flywheel" and sound reproducing "double printing" patents, which Mr. Fox charges are being infringed.

Nominate Assistants For Academy Award Vote

The nominating committee of the Assistant Directors Section of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast has named several candidates from among whom the section membership will select the three to be placed on the Academy Assistant Directors Award ballot. Selected were: Scott Beal, "Imitation of Life"; Jasper Blystone, "Carolina"; William Cannon, "Wonderbar"; C. C. Coleman, "Broadway Bill"; James A. Duffy, "Night Alarm"; Ed Killy, "Little Minister"; Robert Lee, "We Live Again"; Walter Mayo, "Catspaw"; Arthur Rosson, "Viva Villa"; Cullen Tate, "Cleopatra"; Mack Wright, "Shock."

Time Reel Sold to B. & K. And Great States Circuit

First Division has closed with Walter Immerman of Balaban & Katz and Jules Ruben of Publix Great States, for the March of Time reel at 58 theatres of the two circuits. Henri Ellman and Al Friedlander negotiated the deal for First Division. The reel has been sold also to the Sparks circuit in Florida, and by Harry Thomas, president, to Chris Buckley of the Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany, N. Y.

Mr. Friedlander is touring the exchange centers of the country, expecting to complete the western setup in six months. In Hollywood he will discuss production with Nicholas Ludington and John Curtis. Ray Garner, formerly with Pathe, has been named First Division manager in Atlanta.

CHURCH EDITOR CALLS BLOCK SALES BIG OBSTACLE TO HIGHER STANDARDS

Dr. Shipler of 'The Churchman' Says He Did Not Verify Charge Exhibitors Were Fined $18,000,000 on Protest

The strategy of public relations, as practiced by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, this week was branded as "insidious" by Dr. Guy Emery Shipler, editor of The Churchman, in an address at a luncheon in New York before members of the Long Island Clerical League, an Episcopal organization. Dr. Shipler referred to Will H. Hays, MPPDA president, as a "pious pretender" and "the office boy" of the industry.

Keeping both barrels hot, the minister-editor continued firing at will and by the end of the week had projected this shrapnel:

1. Block booking and blind "selling" are the "niggers in the woodpile" in the "clean-up crusade".

2. Exhibitor protests against block booking cost them $500 per protest and in one year producers and distributors collected $18,000,000 in this manner.

3. The Legion of Decency movement "will be all right if they stick to it and don't allow themselves to be taken in by Mr. Hays again".

4. Joseph I. Breen, production code administrator, "would be all right, if left alone".

5. The Motion Picture Research Council is the only organization for betterment of films "which seems headed in the right direction".

6. Elimination of block booking, not censorship, "offers the only practical solution to putting films on a higher cultural plane".

7. The Church, Catholic and Protestant, does not, contrary to expressed belief in many quarters, want wishy-washy motion pictures.

The occasion for Dr. Shipler's broadsides and flank fire was more than a regular luncheon meeting of an ecclesiastical body; members of the Long Island Clerical League had learned in advance that Dr. Shipler planned to sum up his five-year campaign against Mr. Hays and the MPPDA.

Newspaperman and Cleric

Dr. Shipler has been both newspaperman and cleric. "Who's Who" records that he first saw the light of day in 1881 in a small town in upper New York State, the son of John William Harris Shipler. In 1905 he graduated from Hobart College in Geneva, N. Y., and in 1925 received the degree of Doctor of Literature. He had completed the course at General Theological Seminary in 1910. Prior to his religious training, Dr. Shipler worked as a reporter on the Rochester Evening Times. In 1901 he compiled the official daily program of the Pan-American Exposition and later as special correspondent covered the St. Louis Exposition. He was also a reporter for the Boston Traveler. After seminary days he was a deacon, priest, assistant rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, and rector of the Church of the Epiphany in Cincinnati. 1917 to 1924 he was managing editor of The Churchman and has been editorial chief of that publication since 1924.

With respect to block booking and "blind selling," generally defined as "blind buying," Dr. Shipler is convinced the exhibitor's hands are tied though the average theatre man "wants to give his community what it most desires and a decent showing of films."

Opposes Censorship

"We believe that complete elimination of block booking, not censorship, offers the only practical solution to putting films on a higher cultural plane," he said. "We do not participate or contemplate participation in any legislative measures against the industry."

Dr. Shipler said that a published report had been misleading in quoting him as saying that exhibitors, prior to the code and the 10 per cent cancellation clause, had been fined $500 when they protested against pictures under block booking.

"I did make that statement," he said, "but the newspaper did not make it clear that I stated definitely that 'I had been told' such a thing was a common practice."

Dr. Shipler said he had not confirmed the figures that had been given him by someone whose name he could not recall.

Dr. Shipler declared he did not believe that the 10 per cent cancellation privilege gave the exhibitor sufficient scope for the needs of the local community. He said the percentage should be considerably higher if the matter must be settled between the exhibitor and distributor, but suggested that cancellation be left in the hands of the local audiences.

"The Inside" of the Attack

Bishop Ernest M. Stires of the Long Island Episcopal Diocese had told the meeting that while censorship "is doubtless inadequate," in certain states it had accomplished a great deal.

According to newspaper reports, Dr. Shipler then reviewed what he termed "the inside" of The Churchman's attack on Mr. Hays and how "the movie czar" had been taken to task for his "drooling piety," had been dubbed in turn "a pious pretender," "the office boy of the movies," "the smoke screen" and "the window dresser." He scored the "insidious public relations counsel" tactics of Mr. Hays. He declared later that the civic organizations and women's clubs cooperating with the MPPDA in previewing and classifying motion pictures did not represent a true cross-section of American public opinion.

Contrary to Dr. Shipler's denial that The Churchman participated in any legislation directed against the industry, it was resolved at last week's meeting to support actively the Research Council's bill prohibiting block booking.

Tom Foster, Noted As Showman, Dies

Tom Foster of Stanley, Wis., one of the most widely known exhibitors in the country, and at one time president of the National Association of Moving Picture Theatre Owners of America, died recently at the Victory Hospital in Stanley. He was 65 years old. His death was hastened by a fall a few weeks ago which caused a fracture of the hip.

Mr. Foster was born in Hastings, England, May 28, 1869. A colorful and active career in the navy featured his early years. Later he came to the United States and obtained a street railway job in Minneapolis. About 25 years ago he moved to Stanley, there purchasing the first local motion picture theatre from Harry Nicholson, which he had operated until recent years. The house was sold in 1929 to the Hollywood Amusement Company, but Mr. Foster continued as manager until last April, when ill health forced his retirement.

He was president of the national association in 1921 and for a long period headed the board of arbitration. He had always been deeply interested in community and institutional phases of theatre operation, conducting an annual children's matinee for years. He was formerly a frequent contributor to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, particularly the "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

Fox Suit Charges Agreement Broken

Suit for damages of $750,000 has been filed in Suffolk superior court, Boston, against Fox Film Corporation by Adolphus M. Burroughs and Louis M. Boas, both of Brookline, Mass. They seek to recover for alleged breach of agreement by Fox Northeastern Playhouses, Inc., which company, it is charged, failed to carry through an agreement to lease and to buy certain theatres owned by the plaintiffs, and to recover for alleged false representation.

The complaint says that on November 9, 1928, Fox Northeastern Playhouses, Inc., controlled by Fox Film Corporation, agreed to buy and lease from the plaintiffs certain theatres for $234,184 cash and annual rentals of $125,000 for a period of 25 years. On February 8, 1929, the date set for signing papers, the defendant failed to go through with the agreement, the complaint contends.

It is alleged that the corporation agreed to buy of the plaintiffs the Strand Amusement Company of Massachusetts, Brattle Square Amusement Company, Clinton Theatre Company and another not named, and agreed to lease the Newburyport Theatre Company, Inc., and the Waverly, Sudbury and Whitman Amusement Companies.

William H. Short, Research Council's Head, Dies at 66

Dr. William Harrison Short, director of the Motion Picture Research Council, died suddenly last week in Philadelphia while on his way to New York from Washington. His death was attributed to a heart attack. He was 66 years old.

Dr. Short had been a director of the Council since 1927 and was in Philadelphia at the time of his death on organization affairs. During his incumbency he had much to do with the establishment of studies of the motion picture and its effect on children. These studies were financed by the Payne Fund and were directed by Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio State University.

These studies, together with a popular introduction by Henry James Forman entitled "Our Movie Made Children," first brought Dr. Short and the Council to the attention of the industry, giving the organization opportunity for its subsequent campaign against unsuitable films for juveniles and its legislative campaign against block booking.

In addition to his work in connection with motion pictures, Dr. Short was well known for his efforts in the promotion of international peace.

Dr. Short was born on a farm near College Springs, Iowa, in 1868. He received the degree of B.S. from Amity College in College Springs in 1887; a B.A. from Beloit in 1894, and an M.A. in 1897. In 1897 he graduated from the Yale Theological School and studied at Harvard during the summers of the ensuing three years. In 1900 he married Caroline Sleight Stouart of Sag Harbor, L. I.

He was ordained a Congregational Minister in 1897 and filled pastorates in Minnesota from 1897 until 1908, when he became secretary and a member of the executive committee of the League to Enforce Peace. In 1923 he became a director of the Committee on Limitation of Armaments during the international conference at Washington.

Dr. Short was a member of the Mohawk Council, trustee of the American-Scandinavian Foundation, National Boy Scouts of America, Council on International Justice and Good Will, Federal Council of Christions, National Conference of Jews and Christians, American Academy of Social and Political Science and the Appalachian Club.

Funeral services were held Sunday at the Congregational Church in Amityville, Long Island, his home. Burial was from his former home in Wisconsin. Dr. Short is survived by his widow, four sons, James S., Frederick W., Robert D. and Douglas F. Short, and a daughter, Frances E. Short.

Texas Monopoly Suit Trial Expected in May

The anti-monopoly suit of Rubin Frels against the Jefferson Amusement Company of Beaumont, Texas, for $250,000 damages, is expected to come up in the United States district court at Victoria, Texas, in April or May. Mr. Frels, in New York on an overbuying action against the same company, said the suit charges "conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws." He has not been able to obtain product for the past two years, he said. He operates two houses in Victoria, one in El Campo and one in Yorktown. The overbuying complaint was postponed by the Code Authority.

Newton Sees No RKO Plan Yet

No financially responsible group has yet proposed a plan of reorganization for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, it was declared this week by Carl Newton, of counsel for the RKO trustee, to Federal Judge William Bondy at a hearing in New York on the final RKO report by the receiver, Irving Trust Company, and on an application for allowances aggregating $235,000. In addition, "millions of dollars would be required for the reorganization of RKO," Mr. Newton told the court.

Mr. Newton did say, however, that there are two or three financially responsible groups interested in current discussions of an RKO reorganization, but these have proposed no plan. The groups, it is generally believed in New York, represent large RKO stock and noteholders, including Radio Corporation of America.

Mr. Newton, at Judge Bondy's insistence, revealed further that while RKO has shown a small profit for the first six months of 1934, there would be a loss for the entire year. Judge Bondy took under consideration both the receiver's report and the application for allowances, under which Irving Trust asks for $100,000 and its counsel, Donovan, Newton, Leisure & Lombard, $125,000, with about $10,000 for special services, additional fees and expenses.

Increase of $508,100 in the six percent R-K-O gold debentures of 1941, bringing the total to $1,234,900, was reported by the New York Stock Exchange.

Company's Assets "Stripped," Says Receiver for Fox

The insolvency of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses and the Fox Theatres Corporation came about chiefly because they were "stripped of their assets and thoroughly 'gutted'," it was charged before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York last week by Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres.

"These properties were all good, sound and valuable and could have met all of their obligations," Mr. Weisman said. "There is no question but that they were 'gutted.' Commissions amounting to $4,000,000 were paid out of Fox Theatres' assets for acquiring Loew's stock at prices which were twice as high as it could have been purchased for in the street. Real estate was bought by one dummy corporation for $1,000,000; sold to another dummy corporation for $1,800,000, and then sold to Fox Theatres for $3,000,000."

Mr. Weisman's charges were made during the course of a hearing at which the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee was to have submitted to the court its plan for reorganization for that circuit. Mr.

The first was reproduced in color in Motion Picture Herald, issue of December 22.

Breen To Issue All Feature Code Seals

Issuance of production code seals for all feature pictures is being concentrated in the Production Code Administration's Hollywood office, under Joseph I. Breen. The change is effective immediately.

Heretofore the eastern office of the administration has passed on features produced abroad or in the East. The New York office, under direction of Vincent G. Hart, will continue to pass on short product produced in the East.

Gerhard Gets Deitrich Post

George Gerhard, former United Artists publicity executive and publicity official of the Radio City Music Hall and of the Broadway Rivoli, has joined Cosmopolitan Productions in the post left vacant by the death 10 days ago of Theodore Deitrich. Mr. Gerhard has been well known in New York publicity circles for many years.

National Screen Meeting Ends

District and branch managers of National Screen Service left Wednesday for their homes after a day's meeting in New York. The company's 15th anniversary also was discussed.

Attending were Harry Milstein, Los Angeles; James Flannery, Seattle; William Walthal, Dallas; Tom Berk, Minneapolis; Jack McPherson, Chicago; Charles Lester, Atlanta; Harry Kirshgessner, Boston; all district managers in addition to Herman Robbins, Toby Gruen, Sam and George Dembow, Morton Van Praag, William Brenner, Ben Rosenberg, Hal Young, M. L. Kaufman, Jack Levy, Stanley Goldberg.

Brandt and Reade May Merge Circuits

Harry Brandt and Walter Reade, New York circuit operators, this week were discussing the possibilities of merging their two circuits and a deal is expected within a few days.

Mr. Brandt operates 32 theatres in New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey, while Mr. Reade has 21 houses in New York and New Jersey. It is understood that included in the negotiations is a plan to add six theatres.

Fox Will Sponsor New Johnson Expedition

S. R. Kent, president of the Fox Film, has arranged with Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, whose latest adventure film, "Baboona," will have its premiere at the Rialto theatre in New York next Monday, to make a new safari into the jungles of Africa, India, the Malay States and the South Seas to bring back a new animal picture for Fox distribution.

The Johnsons plan to start on their new trip in May and it will be their longest to date. They will fly to Cuba and South America and will then fly over the Atlantic, using the same route travelled by the Lindberghs recently. The two explorers will spend two years collecting photographic shots for their new film.

Prelate Launches British Film Drive

The highest religious authority in the British Empire, the Archbishop of Canterbury, on Tuesday in London headed a deputation to Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald to demand a state censorship of motion pictures in an effort to curb immorality in films.

The Archbishop, in introducing the deputation to the Prime Minister, said that 20,000,000 persons in the British Isles attend motion pictures weekly and the deputation was "apprehensive" regarding their influence.

Code Authority Cost Placed at $204,166 in '34

The Code Authority this week published its first annual financial statement revealing operating costs totaling $204,166 for the calendar year 1934 and a cash balance of $29,003 at the start of this year.

Receipts from producers and distributors amounted to $125,620 and from exhibitors $114,560. Exclusive of the cash balance of $29,003 at the start of 1935 there was a reserve for rent and leases of $5,838 and a reserves for rent on a month-to-month basis of $1,451.

Total disbursements for the Code Authority's New York headquarters for the year amounted to $80,720. Local boards spent $105,827 in the year and the Hollywood office $17,617.

Disbursements for the month of December totaled $8,894 for the home office; $3,460 for the Hollywood office and $12,258 for local boards.

$360,375 Budget for 1935

The Code Authority reported to NRA headquarters at Washington that it estimates it will need a budget of $360,375 in 1935. A hearing will be held in the capital February 5, postponed from January 22.

Rearrangement of the code assessment plan for producers and distributors is under consideration, a recommendation having been made to the Code Authority by distributors to drop all levies against producers, but to include them in the distributor payments. The suggestion is to be discussed at the February 5 hearing. Inasmuch as the $360,000 annual levy is based on gross income, distributors feel their respective producers should pay code levies to the companies through which they are releasing, and distributors should in turn include these payments in their assessments.

Flare-up Over Protection

From Kansas City this week came the word that a flare-up over protection is imminent in that sector. Independent exhibitors are demanding, it was reported, that the Independent Theatre Owners take some action against Fox Midwest, which, they charge, is being favored by distributors. Fox Midwest is the dominant circuit of the city.

The St. Louis grand jury indictments have encouraged some independents to discuss the feasibility of bringing the local situation to the attention of federal authorities. There also is talk of possible court action, though action in either direction is being generally discounted.

1935 Assessments Revealed

The Code Authority on Wednesday made public its application to the National Industrial Recovery Board for approval of its budget and administration expense for the year 1935, together with proposed assessments for exhibitors and producers and distributors. The assessments for production and distribution are combined, the charge being made against distribution which, in turn, will make charges against production branches. The exhibition assessments, as proposed in the Code Authority's new plan, were outlined as follows:

| Designated Class | Type of Theatre | Population of City | Per Theatre Assessment |

Authority Reverses Bank Night Ruling

Reversing for the first time a decision of a local grievance board in a bank night case, the Code Authority on Tuesday overruled the Los Angeles board in a decision on bank nights against Fox West Coast's Highland theatre in Los Angeles. The York theatre, which originally brought the complaint, asked for a withdrawal at the time it was scheduled to be heard, but the board refused. No testimony was given and a decision against Fox West Coast was handed down.

The Code Authority, in reversing the local board's decision, maintained that there was no reason for proceeding with the case after dismissal had been requested.

Warner Realigns Philadelphia Houses

Executive organization of the Philadelphia division of Warner Theatres was realigned this week into three zones.

Zone I will consist of the first-run downtown theatres, under the supervision of David Weshner; Zone II, theatres in the city except the downtown theatres, Leonard Schlesinger; Zone III, theatres outside the city, A. J. Vanni.

Dave Miller, formerly a distributor in that territory and recently of Buffalo, has been appointed film buyer and booker. Harry Goldberg continues as advertising and publicity head. Louis Davidoff and John A. Flynn will assist Mr. Schlesinger.

ALLEZ-OOP!

The Next Months of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will make box-office receipts do nip-ups and handsprings and other hitherto unknown acrobatic feats. Get your play-date book ready for—

"WEST POINT OF THE AIR" with WALLACE BEERY, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone, James Gleason.

Mightiest air thriller of them all. Daring drama of Uncle Sam's flying eagles who live madly, love wildly. New thrills in air, on earth, with a great cast picturing the epic story of aviation from its early beginning in this "Big Parade of the Air."

"VANESSA—HER LOVE STORY" Starring HELEN HAYES, ROBERT MONTGOMERY, Otto Kruger, May Robson, Lewis Stone.

An exquisitely beautiful story of undying love—tender and touching. Helen Hayes, America's finest actress, is superb as the lovely heroine of Hugh Walpole's world-famous novel. Robert Montgomery is in his best romantic style as a dashing and devil-may-care charmer.

"SOCIETY DOCTOR" with Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce, Billie Burke.

A mad whirlpool of human emotions centered in a metropolitan emergency hospital. Teeming with life, packed with thrills and laughs, it keeps moving every second of every minute. This dynamic story of life's beginning and end, might best be described as "the thrilling successor to 'Men In White'."

"SEQUOIA" (pronounced See-quo-yah) with JEAN PARKER

We quote Jim Tully, the well-known author. "No picture in years has given me the same emotional quality which I derived from 'SEQUOIA.' I often grow discouraged about films. 'SEQUOIA' renewed my faith. I congratulate its makers."

"DAVID COPPERFIELD" with an all-star cast of 65 players including:—W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Madge Evans, Maureen O'Sullivan, Edna May Oliver, Lewis Stone, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Elizabeth Allan, Roland Young.

The year's most anxiously awaited production. Charles Dickens' beloved work of art comes to the screen after two years of production as a love-story for the ages. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer proudly presents its mightiest masterpiece. Your heart will never let you forget it.

"AFTER OFFICE HOURS" with CLARK GABLE, CONSTANCE BENNETT, Stuart Erwin, Billie Burke, Harvey Stephens, Katharine Alexander.

The story of a woman-tamer who wouldn't take a fall for any girl, and a society beauty who made a habit of taking men for a joy-ride. Clark Gable and Constance Bennett are an incomparable pair of lovers, and the laughs come fast and furious in this comedy-mystery-melodrama.

"NAUGHTY MARIETTA" with JEANETTE MAC DONALD, NELSON EDDY, Frank Morgan.

The heart-stirring musical romance of old New Orleans in the days when a girl had to love to live, with the screen's two handsomest song-lovers. Golden music fills the air when Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy sing the glorious melody of Victor Herbert's delightful score.

"RECKLESS" with JEAN HARLOW, WILLIAM POWELL, Franchot Tone, May Robson, Nat Pendleton, Ted Healy.

A modern musical romance with a spectacular star-spangled cast. Jean Harlow and William Powell in a tumultous story of life on theatrical Broadway and in New York's upper social circles. Two scintillating stars in a pulse-pounding, heart-satisfying thrill-romance that will pack theatres from coast to coast.

"THE WINNING TICKET" with Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy.

A howling sweepstakes comedy, replete with fast-moving fun, an all-star cast and happy romance. A seventy-minute laugh-diet! And a brand new idea in comedy that makes the laughs come easy. Funniest entertainment since "Caught Short."

"BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL" with ANN HARDING, ROBERT MONTGOMERY, Edward Everett Horton, Una Merkel.

The gay and merry picturization of the Broadway stage success that kept blase New York audiences howling for eight capacity months. A delightfully joyous romance of a bachelor girl and the men in her life. With the two sweethearts of "When Ladies Meet."

"THE NIGHT IS YOUNG" with RAMON NOVARRO, EVELYN LAYE, Charles Butterworth, Edward Everett Horton, Una Merkel.

The musical romance of the Prince and the chorus girl. By Sigmund Romberg and Oscar Hammerstein II, world-renowned authors of "The Desert Song," "The New Moon," and other hit shows. Tunefully set to the magic melody of Romberg's haunting music. Two romantic favorites in the year's first big screen thrill.

The Winning Ticket

(MGM)

Comedy

Obviously made as a commercial feature, this show affords only the potential showmanship commonly associated with such caliber attractions. Essentially the story is a comedy and as such is productive of a few good laughs. Where it seeks to become dramatic and qualify that quality with pathos, it introduces a note that has but little relation to the fundamenal premise.

Long drawn out, its legitimate entertainment being concentrated in the comedy situations, the show is the story of a ticket on a famous Irish sweepstakes. Sold to barber Tomasello by his ne'er-do-well brother-in-law Eddie, it eventually proves to be the winning ticket. However, as Tomasello stands very much in awe of his Irish wife's hatred of gambling, the ticket is lost, hidden by lawyer Tony in a jar which is given to Baby Mickey to play with. The child slips it into a guitar. Ensues a hectic search when the radio announces that Tomasello's horse, Salome, has won a fortune. Quite a bit of funny action occurs and for some inexplainable reason the pathos is wrung in before the smashing of the guitar over Eddie's head reveals the ticket.

Hardly of the strength in cast names or entertainment value to stand alone, the production does, however, make possible much timely exploitation. Horse racing and race gambling seemingly having much of the populace excited, there's room for lots of gag stuff in connection with the winning ticket idea.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

David Copperfield

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Exhibitors and patrons who understand the value of fine things should appreciate this. "David Copperfield," realistically produced to reflect faithfully the atmosphere of the times and the personalities of which and whom it treats, is a masterful achievement. It is intelligently directed and acted in the full spirit that characterizes the original work.

Primarily the show is a prestige feature, presentation of which should assume the status of an extraordinary event. While being of that quality it is also smash entertainment with a powerful all-audience appeal. People today probably consider that they have other more important things to do than the reading of Dickens' works. But whether or not they are familiar with the book "David Copperfield," this screen version is actually so much an educational feature (while being thrilling in its entertainment) that seeing it practically becomes a duty.

The picture is the book. It's the story of David Copperfield, sensationally characterized by youthful Freddie Bartholomew in the earlier sequences. There's his birth and childhood happiness with his mother, the sorrow, tragedy and cruelty that came to him when she died. Next we have David in London; his happiness with the Micawbers, preceded by touchingly human scenes with Peggotty; the boy's heart-rending trek to Aunt Betsey's; happiness here and his meetings with Agnes when he goes to school and lives with Mr. Wickfield. Those great characters are seen—Uriah Heep, Steerforth, Mr. Dick, Little Em'ly, Dan Peggotty, Barkis, Mrs. Gummidge—and David grows to manhood. Then as Frank Lawton assumes the role and falls in love with Dora, some of the sparkle goes out of the show. Not because it is less worthy, but because of the appeal that is lost when the boy, Bartholomew, passes out of the picture. As his early life was tragic so is his marriage. His wife is a disappointment. His idol, Steerforth, shatters his illusions by betraying Little Em'ly. Dora dies. Heep, humbly sly, has been victimizing Wickfield and Agnes. But David halts him and as he is triumphant with his old friends, he finds that love was always his with Agnes.

"David Copperfield" is an unusual picture which should not be presented in the usual way. As it is bigger than anyone in it, with the exception of young Bartholomew. It commands the respect and support of everyone interested in the cause of sincere, elevating entertainment, to be sold with a dignity that completely emphasizes the worth of all its elements.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

A Notorious Gentleman

Melodrama

A melodrama and also the story of a perfect crime, this picture is composed of elements that often have demonstrated their entertainment and exploitation value. So constructed that interest is created immediately and maintained, the production majors in a situation that permits diverse showmanship. Given a mystery tinge, evident to those who see the picture but baffling to its participants, drama is the element concentrated upon to the almost total exclusion of comedy and with only vestiges of romantic love interest included.

In the story, Kirk Arlen, clever criminal lawyer, kills an old family enemy, Clayton Bradford. He claims self-defense during the trial, but has so constructed circumstantial evidence that guilt appears attached to Nina Thorne, who previously spurned Arlen's romantic ambitions. The jury disagreeing on the premise that Arlen is accepting responsibility for the crime in order to shield the woman, Arlen, to divert all traces of suspicion from himself, convinces Terry, the victim's nephew, that he killed his uncle during a drunken stupor. Suggesting suicide and although the district attorney, Barrett, and Nina have some how got wind of Arlen's plan, the boy kills himself. To trap Arlen, who both are sure was the instigator of both tragedies, the D. A. forges Terry's name to a note and sends the gun to Arlen, suggesting that he rub himself out. Desperate, the murderer goes to the Bradford mansion, shoots the already dead boy and when he is surprised by the concealed Barrett and Nina, confesses his crimes and the motive for each.

The picture, realistically presented, moves fast and packs much thrilling entertainment. Because of its nature, principal appeal probably will be towards the more mature portions of audiences. A little too grim for juvenile consumption, it has the elements for those who appreciate straight well-done drama.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

story, yet one so different in every phase that it has no counterpart. It's a show that capitalizes to an intelligent degree the full value of romance and drama. Likewise it is packed with human interest. As a topper, it climaxes the story with a novel brand of thrill.

The show is not a big one; rather it is one in which intelligent preparation, combined with good direction and capable acting, gives values to understood commonplace elements that the general public readily can grasp. There are no grim heroics in the show; neither is there any of the ordinary pulse tingling thrill. Its most exciting moments are the result of cleverly handled comedy relief. Yet it is an action picture, telling a tender love story, which is more devotional than ardent; tinging its motivation with comedy and in a topical manner building to a real climax.

The plot is simple but powerful. Ken Gordon is a flier attempting to perfect instruments for safe flying in the dark or fog. Sheila Mason, barnstorming sky-writing stunter, managed by Nick Williams, falls in love with him. Her affection is coldly received. At the moment when triumph for his devices seems just ahead, Gordon is blinded by a gas explosion.

Follow sequences in which the full power of dramatic romance is capitalized. Gordon, who has retired to the country accompanied only by his faithful mechanic, Mac, gets a police dog to lead him around. Trying to be a writer, but only getting rejection slips, he never knows that the checks he cashes are the result of Sheila's taking any kind of a breakneck job that Manager Williams can conceive.

As Mason's plane is confiscated by the manufacturers in default of payments, Sheila, succumbing to Williams' continued pleas, agrees to try a hop from Moscow to New York. Then comes the big thrill. She gets safely across to Newfoundland; there fog menaces her. As she in turn calls Halifax, Portland, Boston, via radio, Graham MacNamee's voice details her dangerous progress to the world. Over Roosevelt Field the fog is thickest. Ken, listening, suddenly discovers how much he loves the girl. With Mac, he crashes the hangar and goes up through the fog, gets in touch with the girl via radio. Above the clouds the fliers pour forth their love story. Then Mason leads the girl to safety by means of the instruments he perfected.

The essentials are primarily gripping drama, romantic love interest and thrill suspense. Supplementing them are comedy, realism, adventure, both subdued and potent excitement and finely tempered character portrayals.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Man Lock (Tentative)

(Fox)

Melodrama

This is a story of "sand hogs," rough, tough, daring, hardy men who make their living driving tunnels under rivers. Naturally a thriller with plenty of excitement and action. The unique locale which graphically portrays all the dangers to which the men are subject, with the water itself the principal menace, makes possible a type of showmanship that should assist materially in creating an audience interest for the show's motivating melodramatic story.

Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen again being the mutual battling characters, the story concerns two crews—one headed by McLaglen, the other by Charles Bickford—building opposite segments of a tunnel scheduled to meet in mid-river. Rivalry between the opposing crews to accomplish the most work, taking the greatest gambles with life and safety in so doing, brings McLaglen and Bickford into continual conflict. Fostered by a mutual admiration for Marjorie Rambeau, proprietress of a saloon where men who are men gather for surcease from their dangerous toil, the enmity winds up in a grand fight when the crews break through in the middle of the river. Besides being much concerned about Bickford's activities, McLaglen has to contend with the sneering, wise-cracking Lowe, which is the basis for a situation, as the two men really admire each other very much, as evidenced by the manner in which they effect mutual rescues. While this trio continually is occupying the spotlight, there's a series of fires, explosions, blows, and resulting hairbreadth escapes that maintain a constant atmosphere of dangerous thrill. As a by-product there is an almost inconsequential romance between Lowe and Florence Rice.

Essentially the show is a man and boy picture, there being comparatively little to interest women and quite a bit that is apt to cause them to lose interest in the attraction. The subject with which it deals, however, should make possible the adaptation of a type of realistic showmanship exploitation to whet the interest of the thrill fans.

With little other than the realistic background to set it apart from the formula melodrama, getting business for the show is dependent almost entirely upon how much curiosity can be stirred up in regard to the dangerous lives and experiences of "sand hogs."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Producer, Robert T. Kane. Directed by Raoul Walsh. From the story by Borden Chase and Edward J. Doherty. Screen play by Borden Chase, Noel Pierce and Lester Cole. Songs by Dan Dougherty. Lyrics by Jack Yellen. Dances by Jack Donohue. Photographed by Hal Mohr. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. Release date, Jan. 25, 1935. ## Mysterious Mr. Wong

(Monogram)

Melodrama

Adapted from a popular novel, of the same title, by Harry Stephen Keeler, this melodramatic story of the machinations of a notorious Chinese, who spreads terror through the Chinatown of a large American city in search of legendary power deriving from certain gold coins, contains some element of entertainment for those audiences who do not demand too much.

The widely known Bela Lugosi has the lead, with Arline Judge and Wallace Ford in chief support. The newspaper reporter who delves into the background of a series of Chinatown murders, apparently a tong affair, and comes close to ending his career in a torture cellar, supplies the motivation for the romance and action.

It would appear that a combination, in the selling, of the name of Lugosi with the mystery and melodrama implied in the title, is the best exploitation method. Perhaps something may be made of the fact that Mr. Wong is actually in search of the 12 coins of Confucius, which, according to legend, were given to 12 persons originally, but would confer on the possessor of all 12 the power sufficient to make him the all-powerful ruler of a Chinese province.

One after another victims of Wong's murderers give up their gold coins, until Wong, who poses as a harmless herb seller, is in possession of all but one. As Wong pursues his search for the important twelfth coin, Ford, reporter assigned to the Chinatown murders, moves in and out of the film, finally becoming deeply enmeshed in the mysterious activity of the murderous Mr. Wong. He picks up a clue here and there, and finally, visiting Chinatown with the girl who will not say yes, Miss Judge, he comes into sudden possession of the last coin, as a man falls dead near them in a restaurant.

They are captured by Mr. Wong, subjected to torture, but Ford is able to summon help, which comes in the expected nick of time, Ford having done the Chinese province a great service, he is told, when Wong is killed by police. Miss Judge decides to say yes.

It appears to be material of a midweek billing nature.—Aaronson, New York.

Dangerous Corner

(RKO Radio)

Drama

A motion picture adaptation of the well-known play by J. B. Priestley, this picture is affected by the usual obstacle of direct transplantation from stage to screen, a lack of action. It is, in a word, too heavily dialogued for assured popular appreciation.

The theme of itself is an interesting study in character and psychology, and a surprise twist is given to the construction of the plot. The developments are on a basis of "what might have happened" given a certain group of people and a certain set of circumstances, and actually "what did happen," which idea may be of sales value to the exhibitor.

The small cast is only fairly familiar, headed by Virginia Bruce and Conrad Nagel, with Melvyn Douglas and Erin O'Brien-Moore in chief supporting roles. The effect of a theft within their own group, and the subsequent apparent suicide of one of them, take their toll of mental torture, incrimination and recrimination, in "what might have happened," through the forcing into the open of the real truth, while things move again in tranquil fashion in "what did happen," by reason of the natural inclination to follow the easiest path and evade the issue. Interesting enough, the picture is likely limited in appeal. The title significance is obvious.

In the young and successful publishing firm are Nagel, Douglas, Ian Keith, Henry Wadsworth and Miss Bruce, Nagel married to Miss Moore, Wadsworth to Betty Furness, and Keith, Douglas and Miss Bruce unmarried, although Douglas is in love with Miss Bruce and at regular intervals asks her to marry him.

On the occasion of Nagel's wedding anniversary and a celebration in the office, it is discovered that a valuable bond is missing from the safe, to which only the partners in the firm held keys. Suspicion flits here and there among them, until Keith is found, apparently a suicide in his rooms. It is naturally assumed he was the thief. Some time later, at a house party in Nagel's country home, the radio is found to have a burned-out tube, and they talk instead of dancing. Then on a small incident, the truth comes out, indicating that Miss Moore had been in love with Keith, that Miss Furness and Wadsworth had not been the dove-like couple they appeared, that she had gone to Douglas for sympathy and understanding, that Douglas had actually stolen the money to save Miss Furness from a financial debt of which she feared to tell her husband, that Miss Bruce really was in love with Nagel, and that she had shot Keith in self-defense on a visit to his home, all of which Douglas had guessed. Nagel, in a final washup, kills himself. That's what might have happened.

Then what did happen. Wadsworth finds another tube, replaces the burned one, the group dances and chats, and in the moonlight Miss Bruce says yes to Douglas.

Typical stage material, it is effectively done on the screen, but it is still a stage play, except that it is in celluloid.—AARONSON, New York.

The Wandering Jew

(Olympic Pictures)

Drama

From the famed play of the same title by E. Temple Thurston, Julius Hagen in England has produced a powerful motion picture, but one which would appear to have a definitely limited appeal. In its basic significance it stirs a deep-lying religious question, and for that reason the exhibitor is rather under the necessity of treading warily.

This film some time ago was purchased by MGM for distribution here, but subsequently was dropped at the firm protest of the rabbinical interests of New York, as being of too highly controversial a nature.

From the standpoint of the production as a motion picture, however, it has been excellently presented, and throughout the outstanding highlight is the brilliance of the performance of Conrad Veidt as the Wandering Jew, who spat upon Jesus and was cursed to wander through the ages, thus doing penance for his wrathful act. At all times, the work has been elaborately and authentically produced, with all the fanfare and pageantry of the periods of which it tells. The support, quite completely unknown in this country, is none the less capable.

The story is divided into four phases, the first the scene of the original act of the Jew, the others the following chapters in his life, until at last it is given to him to find the rest and peace which comes with death, his eternal wandering at an end. Breaking waves on a sandy shore separate phase from phase, effectively, and it may be mentioned that there is an outstanding technical excellence in the film.

First in Jerusalem, as Veidt's wife, dying, calls for Jesus, Veidt becomes enraged, rushes to the street, and as Christ carries the cross toward Calvary, spits upon him. The curse, that Veidt shall wait upon the earth until Christ shall return, comes to him, and as he attempts to stab himself to join his dead wife, the blade snaps.

Then he appears in the guise of a strange and fearless knight in armor, in the days of the Crusades, where he, winning at the jousts, stealing the wives of others, lives utterly without fear of death. In the third phase, Veidt is seen as a merchant in Sicily, generations later, loving dearly his wife and their son. When the son, bitten by an adder, dies, Veidt sees his wife taken from him by the spirit of the church, personified by a kindly neighboring monk. When she leaves, he cannot kill her, is completely beaten, seeing yet his fate to continue his wandering.

Finally, in the city of Seville, in Spain, he is a kindly and able doctor, who treats the poor for no return. It is at that time that the cruel and tortuously oppressive Spanish Inquisition holds its fearsome sway, seeking out, torturing and burning heretics, especially Jews. When Veidt treats a street walker, and innocently makes a damaging remark to her, the weight of the Inquisitors turns upon him, and he is haled before the council. He refuses to speak, but finally does to save the girl. About to be burned at the stake, he falls dead, finally granted the death he had sought so long.

Powerful, dramatic material, brilliantly performed, the film is nevertheless limited for audiences.—AARONSON, New York.

Mills of the Gods

(Columbia)

Drama

A dramatic story of the strength and courage of an elderly woman of wealth, whose own straightforwardness is in direct contrast to the worthlessness of her offspring and grandchildren, this picture appears entertaining material, developing an almost secondary romantic theme as it progresses, and concluding on a note of the character rejuvenation of at least one member of the wholly unnecessary family.

The best name in all probability will be that of May Robson, from the selling standpoint, supported in particular by Fay Wray and Victor Jory. The others are inconsequential from an exploitation angle. There is a current note in the thematic situation of a great factory in danger of complete shutdown as a result of the depression, which would result in throwing out of work thousands of workers. As the elderly woman would step into the breach, the young granddaughter, with romance with one of the workers' leaders as the mainspring, stands beside the grandmother to bring order and renewed hope out of approaching labor chaos.

There is a touch of unnecessary tragedy at the conclusion as the weak-spined brother meets death attempting to aid his stronger willed sister.

For many years, following the death of her husband, Miss Robson has carried on the major business which her husband founded. Seeking retirement, she turns the business over to a board of directors of old employees, not daring to trust her worthless family. There are Miss Wray and James Blakely, the grandchildren; Raymond Walburn and Josephine Whitell, the son and daughter. All are wasters and prefer living in the smart resorts of Europe to staying at home. Three years after Miss Robson's retirement, the depression hits, payrolls are cut, departments close and the town, dependent on the plant, is in danger of ruin.

When Miss Robson learns the plant is in danger she summons the family from their pleasures, and they refuse to put up their money to keep the plant open. Reluctantly Miss Robson steps out, leaving Walburn in charge. He decides to close the mills and leave with the family for Paris. Agitators, led by Jory, stir trouble. Jory accidentally meets and falls in love with Miss Wray. When a committee demands action Walburn promises a meeting, but plans to flee. The workers plot to stop him when he's to board his private car. Miss Robson, meanwhile, has raised all available cash, but before she can prevent a riot, young Blakely is killed. Miss Robson promises to reopen the plant, and keep it open. Jory and Miss Wray part, with the understanding that they will soon be together again.—AARONSON, New York.

Isle of Bermuda

(Fox)

Interesting

In this number of the Magic Carpet series, the camera has ably pictured the beauty and tranquility which characterizes England's quiet island in the south Atlantic. Seen are the natural beauties of the island, the crystal caves, the unexcelled view from the famous Gibbs' Lighthouse, the coast line and the festivities which mark the celebration of St. George's Day by the British military garrison. The fact that many of the film's patrons have been in Bermuda should heighten the interest in scenes which for many will be familiar.—Running time, 11 minutes.

So You Won't T-T-T-Talk

(Vitaphone)

Good Comedy

An unusually good comedy, chiefly that by reason of the appearance of two ace comedians, Roscoe Ates of the unstable tongue, and Shemp Howard of the canopy of hair. The two, much beset by respective wives and the small brother of Ates' wife, go on a picnic in the woods, after many a mishap in the home. One of the neatest comedy touches in many a day is the manner in which Howard plays solitaire with innumerable sandwiches he is supposed to be making. At the picnic grounds, with the boy chiefly at fault, the two move from one mishap to another, ending in a wild flight for home, pursued by a polecat. Ates is well known and amusing, Howard is less known, but if anything even more amusing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Toyland Premiere

(Universal)

Good

Highly entertaining and in Technicolor, this number of the Cartune Classics series is a shade late for the Christmas material it offers, but it still should be found enjoyable, especially by the youngsters, and is appearing closely enough to the holiday season to reduce that factor to a negligible obstacle. Santa Claus visits the big city on the invitation of Oswald, and at the toyland bazaar he is the guest at a dinner, where various film stars, in caricature, perform. Most of the fun is supplied by the characters of Laurel and Hardy.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Actual Operations To Be Discussed at MPTOA Sessions

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America decided this week in New York to supplant the usual long-winded discourses on exhibition generalities at its annual convention next month, with authoritative explanations of proper procedure in maintenance, and merchandising motion pictures at the theatre. Home office advertising and exploitation experts, theatre architectural designers and engineers on improved methods in theatre management, modern theatre design, construction and equipment, will be delegated to speak. Code charges, legislation and the music tax also will be major subjects.

February 28 in New Orleans

The convention will open at the Roosevelt hotel in New Orleans February 25 and will adjourn February 28, in time for the city's Mardi Gras.

Harry S. McLeod, of the St. Charles theatre, New Orleans, is chairman of the Convention Arrangements Committee, which this week voted to provide display booths for equipment manufacturers.

Hollywood studios will route stars, directors and executives through New Orleans. The annual board of directors' meeting will be held the day preceding the opening.

Tentatively lined up as guest speakers are Representative Emanuel Celler, Republican of New York, author of the new Congressional anti-block booking bill, and Edward Golden, sales manager of Monogram and champion of double bills.

Appointed this week were the following convention committees:

FINANCE

H. S. McLeod, St. Charles Theatre, New Orleans, chairman; Victor Meyer, Orpheum theatre, New Orleans; P. J. Sliman, Laurel theatre, New Orleans.

ENTERTAINMENT

Frank Heidrich, Lyceum theatre, chairman; Robert Blair, Saenger; E. J. Myrick, United Theatres Circuit; A. J. Higgenbotham, Columbia theatre, Hammond; Maurice Barr, Saenger Theatres; Warren Salles, Garden, and H. S. McLeod.

REGISTRATION

Vic Meyer, chairman; J. Walker Ross, Jr., New Orleans Association of Commerce; Bert Kiern, Happy Hour theatre.

FILM CARNIVAL

Luke Connor, New Orleans Vitagraph exchange; Harold Wilkes, Paramount exchange; James Briant, Metro.

BANQUET

Robert Blair, chairman; Joe Estes, Tudor and Globe theatres, New Orleans; Rodney Toups, Loew's State.

RECEPTION

Rodney Toups, chairman, and including all New Orleans theatre owners and circuit and exchange executives.

State Units Active

Reelection of Ed Kuykendall as president is expected.

State affiliates of both the MPTOA and of Allied and other exhibitor associations were busy strengthening legislative committees to fight adverse measures, arranging for 1935 conventions, and electing new personnel.

At Baltimore, Frank Hornig, president of the Maryland MPTO, named a legislative committee comprised of Herman Blum, William Hicks and himself.

Allied Theatres of Massachuetts, headquarters in Boston, elected Joseph Brennan, manager of Loew's State in that city, to succeed the late James J. McGuinnis as executive secretary. Mr. Brennan, dean of Boston first-run managers, resigned from Loew's to spend all his time in his new post.

Reelection of Nathan Yamins as president of the Independent Exhibitors, Inc. in New England is expected at the annual convention at Boston January 29.

An all-Iowa "Movie Frolic" will be held at Des Moines February 14 and 15, at the annual convention of Allied's Iowa-Nebraska unit, of which Lester Martin is business manager.

In Milwaukee, the new Independent Theatres Protective Association of Upper Michigan and Wisconsin elected Ray Tesch business manager, and decided to establish permanent headquarters in that city on February 1st. Elected chairman of the legislative committee was F. J. McWilliams, Madison, who is vice-president, while the permanent committee on finance is comprised of E. Langemack, J. J. Boden and William Silcock.

Fight on Membership Dues

Allied States of the Northwest, at Minneapolis, was preparing to wage a "price-cut war" in membership dues with the new Independent Theatre Association.

The MPTO of Nebraska, Charles Williams, President, convened at the Loyal hotel in Omaha Tuesday and Wednesday.

Because the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, of Philadelphia, insisted that the new unit be "strictly independent," the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania refused to effect a merger of the two Pennsylvania exhibitor associations. Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia exhibitor, was elected president of the state MPTO.

The Intermountain Theatre Owners Association, at Salt Lake, reelected C. E. Huish president and renamed J. J. Gillette vice-president and John Rugar secretary-treasurer.

Invading the District of Columbia, Allied States formed a new association at Washington and elected C. H. Olive president; A. E. Lichtman vice-president, and E. Laurence Phillips secretary.

Vincent Serrano, Noted Actor, Dies

Vincent Serrano, veteran stage and screen actor, who was a matinee idol before the turn of the century, died last week in Flower Hospital, where he was rushed from his home in New York, when stricken with a heart attack. He was 68 years old. His last appearance on the New York stage was as the Mexican general in the late Florenz Ziegfeld's musical comedy production, "Rio Rita," in 1927.

His most famous role in a long and star-studded career was as Lieutenant Daly in Augustus Thomas's production of "Arizona," which opened at the Herald Square theatre in September, 1900. As the melodramatic lieutenant hero, Mr. Serrano appeared no less than a thousand times in New York and London. He made his first stage appearance in 1893, after serving for a time as second secretary to the Colombian legation in Washington. He performed in 13 motion pictures, among them "Eyes of Youth" and "Convoy," his last screen appearance, which was produced in 1927.

Annual Paramount Production Cost Is $36,000,000

Annual cash requirements for production of the Paramount Publix Corporation under its proposed plan of reorganization, estimated at $36,000,000, were detailed last week in New York to Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe by George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager, testifying at a reorganization hearing.

Paramount's film subsidiaries require $700,000 a week, Mr. Schaefer said. Of this sum, he explained, about $250,000 weekly pays the salaries of some 2,700 employees on the Coast. Thus the average salary paid by Paramount to its Coast employees is $92.60 per week.

Operation of the company on the Coast, Mr. Schaefer said, inclusive of salaries, requires about $400,000 weekly and an additional $136,000 is spent for executive salaries, the remainder going for advertising, publicity and "similar items." The annual production budget he cited at $36,000,000.

The estimated profits of the picture group for the last three months of 1934 are put at about $1,030,000, compared with $2,300,000 for the final quarter of 1933, the Paramount executive revealed. He said he expected profits for 1934 would be in excess of $5,000,000.

Mr. Schaefer disclosed that the allowance for film inventories is insufficient, saying that from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 additional is necessary so that at all times there are enough pictures on hand to allow for preparation of publicity and exploitation.

Y. Frank Freeman, in charge of Paramount's theatre operations, said earnings of the theatre group for 1934 were about $882,000 and predicted that earnings for 1935 would approximate $1,200,000. At the end of 1934 approximately $4,400,000 in cash was held by the consolidated theatre and realty group, Mr. Freeman said, and of this about $1,181,000 was held by Balaban & Katz, which firm, he said, has accumulated and unpaid preferred dividends due at the rate of seven per cent a year from October, 1933, on $2,600,000 par value of preferred stock. Paramount Publix consolidated film subsidiaries will show an estimated net profit for 1934 of approximately $5,800,000, exclusive of theatre subsidiaries, it was said.

A petition for approval of an agreement under which William Hamm, Jr., of Minneapolis, becomes operating head of Publix Northwest on a short term contract expiring June 27 was filed this week by counsel for the Paramount trustees with Referee John E. Joyce.

A hearing on the petition was set for January 21. Hearing on objections to the $282,000 claim of Jesse L. Lasky against Paramount, to have been held Wednesday, has been adjourned to January 28.

Charges that the failure of the state superintendent of banks in New York to act on the bonds of Prudence Company, Inc., was holding up efforts to reorganize the affairs of Seneca Holding Corporation, Paramount subsidiary which controls its Astoria, Long Island, studio, were made in New York Tuesday by Frederick Powell, attorney for the Prudence trustees.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE

Warner

Analysis of this production reveals that while it majors in comedy it is a brisk amalgamation of many known entertainment and commercial theatrical elements from melodrama to surprisingly tender love interest, embellished with much music and dancing and culminating in an elaborate girl glamour spectacle. The story, in a way, parallels Jolson's career in a fictionized style. It has him as a temperamental big shot star, whose following of the horses and consequent inattention to his job result in his being blackballed by producers. Rescued from the race tracks by his sister, Glenda Farrell, he teams up with a novice cabaret dancer, Ruby Keeler, to become a sensational attraction. Backed by the husband of Helen Morgan, he uses funds advanced for the show to clear his sister of a murder charge, and after getting into a jam with Equity, manages to retrieve himself and find love with the girl whom he, while admiring her as a partner, never had considered his inspiration.

The show, which teams Jolson and Ruby Keeler for the first time, is by Bradford Ropes, who did "42nd Street," with the screen play by Earl Baldwin, and Archie Mayo directing. Music and lyrics are by Harry Warren and Al Dubin, with dances created and staged by Bobby Connolly.

As Ruby Keeler does more dancing than ever before, her repertory running from clog to waltz, Jolson has half a dozen songs. The one which at this stage sounds most promising is "Mammy, I'll Sing About You." In addition to names mentioned, the cast includes Patsy Kelly, Benny Rubin, Bobby Connolly, Barton MacLane, William Davidson, Sharon Lynne and Joyce Compton, plus scores of dancing and singing chorus girls.

It is elaborately and expensively staged, the settings distinctively modern and unique.

THE WEDDING NIGHT

Goldwyn Production

Localed in the Connecticut tobacco growing country, being both dramatic and romantic yet a down-to-earth story, this seems to be an unusual vehicle for the talents of Anna Sten and Gary Cooper. Actually, two parallel stories are related. One deals with a family of immigrant Polish farmers who settle in the country and, through their own industry, find it a land of happiness and fortune. The companionate love story is sometimes exotic and builds to a dramatic conflict that promises to be impressively powerful. It concerns a modern American, who suddenly discovers the simple calm and serene peace of his new-found foreign friends as a strange contrast to the life he knew and of which he wrote. Similarly, the girl discovers something fascinating in the charm of modern Americana that was beyond anything she ever had dreamed.

The spectacular feature of the production is a colorful, authentically mounted Polish wedding, at which Anna Sten does several folk dances.

Players supporting Miss Sten and Cooper, whose current "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" can not help but increase his box office popularity, include Ralph Bellamy and Helen Vinson in the feature roles. Most of the support are character players, comparatively obscure as draw personalities, among them Siegfried Rumann, Esther Dale, Leonid Snegoff, Elinor Wesselhoeft, Milla Davenport, Agnes Anderson, Hedi Shope, Hilda Vaughn and Violet Axzelle.

While the title might suggest something musical, that quality is present only in the special accompaniment and as an adjunct to the colorful wedding sequence. While lead names appear to be the element upon which to concentrate, the spectacle sequence is also a source of interest creation, particularly if the Russian mass spectacle in "We Live Again" made an impression upon patrons.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

This production is based upon a story titled "Death Flies East," which ran aerially recently in American Magazine. Its author, Philip Wylie, is a noted contributor to modern fiction. The screen play is by Albert DeMond and Fred Niblo, Jr., who individually and as a team have been identified with several Columbia pictures. Phil Rosen is the director.

Given an interesting premise, practically all the action happens aboard an eastbound plane. Dealing with a girl, paroled from jail, who is rushing to get a confession from an about-to-be electrocuted criminal, it runs the gamut of much that is melodramatic and uniquely romantic. A baffling death and a second poisoning bring the girl within the clutches of the law. While this is going on a government agent, traveling to Washington with secret military plans, comes under the menace of a Japanese spy threat. Yet as circumstances free the girl of suspicion, the spy scare is given a unique twist which culminates in a triumphant comedy and romantic finale.

While adequate for the anticipated market purposes, the cast contains no smash names. Leads are assumed by Florence Rice, seen in several Columbia pictures since her recent screen debut, and Conrad Nagel. Raymond Walburn, one of the outstanding figures in "Broadway Bill" as the oldtime racetrack tout, is featured. Supporting players include Geneva Mitchell, Frank Conroy, Irene Franklin, Oscar Apfel, Adrian Rosely, George Irving and Robert Allen.

The action quality of the story appears to be the peg upon which showmanship appeal most logically can be based. As the present title is hardly expressive of the theme, it probably will be necessary to do a little more advance explaining than is usual in identifying the picture's character in patrons' minds.

BLACK FURY

Warner

From the standpoint of story, production and personnel values, as well as unusual topical interest, this feature promises much in the way of showmanship and entertainment. "Black Fury" is based on the original story, "Jan Volkanik," by Judge H. A. Musmanno, and the play "Bohunk" by Harry R. Irving. It's a drama of the Pennsylvania coal mines, and while an indictment of neither business nor organized labor, it does delve deeply into labor racketeering and the manner in which the miners are exploited.

To get every vestige of authenticity, months were spent in preparation and several acres of the lot were covered by a mining town exact to the last detail and a coal mine was reproduced with every bit of necessary equipment. Against this background and in an atmosphere that reflects conditions that have been the subject of numerous congressional and sociological investigations as well as continually recurrent newspaper headlines, the melodramatic story of Bohunk Jan Radek, played by Paul Muni, is told. It is a role that should permit this realistic actor to top his gripping performance in "I'm a Fugitive."

There being a natural interest in the life drama of which this story treats, the cast selected to support Muni is of more than usual showmanship significance. Listed, and all practically featured, are Karen Morley, about whom the more tender, yet conflicting romantic situations rotate; William Gargan, returning to the American screen after several months in Europe; Barton MacLane, a newcomer; John Qualen, J. Carrol Naish, Vince Barnett, Henry O'Neill, Tully Marshall, Mae Marsh, Sarah Hadden, Willard Robertson, Wade Boteler, Joe Crehan, Ward Bond, Purnell Pratt and Eddie Shubert.

The yarn is a "sock" story, packed with tense conflicting drama and alive with stirring action. It definitely carries a promise of potential smash exploitation that automatically should create extraordinary interest.

THE MYSTERY MAN

Monogram

When a celebrated but penniless newspaper reporter pawns a pistol in order to make a big shot of himself with an equally penniless but lovely girl, the situation should lead to much excitement. In this case the pawned pistol not only gets its erstwhile owner into a peck of hectic trouble, but is the medium that leads to his winning the girl and also restoring himself in his elected calling.

The story is an original by Tate Finn, anonymous name for the author who relates an actual experience. The screen play is by John Krafft and Rollo Lloyd and the director is Ray McCarey.

Heading the cast are Robert Armstrong, seen in one or two recent Monogram pictures, and Maxine Doyle, featured in MGM's "Student Tour" and also with Joe E. Brown in "Six Day Bike Rider." Included among the supporting cast are Henry Kolker, Leroy Mason, who becomes Armstrong's unexpected nemesis, James Burke, Guy Usher, Jimmie Burtis, Monte Collins, Sam Lufkin, Otto Fries, Norman Houston and Dell Henderson.

While primarily the yarn of a newspaper man, this production departs radically from the stereotyped printer's ink type of entertainment. There being comparatively little of the usual hullabaloo heroizing the reporter, potential entertainment evolves from what happens to the leading figure while he is out of a job.

Cast names being adequate but not any too outstanding and the present title suggesting a much more melodramatic picture, the real motivating element, which is comedy, necessarily will demand a little closer attention on the part of those playing the picture. The pawned pistol being the key to practically all the action, it would appear that smart handling of such a situation would result in a desire to see the attraction.

'AIRING OWN TROGLODYTE NOTIONS'

—BEN HECHT AND CHARLES MAC ARTHUR

BLAME BLIND BUYING OF "MUSHROOM GENIUS"

To the Editor of the Herald:

Here is a copy of a letter we [Ben Hecht-Charles MacArthur, Inc.] have sent out to some of our admirers who have written us [in connection with the much-discussed "Crime Without Passion," of which Hecht and MacArthur were the author-producers.—Ed.]:

"Thanks for your friendly and enthusiastic comments on our first production, "Crime Without Passion."

"We have a notion, as newcomers to the movie production field, that one of the things most misunderstood and most taken for granted is the feeling among movie makers that the exhibitor is a godlike fellow full of inside information on just what the public wants. That there are many bright showmen among the country's exhibitors must go without argument, and that a goodly percentage of them are as wise and clever as we are is also a point gallantly yielded.

We have a profound conviction, however, that there is also a goodlier percentage of these cinema Barnums who are completely without any sense of showmanship, leadership, intelligence, or understanding of the movie business. These are the boys who hunger constantly for Great Names in the cast; who buy blindly the mushroom "geniuses" that the Hollywood ballyhoo converts into overnight drawing cards; who have no interest in entertainment as a commodity in itself; who fancy they are interpreting the "will of the people" when they are airing their own troglodyte notions about what's what in the movies; who substitute a semi-illiterate weisenheimer boss-complex for a knowledge of showmanship. These are the exhibitors who squawk when they go in the red slightly for showing something they call "talky and arty," but who forget that they've lost their largest wads backing the tried and true Star system foisted on them by Hollywood ballyhoo.

"We have a feeling that a little courage, a small degree of civilized feeling about entertainment, and a wee bit of independence toward the Star system would result in more business, excitement and amusement for the exhibitors than does the bandwagon burbling which distinguishes a large percentage of their ranks."

CRITICS CAN'T MAKE PUBLIC LIKE FILM

To the Editor of the Herald:

Some time ago in the "What the Picture Did for Me" section of the Herald, I gave Messrs. Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur's "Twentieth Century" a nice, well-deserved panning. I received several letters concerning my report, but not from the producers. The latest letter I have received is enclosed (printed immediately following this letter). I watched the Herald carefully, and did not read one good review on "Twentieth Century."

Inasmuch as all exhibitors were designated as nit-wits by the writers of "Twentieth Century" and "Crime Without Passion," I am going to agree with Mr. Adams, inasmuch as exhibitors have made this business what it is, and regardless of how smart the critics are, and how many stars they print over the production title, it will not make the public like the pictures.

I believe in "What the Picture Did for Me" section of the HERALD, and I wouldn't falsify a report for any reason. The patron is the best and only recognized critic of motion picture entertainment, because he pays his money to give his opinion, and word-of-mouth advertising has been recognized as the strongest medium known whether favorable or unfavorable.

Regardless of what Messrs. Hecht and MacArthur may think, the public will still be right, and I am not going to high-pressure my patrons into my theatre when I know their likes and dislikes.

My patrons believe what I tell them because I haven't handed them that age-old hooey, unless I knew that I had a good chance to face them when they came out of the theatre.

Until Hecht and MacArthur forget about Art, I am going to steer clear of their productions. The great mass of people appreciate art less than any other thing in the world, unless it is in the nude, and we can't use that.

I am sending along a report (see "What the Picture Did for Me"), inasmuch as I haven't sent in one lately.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas.

CALLS "20TH CENTURY" WINNER ON A REPEAT

Herewith the text of the letter mentioned by Mr. Edwards and written by Johnnie Thomason of Steubenville, Ohio, a city of 35,000:

"Twentieth Century" has just played here for the second time, and held up very, very, very good. Wonder what the Paramount theatre did on it when it came in May. The first day, they ran it on a single bill, and for the last three days they double billed it with "The House of Rothschild." "The House of Rothschild" had just played one week before.

Here is what I think about "Twentieth Century." I like it very, very good. Also "Lone Cowboy" was a very good western picture. The whole show ran about three hours and 10 minutes, with the first chapter of "The Vanishing Shadow."

"Twentieth Century" had just come back for the second time at the Rex, which is a second-run house, and played on a double bill with "Lone Cowboy" with Jackie Cooper and held up very fine, which is something for a second-run feature. The Rex theatre here does very, very, very good on second-run features. Wonder what the first-run theatres do. By the way, there are three first-run theatres and two second-run theatres in town. As I repeat again, "Twentieth Century" was a very, very good picture.

SMALL-TOWNER MUST LIVE WITH PATRONS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Re: the issue of "Crime Without Passion."

I was not one of the nit-wits that ran it, thanks to one of my kind neighbors that tipped me off to the reaction that it had in his house. Also I note the remarks that Mr. Zimbalist of St. Louis makes re the picture, intimating that Mr. Adams did not know how to put the picture over. His situation is, I think, that in a large town he does not have to live with the people who patronize his theatres. Mr. Adams and myself, along with a lot more small town exhibitors, do.

Also, for Mr. Zimbalist's information, Paramount did not get a first-run for this picture in the city that is adjacent to this town of mine, that I know. It was double billed second-run with a Rogers' picture to hold it up.

And further, I think that he will find that in some spots, and I know of one, Paramount did not run this picture in their own house.

It was sold second-run in that town and did not have its premier run in Paramount's house in that town.

Also I note that 425 newspapers gave "Berkeley Square" as one of the 10 best of the season. My patrons had another name for that one, too, as I know a lot more small town exhibitors had the same experience as I with the above picture. It was art, all right, but not box office, and it all resolves itself down that what will hit on Broadway is a flop in the small towns, in some pictures. We had an artistic picture in "Pursuit of Happiness" and one that I would have bet would not be liked, but the way that it was directed and the way the cast put it over, it was good entertainment. And the public liked it, although it had the disadvantage of being a costume picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Ind.

Legitimates May Be Taxed on Charity Shows

It was indicated last week that the internal revenue bureau at Washington plans to require the payment of the regular 10 per cent federal tax on gross receipts from theatres playing charitable or benefit performances, as a result of the examination of the books of several Broadway theatres by bureau investigators. The only cases where such receipts are exempt from tax is in the event the entire gross is turned over to the tax-exempt charity for which the performance is given. It is understood the League of New York theatres has held a special meeting to discuss the matter and plans a united defense in the event the government presses the matter, especially with reference to retroactivity of the ruling.

NAME leader in the news this week is Freddie Bartholomew, the boy who plays young David Copperfield in MGM's picture.

Not for some time has any personality impinged on the Hollywood scene with such force, and been accorded such unanimity of opinion as to acting ability.

Hollywood is not comparing Freddie with Jackie Coogan or Shirley Temple. Wise-acres and conservatives talk of him in the same breath with the best grownups the screen offers.

Not a lucky break, but by a gambling chance, was he selected to play David out of 10,000 candidates from all sections of the British Empire. Born in London, he'll be 11 in March. His aunt, Miss Millicent Bartholomew, reared him in Warminster-Wilshire, England. At 3 he appeared in amateur shows. He was so small he recited from a chair. Memorizing Shapespeare and Dickens at school was his forte, amazing teachers and pupils alike.

Last Spring, when David Selznick broadcast through the British Isles that he was looking for a boy to play "David Copperfield," Freddie wanted to be tested. His aunt demurred. When Freddie finally won her over, Mr. Selznick was embarking for America.

Persistent youngster, he importuned his aunt to take him to California. They radioed Producer David on the boat. He radioed back, "If you come to California, will give you every consideration, but trip must be made at your own expense with MGM incurring no obligation"—or words to that effect.

Without advising Mr. Selznick, Freddie and auntie embarked for America and Hollywood.

Meanwhile, none of the candidates had proved satisfactory. New York wired the producer asking when he would start shooting.

Then Freddie walked in.

Not a Star Introduced!

The preview, by the way, at Graumann's Chinese and sandwiched in between showings of "Kid Millions," introduced a new note into Hollywood previews.

It was held on a Saturday night, and had been well advertised by word-of-mouth. Stars from all studios attended, but none was introduced. Screen, society, commerce, culture and hoi polloi rubbed shoulders.

Will Rogers came with Wiley Post. Education was represented by Rufus Von Kleinschmidt, Dr. Robert Millikan and others. Judge Ben Lindsey, Mr. and Mrs. John Hay Whitney, Admiral Reeves from the Navy, attended. Irving Thalberg headed the producer phalanx, Louis B. Mayer the executives, Frank Lloyd the directors.

Olmstead in Columbia Post

Eddie Olmstead, press agent, exploiteer, co-author of the novel, "The Unsinkable Mrs. Jay," this week took over the front lines as publicity director of Columbia Studios.

Having held responsible posts in selling film via print with Paramount Publix and United Artists, Eddie is well equipped for the job at hand.

On the morning he arrived he received word from New York that a major studio had taken a filming option on his novel, running currently in syndicate form in newspapers. In the same afternoon, he adjusted the preview situation between studio and press.

Ten Pictures Start

Ten new pictures started this week. Nine were completed. With three new features each, MGM and Warner became the busiest lots. The other four films are equally distributed among Fox, Wanger Productions, Columbia and Futter Productions.

Fox completed three, MGM two and Majestic, Warner, Radio and Paramount one each.

First of the MGM starting trio was "Vampires of Prague," the cast for which includes Lionel Barrymore, Elizabeth Allen, Jean Hersholt, Bela Lugosi, Donald Meek, Jessie Ralph and Lionel Atwill. The second MGM feature, "The Casino Murder Case," will present Paul Lukas, Rosalind Russell, Eric Blore, Alison Skipworth and Louise Fazenda. Third is "Public Enemy Number 2," with Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Nat Pendleton, Paul Harvey, Henry Stephens, Claude Gillingwater, Edward Nugent and Dorothy Libaire.

Among the three at Warner, "Wanderlust" is another in the series co-starring Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon. Support includes Robert McWade, John Arledge, Tom Brown, Betty Jean Hainey and Nan Grey. "Goose and Gander" again teams Kay Francis and George Brent, who just completed "Living on Velvet." Featured players are Genevieve Tobin, Ralph Forbes, Claire Dodd, John Eldredge and Helen Lowell. In the newly started "Travelling Saleslady," Joan Blondell comes back to the screen with Glenda Farrell and a group which includes William Gargan, Hugh Herbert, Ruth Donnelly and Grant Mitchell.

At Fox the Edmund Lowe-Victor McLaglen association is continued in "Recipe for Murder." Others are Jane Lang, Rosemary Ames, Mary Carlisle and William Janney.

The second Wanger production for Paramount release is "Private Worlds." The extensive cast is headed by Claudette Colbert, Joel McCrea, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Francis Drake, Steffi Duna and Guinn Williams. With Nancy Carroll and George Murphy starred, Columbia began work on "I'll Love You Always."

"Hong Kong Nights," a Futter production, has Tom Keene, Wera Engels, Warren Hymer, Cornelius Keefe and Titsu Komai.

Three Fox Stars in Three Films

Fox presents its three big stars in its completed group. Shirley Temple is the big name in "The Little Colonel" with supporting cast including Lionel Barrymore, Evelyn Venable, John Lodge, Sidney Blackmer, Alden Chase, William Burress, David O'Brien, Hattie McDaniel, Geneva Williams, Avonne Jackson, Myanza Potts, Frank Darien and Bill Robinson. "Life Begins at 40" has Will Rogers, with Richard Cromwell, George Barbier, Rochelle Hudson, Jane Darwell, Slim Summerville, Sterling Holloway, Thomas Beck, Roger Imhof, Charles Sellon, John Bradford and Ruth Gillette. Janet Gaynor is the star of "One More Spring," a Lasky production which presents Warner Baxter, Walter King, Jane Darwell, Roger Imhof, Grant Mitchell, Rosemary Ames, John Qualen, Nick Foran, Astrid Allwyn and Stepin Fetchit.

In the completed MGM pair an unusual list of name values also is paraded. In "Vanersa" will be seen Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes, Otto Kruger, May Robson, Donald Crisp, Lewis Stone, Eileen Pringle, Lawrence Grant, Crauford Kent, Henry Stephenson, Dorothy Granger, Lionel Belmore, Violet Kemble-Cooper, Jessie Ralph and Tempe Piggott. The second finished feature, "West Point of the Air," will present Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Lewis Stone, James Gleason and Maureen O'Sullivan in the principal roles.

Majestic Pictures completed "Mutiny Ahead," an adventure sea story featuring Neal Hamilton, Kathleen Burke, Leon Ames and Reginald Barlow.

"Golddiggers of 1935," a spectacular musical extravaganza, was transferred to the cutting rooms at Warner. In it are Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart, Adolphe Menjou, Alice Brady, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorne, Al Shean, Grant Mitchell and Dorothy Dare plus scores of chorus girls.

Radio's contribution to the finished product list is "Murder on a Honeymoon," a feature for Edna May Oliver and James Gleason. Support includes Chick Chandler, George Meeker, Dorothy Libaire, Spencer Charters, DeWitt Jennings and Arthur Hoyt.

Winding up the list of completed features, Paramount checked in with "Caprice Espagnol." Marlene Dietrich is starred in a cast including Cesar Romero, Lionel Atwell, E. E. Horton, Alison Skipworth, Morgan Wallace, Don Alvarado, Tempe Pigott, Lawrence Grant, Luisa Espinal, Edwin Maxwell and Hank Mann.

COMMENTS from showmen from all over the country tell of the mounting enthusiasm over the new screen feature THE MARCH OF TIME. Canny showmen recognize in this unique presentation with its great radio and magazine following, a powerful aid for a better 1935 box office.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 256.—(A) Just what is the effect on light demand of an increase in the size of the picture? (B) Name the various ways in which abnormal increase in picture size decreases the beauty of the screen image. (C) Name other evil effects of abnormal picture size. Bluebook School Question No. 251 *was: (A) How may projectionists overcome the evil of keystone effect to the extent of making the sides of the screen image parallel? (B) In just what way is keystone effect accompanied by tendency to cause out-of-focus effect? (C) What would you try out in an effort to overcome out-of-focus effect due to projection angle? Oberleigh and J. Lansing; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; S. C. Hollenbeck; N. K. Hendries and B. L. Jackson.

Section A is answered by Keith Arrington as follows: "Substitute for the regular projector aperture a special, small-sized one, or fill in the regular aperture sides with hard solder. Before doing this, however, project the white light to the screen, and from the lower end of the upper corner curves, suspend lines having a light weight attached to their lower ends. Having the parallel side lines thus established, place a metal mask over the mirror or converging condenser lens, the same having in its center an opening large enough to let through sufficient light to enable watching the effect of each file stroke, but not enough to be uncomfortable to the hands while working, and carefully file the aperature edges until the sides of the light on the screen exactly reach the aforesaid lines."

R. and K. Wells say, "The sides of the screen image may be made parallel by (a) tilting the screen, (b) securing a special under-sized aperture and filing the sides thereof, or by lowering the projection room."

(B) H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger answer thus: "The screen surface is presumed to be at the same distance from the lens at all points, except that naturally it is further from the corners or edges of the screen to the lens than it is from the screen center. That is why the screen field really cannot be 'flat,' but except in the case of short focal length lenses, where the effect is exaggerated, a lens is expected to have sufficient depth of focus to give fairly sharp focus all over the screen.

"The screen is one of the conjugate foci points of the projection lens, which means the exact point at which the lens will be able to give sharp focus, but if there be projection angle (keystone effect), then of course it is quite impossible that the top and bottom of a screen can both be the same distance from the lens, hence the screen image can only be in the sharpest possible focus at whatever point in the screen's vertical height represents the conjugate foci point of the lens. Of course, if the projection angle be enough so that the difference in distance is too great, and the depth of focus of the lens be unable to take care of the matter sufficiently well for the loss of focus to be invisible to the eye, then there will be a visible effect at either the top or bottom of the screen, or at both if the effect at each be decreased by dividing it between top and bottom."

(C) D. L. Sinklow says: "Assuming the projection angle to be downward, I would so tilt the screen that it would be more nearly square with the lens, which may to some extent be done without bad effect, provided the settings or surroundings of the screen be such as will hide the angle so far as has to do with the screen's outlines.

"In some cases it might also be advisable to try stopping down the projection lens to some extent by means of a sheet metal ring, painted black and placed against the rear element of the lens."

(D) D. Danielson says, "I would approve as maximum an angle that would not increase the screen image vertical measurement by more than five per cent of its normal undistorted height. My recommendation would, however, be for a much less angle."

R. J. Arntson says, "I would try to impress the exhibitor with the fact that the less the projection angle is the better will be the general result. I would tell him that an angle of 12 degrees would be the limit beyond which it would be unwise to go."

L. Cimikoski says, "Were a new theatre being designed and my advice requested concerning the maximum projection angle, my answer would be none. I fully realize the maximum projection angle approved by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is 12 degrees, but the question presumes a theatre being planned and I would do my best to sell the exhibitor the idea that an undistorted and therefore natural picture cannot be projected at any angle, even though it be but four degrees."

Your main idea is correct, brother, but it is best not to be extreme. As a matter of fact, at 4 degrees projection angle the eye could hardly discern even the out-of-parallel effect of the side lines, except by very critical examination, therefore no real harm would be done. I believe no serious harm results up to ten degrees, though like yourself, I hold flat projection to be very desirable. However, I would enter no protest against anything below, say, eight degrees, and in such a case as is presented I think I would advise against anything in excess of 10 degrees, with the suggestion that every effort be made to keep it below that.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Alamo, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

A Holiday season without the ground covered with snow doesn't seem to us like the Holidays. Down here in the Rio Grande valley we went in our shirt sleeves and one fellow went around barefooted and bareheaded and there wasn't any snow within 500 miles of us.

The Season didn't pass, however, without bringing us a lot of satisfaction and a lot of pleasure, for we must have received a tubful of greetings from friends all over the country, from Pennsylvania to Oregon, from North Dakota to Texas, all wishing us the best of the New Year and our chief regret is our inability to answer these greetings direct and not in this fashion, but we want these friends to all know that their greetings were appreciated and we return the sentiment in this acknowledgment.

Among those writing us were Mae Quilliams of Benton Harbor, Michigan; F. K. Haskell of Portland, Oregon; Lou Clayborn, Lansing, Michigan; Ray and Mayme Musselman of Lincoln, Kansas; G. L. Scott of Spokane, Washington; Win Armstrong of Niles, Michigan, and "Sim and Hazel" of Lamar, Missouri.

But speaking of Sim and Hazel reminds of our visit with them last summer. They were then operating the Lamar Plaza theatre and also had another theatre under construction, which we trust they have finished, and if it is, Missouri has another theatre she can be proud of.

When we were there Sim wanted us to go down on a lake to his cabin in the Ozark hills and fish for a week but we couldn't do it. Say Ezra, we'll betcha we could have a lot of fun down there with Sim; he impressed us as a regular guy, and we had dinner with him and Hazel too.

The Celery He Didn't Get

Then we received a letter from our daughter up at Neligh and she told us that Mr. and Mrs. Harry Huffman of Denver had sent us several bunches of Pascal celery but she was afraid to forward it for fear it would wilt and be spoiled, so they ate it. Doggone the luck anyhow, that's what a feller gets for having a daughter and son-in-law who like celery. She tells us that Pascal celery Harry sent us was the finest she ever ate, which din't help our appetite a particle, but thanks Harry, your gift is none the less appreciated just the same.

But maybe you don't know who Harry Huffman is. If you don't you are not very well acquainted with Colorado. Harry operates all the big downtown theatres in Denver. He commenced by operating a theatre on the east side but he gradually extended his efforts until now he is the manager of about all the first-run houses downtown, and Denver has a lot of them.

We are not giving Harry alone the credit for all of his success, for it is our candid opinion that Mrs. Huffman has been responsible for a large measure of it. Not only that but we will betcha that Mrs Huffman selected that celery for she is undoubtedly an authority on celery. Thanks to both of you good friends for remembering us as you did. May this year bring to you much of happiness and prosperity.

What the Valley Really Is

You have no doubt heard a whole lot about the Rio Grande valley. Some of you have seen it but many have not, which causes us to think that you would be more interested in knowing just what it is like than to read so much picture stuff. Up north a valley is known as a low strip of land lying between two ranges of hills or mountains. Down here what is known as the Rio Grande valley is a level plain at least 150 miles north and south and we don't know how far east and west but probably from Brownsville on the east to as far west as you would care to go without taking the family along. What is known as "The Valley" is probably the strip lying adjacent to the Rio Grande river and which is being cultivated to grape fruit, oranges, lemons, tangarines and various garden varieties of vegetables.

The people down here will tell you this is a wonderful country, and it is, but like California and other "wonderful countries" it has its drawbacks. They grow wonderful fruit. Yes indeed, you can bank on that. They grow wonderful vegetables. Sure they do, and they grow right in the winter season too, but that isn't all there is to it.

Just a Little Tip

Directly north of here, and about 25 miles away, is what is known as the King ranch. We drove a half of a day on a cement highway to get through this ranch. It is said to be larger than the state of Rhode Island with Boston thrown in and reminds us very much of Cherry country, Nebraska, except that there are no sand hills and it doesn't have Harold Dunn's theatre at Valentine, but this ranch is covered with cactus, greasewood and other small brush, and has a lot of deer and wild hogs, and we want to give you a tip.

When you are down here and go deer hunting, look out for the wild hogs and don't monkey around them, especially when they have pigs. They are bad medicine and they won't care whether you are a Republican or a Democrat if you monkey with their pigs. It is always best to have a tree located handy. There are times when trees look awfully good. Then don't sleep on the ground, either, or there might be a tarantula, centipede, scorpion or rattlesnake trying to get a line on your political affiliations. We don't like these doggone bugs, they are too inquisitive.

From Mission on the west to Brownsville on the east we would guess to be about 100 miles. Between these two towns are McAllen, Pharr, San Juan, Alamo, Donna, Weslaco, Mercedes, La Feria, Harlingen and San Benito. A cement highway runs from Mission to Brownsville and the Missouri Pacific railroad runs along this highway for most of the distance, and the various fruit and other stands along this cement highway give the impression of one continuous city, in fact you run out of one right into the other.

Here one can see grape fruit and orange trees loaded with fruit in every direction as far as the eye can reach, and then a whole lot farther. It looks like an awfully prosperous country, at least it would be if they could get their fruit up to Nebraska and other northern points without the transportation and packing companies getting all there is in it.

While we are not a geologist, our guess is that at one time this entire valley was covered by the Gulf of Mexico. This is indicated by the sea shells found in the fields and the salt water that is usually found at a shallow depth, and our guess is also that this land is easily water-logged and ruined by the salt water below unless it has proper drainage to carry it off, but of course we are only a horse doctor and don't know much about it, but as we remarked before, this is a delightful country to spend a winter in. Then there's another thing, as Andy Gump said to Minn. Today we had a caller. E. R. Geery of the Uptown theatre at Iola, Kansas, dropped in to meet us and we had a delightful visit with him. He says that business had but one way to go, it couldn't get worse, and it is somewhat better but not enough to write home about. Thanks, Mr. Geery for calling, we were glad to meet you. Hope to see you in Iola sometime.

If there is any more space to be filled, we'll leave it to the desk, because Doc says we have a blood pressure of 230, and that's too high.

BLACK MOON: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—The kind that a small town needs more of, along with westerns. Holt in a fast action-crammed with excitement picture for all ages. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 21.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

BLIND DATE: Ann Sothern, Paul Kelly—Excellent program picture, good box office draw for me. Got a little money. Title misleading. Played December 13.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—Cold, snow and slippery. Our attendance was naturally hit, but those present were quite unanimous in stating that this is the best show they have seen Jack Holt in in a long time. Played December 29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

END OF THE TRAIL, THE: Tim McCoy, Luana Walters—Here is a good western with Indians and Tim. He can get by in a cowboy hat and with a horse to ride. Kids eat this up and like it. Played December 28-29.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—Usual Jones western; business off a little.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Winnie Lightner, Mona Barrie—A good program picture suitable for children and could be used for a Boy Scout tieup. Patrons commented favorably as to the entertainment built into this feature. Played January 3.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard—Another Columbia click. Not quite as good as "Lady for a Day," but nevertheless fine entertainment. Pleased our patrons, but did not do the business it deserved due to bad weather. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 30-31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—Well liked and drew good business. Patrons commented very favorably on the acting of May Robson. Lots of comedy and clever dialogue. Run this one and get some business that won't go home with a bad taste in their mouth. Played December 24-25.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—A splendid picture. Story interesting and acting by whole cast fine. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LADY IS WILLING, THE: Leslie Howard, Binnie Barnes—This would have been a good picture if the dialect was so people could understand it. Our patrons said they would like to hear the story in United States language. These broad foreign languages are not appreciated in this town, and every picture does not satisfy that is made that way, here.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy—We had fair attendance and the feature pleased at least 99 per cent. We think Tim McCoy is better in this type of show than in the typical western. Played January 5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—Not too good. Might fill the bill where you need some action.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Usual satisfaction which Buck Jones gives. Some of our patrons think the Jones shows would be helped materially by the addition of a little more comedy. The mixed audiences cry for some comedy at these Saturday night performances. Business fair. Played December 15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MEN OF THE NIGHT: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen—Short snappy picture of a hard-boiled detective who always gets his man. Plenty of action with some fair comedy spots. Should satisfy a Saturday night thrill-seeking audience. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

MEN OF THE NIGHT: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen—A very pleasing program picture. Just rambles right along. No dragging, which pleases the fans. Pleased all.—L. G. Tewkesbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—Swell picture for patrons who can appreciate it. Grace Moore can sing, but I have too many patrons who don't appreciate talent. The comments of those who were present praised the picture highly and many came back to see it, but business was very poor. Not a small town picture is my opinion. Played December 5-6-7.—Mayme P. Susselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern, Arline Judge, Patsy Kelly—This started out as a clever little comedy, but it got lost at the end.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SQUARE SHOOTER: Tim McCoy—Played this western brand new and will say that as usual Tim McCoy gives a good show. Everybody pleased.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

THAT'S GRATITUDE: Frank Craven, Mary Carlisle—Another Broadway star (I hear) who can be skipped. Poor, slow moving picture, with very little motive. Played December 28-29.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

WESTERN CODE, THE: Tim McCoy, Nora Lane—Good western. Little old, but that don't hurt them. Played December 14-15.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE LIES: Victor Jory, Fay Wray, Walter Connolly—A fair picture, but nothing unusual. Story of a newspaper man with a code of headlines at any cost. Some action and suspense with Jory as hero. Connolly is good as usual, Wray is mediocre. O. K. for mid-week or double feature. Irene Hervey in minor role seems mighty fine to me. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Dec. 21-22.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

Eagle

EXPOSED: William Collier, Jr., Barbara Kent—This is by far the worst picture I have seen since the advent of sound. Everything about the production screams "quickie," as the settings are unusually cheap, the story impossible, and the acting below average. A very, very poor picture.—J. W. Noah. New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Not the comedy that "Big Hearted Herbert" was, but will probably please. More comedy and not so much satire as the book. Played December 25.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—It paid expenses on a Saturday date and seemed to satisfy the customers.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien, Ross Alexander—Saw this in Kansas City and they were doing a big business. Hope it does some here. This boy Powell is quite the comedian in this clever story of army life and the scenes at West Point are well worth the time it took to film them. Boy, the old patriotism sure oozes out when these boys strut their stuff. I believe that this will do business and satisfy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—Better than expected. Pleased all who saw it. Nothing big but a good program.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—A lot better than most of the so-called specials. Played this on Sunday and it pleased 95 per cent. People are still talking about it. Average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 23.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak, Ross Alexander—Business was fair and this picture didn't get any knocks and I enjoyed it. Pretty much true to life and worth running. Played December 28-29.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Was out of town and did not see this picture personally. However my house staff comment was very good and gross indicated the customers also liked it. Played December 9-10.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—As entertaining a picture as we have run here in a long time. Plenty of suspense, and a few good laughts.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—One swell piece of high class entertainment. Josephine Hutchinson not beautiful, but possesses a million dollar personality. Don't hang back on pushing this one. It will please 100 per cent. It's not colossal, but down-to-earth entertainment. Just what they want. Boy, what a show. Why don't they make more like it? Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 28-30.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—One of the most satisfying pictures we have ever played. Patrons were loud in their praise of this one, and that means something. Outstanding entertainment. You'll be glad you played this picture. Played December 20-21.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson, Frank McHugh, Allen Jenkins—Very good picture, not so much music but whenever Dick sings my patrons just listen. He's a favorite here and is getting to be a good little actor. Business was good enough, better than average program and the picture showed a profit. Then there is some satisfaction in having patrons satisfied and this picture will do that. Played December 12-13-14.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee, Lyle Talbot, Allen Jenkins—Pretty rough—cheating, chiselling, blackmail and booze. But it's funny, and there were no complaints from the crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—Pat O'Brien can out-talk Lee Tracy any day and does it in a big way in this one. Eentertainment value is sufficient for week-end play and pleased our patrons fairly well. Bolstered well with good shorts, this went over O. K. considering the pre-holiday slump. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 21-22.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—Fair program picture with a lot of talk. Nothing big, but will plase the majority.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—Nice little show with a plot that has been used often, but it does have a different ending. Played December 16-17.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—Not much of a picture. Did not please generally.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegit, Okla. Small town patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—A good Sunday and Monday picture. Pleased the mature patron. We recommend this one to anyone. Played January

6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—This is a well made mystery melodrama. I played it with a cowboy act on a tough midweek spot, and it gave satisfaction. —Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—This production is the sort that manages to entertain but makes your patrons, after leaving the theatre, wish they had spent their money for a few good magazines that would have provided entertainment for several days.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—A dandy program picture that pleased a large holiday crowd. Has a different twist, and will please all types. Lyle Talbot is fast becoming one of the screen's best leading men. Good luck, Lyle. Played December 24.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Good airplane story to take the place of your western on Saturday. Plenty of action to make a pleasing and entertaining picture. Played December 17-18.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown, Maxine Doyle—This is a wow. One of the best this star has ever made. Clean and funny and entertaining. Gave the best satisfaction of any of Brown's pictures this year. Played December 30-31.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—Entertaining story of radioland with Pat O'Brien as the press agent almost stealing the show. Good for any dates. Played December 22.—J. Glenn Campbell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise —Just a good program picture. Did not click at the box office. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 28-29.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—This would have been a good story with most any known cast. I showed a bunch of kids Lloyd's picture and they didn't know who he was. George Barbier and Una Merkel are plenty capable, and should be used often. Just barely made a profit on this one, and would personally say that Lloyd is through, or should be. Running time, 100 minutes. Played October 26-27.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Good picture, good story, good for all ages. Through no fault of picture didn't draw at box office, although billed heavy. Played December 3-4.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretto Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Charles Boyer—Good music in this one about the gypsies.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—I gave this a tough break on Christmas Eve, but it held up fairly well and pleased. It is more serious and a more mature type of story than Gaynor usually works in.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Everybody satisfied with this offering. Maybe not as good as some of the Chan pictures, but good enough to entertain and that's what you show them for. Oh, the profit? It did a nice business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Neb. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Changed this from a Friday-Saturday to a Monday-Tuesday and did it help business. Some of the most beautiful settings and scenery that you'll ever see in any picture. Run it, give your patrons a treat in action and scenery. It will do plenty of business on any night.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster —This one will please about 50 per cent, possibly. Sure can't recommend this picture. Personally thought it N.G. It must take at least two minutes to find a title like "Elinor Norton." Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: The manager thought it was O. K. for this entertainment, but the ladies steered clear of this one. We would suggest that you tie up with the American Legion or Veterans of Foreign Wars. No comedy, just grim facts put together in fine shape. Played December 21.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: Strictly history. All newsreel shots. Should be tied up with your schools.

INGRAM ASKS FAIR REPORTS ON FILMS

Fair, unprejudiced reporting on pictures is recommended by E. F. Ingram of the Ashland theatre at Ashland, Alabama, in resuming his contributing to "What the Picture Did for Me". All readers of the department will remember the straightforward comment of this showman which appeared regularly in earlier issues and will welcome his return. He writes as follows:

"I am enclosing my first reports in over three years but expect to report on all pictures played in the future.

"I will report on pictures according to their merits and not pan any picture simply because of some grudge I may have against the producer, as some exhibitors are doing. Let's be fair with everybody."

Ingram's reports appear in the Department this week. Read them.

Please average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patrongae.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Good old Will! I played this on the toughest spot in the year, just before Christmas, and it drew well and pleased 100 per cent.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronagqe.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—This is a familiar story, and it is hard to get anything novel or original in a flying story, but the crowd seemed to take it and like it.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan, Wynne Gibson, Dorothy Burgess—A good picture with poor title. Do not depend on the title of this picture to draw them in. A well rounded story with good supporting cast. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 13-14-15.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Osceda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Good plot but too slow unfolding.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Nine reels of film which with or without Cohan should be skipped. George may have been a "foremoster," but he gives all my customers the jitters with his jerky dialog, etc. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Well, they came to see Bill, and how! Did the most business that I ever did on a Rogers picture and they enjoyed it. Henry B. Walthall sure steals a lot of the picture, but Bill never was a hog. He used one to steal one picture but he let the other boys get their share of the glory in this one. Don't be afraid of this picture. Just be ready for the gang that's sure to come.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—A good clean picture. Some excellent shots of the power house and the Canal Zone. A program picture which should satisfy your regular fans. Average business. Played December 20-21-22.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Ketti Gallian, Spencer Tracy—No doubt about it, this is a very good picture, but what a title. Means absolutely nothing to the public. What beats me is why, after good story, direction, cast, etc., they give it a handle like that, or, don't the producer know a poor title will ruin a good picture. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 22-25.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery, June Lang—The silliest musical operetta, right from the nuthouse, ever made. First night to average business. Second and third nights an absolute flop. John Boles is too good an actor to put in such a nutty picture as this. If you are forced to play it, you will be money ahead by closing your theatre. Just a big waste of time, money and film. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 16-17-18.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: John Boles, Gloria Swanson —Perhaps we are asking for a slap on the wrist from Fox, but this seems a lot of talent and money wasted. Just a little too something for us hog callers. Played December 20-21.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles —This one gave me one big pain. It is positively silly. Put it on your worst night, or don't put it at all, or put it in the waste basket. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 5-7.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles —Did just ordinary business on this one. A good musical. Our second night's business showed that it really had very little drawing power for us. Played January 1-2.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery, June Lang—My patrons disappointed with this picturization of the stage play. Certainly does not deserve to be sold as a "Special," and my own humble opinion is that it isn't even a good programmer. From remarks I heard, and was told, Gloria Swansan was a distinct flop. This picture has a foreign locale and is too much "goody goody!" for "the great unwashed."—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. "Sophisticated" small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery, June Lang—I don't want to get in any argument relative to the merit of any picture but I will say that one of my patrons stopped me on the street to tell me how bad this one was. Use your elimination privilege on this picture. Played January 2-3.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theare, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper—Just a kid's picture that did not gross film rental. This may have been a special for Fox, but for me was way below average. Played December 6-7.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl—I couldn't find anything wrong with the picture except attendance. Had a tent show for opposition, and I judge that was the trouble. Good picture that was a flop at the B. O. Played November 9-10.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Nice little picture though I believe they would do better in an American setting. Believe that Ayres is a better teammate than Farrell. Practically a profit guaranteed in this one. Running time, 90 minutes. Played November 23-24.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: James Dunn, Alice Faye—Nothing to rave about but will please the patrons. Mitchell and Durant furnish the laughs. The boys are good. Played December 23-24.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Somebody tried to make a musical that hadn't had enough experience. Just another chance to grind something through the old projectors. It wouldn't be missed, if you didn't show it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Here is a picture you will be proud of—you won't have to hide when your patrons come out of your theatre. The swellest picture in many moons. Play it and boost it to the sky. It's worth it and your patrons agree with you. Only average business, due to a severe snow storm which hit here on the regular play dates. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 9-10-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—Comments on this have varied, though we couldn't find anything wrong with it. It was a little long, but it was well received, and comments were many, and all favorable. The program built up the second night, and we ended the run with a nice profit. So—O. K. Played November 2-3.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Franchot Tone, Madeleine Carroll—Excellent story, but no box office draw. Patrons walked out saying it was too classy to be good entertainment. Six dollars first matiness more than expected all day. Good Sunday picture. Played December 12.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

Goldsmith

CARNIVAL LADY: Boots Mallory, Allen Vincent—This is a passably entertaining independentt production.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Majestic

MORNING AFTER, THE: Ben Lyon, Sally Eilers--Although my patrons pass up English made pictures, this is an excellent picture, good sound and photography. I just couldn't convince 'em of its merits. Running time, 59 minutes. Played December 19.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

UNKNOWN BLONDE: Edward Arnold, John Miljan, Barbara Barondess, Dorothy Revier—Too suggestive for Sunday, but good for adults any time. Played very late but had good print and good audience comment. Played December 28.—Carnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

Mascot

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen—I paid too much for this, but that seemed to be the only complaint. The patrons liked it.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Stuart Erwin, Leo Carrillo, Betty Furness, Ted Healy—Clean, entertaining "collegiate" picture with plenty of comedy and enough football to make it O. K. for "fans." My patrons told me they liked this picture and that's all I want to know. O. K. for week-end.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. "Sophisticated" small town patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Norma Shearer, Fredric March—This production is in every way an artistic triumph that will add prestige to your theatre and give your more discriminating patronage genuine entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CHAINED: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford—Very good picture and drew a good crowd even if roads and weather were exceptionally bad. Played January 1-2.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farm and small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A splendid picture you will be proud to present. The courtroom scene in the last two reels I personally believe is one of the best, since gangdom has left the pictures. Average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 25-26-27.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombart, Chester Morris—A family picture. A dramatic Saturday Evening Post story, with good entertainment. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 23-24.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombart, Chester Morris, Zasu Pitts, Leo Carrillo, Nat Pendleton—Patrons pleased with this picture. It has plenty of comedy and entertainment, as well as enough action to run on the week-end. Personal opinion O. K., especially for week-end.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. "Sophisticated" small town patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Very good for rural communities. My patrons get a big kick out of the city hick's ideas and methods of farm life and chores. Drew a fair to good crowd in bad roads and weather. In advertising this we stressed the idea of the city hick trying to be a farmer, milking cows, feeding chicks, etc. Played January 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farm and small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald. Maurice Chevalier—A fine picture and will please all if they can be induced to see it. Snappy comedy, grand music and that director of director, Lubitsch. My idea of a swell show if MGM cares to know. Played December 27-28.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall—A story unworthy of the splendid cast, but finely acted. Comments from our patrons were generally to the good and it pulled to a much better than average business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 25-27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Robert Young, Madge Evans, Otto Kruger, Ted Healy—This program picture managed to satisfy on a double feature program, but it is far below MGM's standard. There is very little story but a great deal of drinking, as most of the action takes place in a bar. I consider it poor.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth—"Student Tour" got off on a detour after the first reel and never did find the main highway again. Good idea that failed to click in a consistant manner. Some good music and dance numbers, but the laughs were few and far between. Pulled fair business, but not too pleasing to our patrons. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 28-29.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Entertaining to young and old. The producers have given exacting attention to detail which greatly enhances the entertaining qualities of the film.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideals Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Monogram

FLIRTING WITH DANGER: Robert Armstrong, William Cagney, Edgar Kennedy, Marion Burns, Maria Alba—This is a very funny picture and not smutty. Moves fast, interesting story, and a very good program picture. Better than the average nowadays. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—All okay. Sure went after the school folks and did we have them yelling their enjoyment of this clever little college story. Believe they had an extra kick out of it because it was a track meet story and with the boys parading in shorts, while out of doors was a foot of snow and plenty, plenty cold breezes blowing when they left the theatre, but it was another pleasant evening spent by all who came, and we had them out. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26.—C. Rork, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

LAWLESS FRONTIER: John Wayne, Sheila Terry—The western fans enjoyed this one. Lots of action, thrills, and romance woven into an evening's entertainment. It appears that the western pictures are regaining some of their old-time vigor and punch as in the old days. Running time, 6 reels. Played Dec. 20-21-22.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RIDERS OF DESTINY: John Wayne, Cecelia Parker—An exceptionally good western.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUCCESSFUL FAILURE, A: William Collier, Sr., Lucille Gleason—A very nice picture for the family trade. The story of just ordinary folks that is entertaining. Suits us better than high class society stuff. Played Jan. 1.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Paramount

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—Excellent entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, Zasu Pitts, W. C. Fields, Evelyn Venable—Wonderful picture. This picture seemed to suit the general run of patron just about the same as a Will Rogers production. Little above average business. Played Dec. 13-14.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy, Judith Allen—I certainly didn't take an old-fashioned profit on this one. Fields' juggling act was the "hi spot" of the film and I would call it another picture that prevented a dark house for two nights. Played Nov. 7-8.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SHE LOVES ME NOT: Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins, Kitty Carlisle, George Barbier—Good entertainment. Did not draw as well as we expected. But a real picture nevertheless. Thought the work of Curly was great.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Ben Bernie, Jack Oakie, Dorothy Dell—For a program picture that does not attempt to be pretentious, this is good entertainment. It pleased our patronage and I enjoyed it too.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Some of the ladies liked it but the men-folks didn't seem to care much either way. Played Dec. 19-20.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—Too much cannot be said for this picture. It is what might be called a perfect family picture. Clean and wholesome and entertaining from start to finish. Anne Shirley is certainly good and I predict a bright future for her. Those who saw this picture praised it to the skies. What more could we want? Played Dec. 25-26.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Frank Morgan, Genevieve Tobin—I used this on a week-end in a spot where I usually show westerns, advanced the admission price and got it. It is quite pleasing and serves as a better than average picture.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Genevieve Tobin, Frank Morgan—I took my biggest loss of the season on this one. However, we have made a profit on worse program pictures than this one. However, I can't say much for a picture that don't get the money. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 13.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—This is a 50-50 picture; half the audience went to sleep and the other half walked out. They started out with a good idea on this, but it ran aground early in the story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS CORNER: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce, Conrad Nagel—This is the only picture from RKO, in my opinion, that there wasn't any excuse for making. It is all talk, and that will kill any picture. No one likes a lot of talking unless they are the ones doing the talking. I put Pretty Boy Floyd in on the second day of the run, and saved my run. Played Nov. 16-17.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Frances Dee, Billie Burke, Bruce Cabot—The crowd was all set to be shocked at this one, and it does have some daring scenes, but they are handled without offense. Frances Dee is a very charming little girl.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Aherne, Paul Lukas—This is probably a good picture for some localities, but I'll admit I can't imagine where. Will not please small town audiences, and would advise you to exchange it for something else if you can do so.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Robers—Very good picture which should do business in anyone's theatre regardless of date or location. We did not do as much as we expected, however. Played it extended time, which was probably the reason. Played Dec. 2-3-4.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Plenty of credit should be given to the producers for the very excellence of this picture. First of all it is pleasing from start to finish, and should do wonderful business wherever shown. It comes under the category of the best picture ever made.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—Did good business on this one. Not as much as I expected but I had a profit left and that's something. A very good musical with some clever ensembles, both singing and dancing. Run it and advertise it. It'll do business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Nice little program picture that pleased and drew a nice business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Oct. 24-25.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Well, Eddie Quillan, you have caused me to report on a picture for the first time in over three years, but I liked this picture so much I am glad to say a good word for it. Our patrons were certainly pleased. Personally I consider Eddie one of the screen's best and would certainly like to see him get some big roles. His brand of comedy is outstanding. Good luck to you, Eddie. Played Dec. 31, 1934.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Fair football story that will get by on Family Night or double bill.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—A strong emotional drama without much comedy relief. Did a slim Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—A very fine, entertaining picture. Richard Dix always makes good in any picture. This story very interesting and a good cast and clean. Satisfied all we got to see it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, "Spanky" McFarland, Noah Beery—My patrons enjoyed this comedy and it drew fair business on a weekend date. There is a lot of fun mixed in the unreeling of this feature, and will make a dandy show for your family night. Played Dec. 14-15.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—The cleanest kind of fun and what I mean is fun. Our crowd just enjoyed every minute of it and plenty of them said the best one yet from this team. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Dec. 30-31.—C. Rork, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, "Spanky" McFarland, Noah Beery—The best picture these stars have made for past year. Clean, and Spanky was the making of the picture. Did not do the business the picture deserved to do, as the pictures of this team in the past year have not given satisfaction and they have lost their drawing power. But this one satisfied all. Played Jan. 1-2.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—I warn you you will not have to dust off the S.R.O. sign with this one. However it is a most excellent picture, just one of those real well done things that fails to do any business. Box office just average four days. The first real assignment Joel McCrea ever had and he eats it up. That boy walks through this one in a wonderful way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins—A very clever picture, good cast and seemed to please. Did a fair Saturday's business on it. Played Jan. 4-5.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny—We can't get them to like Miriam Hopkins, but they do like McCrea and Fay Wray, and they liked the picture. It was well done and we had no kick to offer. Took a profit, and business built up the second night. Played Oct. 19-20.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett, William Farnum—Not a big special, but an interesting picture that held the interest of our patrons, especially the finish. Hokum? Yes! But how they fell for it. My patrons had never seen the new Streamlined Train and that was a treat, besides they were taken for a ride on it. Play it and it will do plenty of business on your family nights. Played Dec. 31.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUCCESS AT ANY PRICE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Colleen Moore, Genevieve Tobin—No comments either way on this; not much business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Very fair show. Different from their former productions. Our business was hit by low temperatures and snow. Played Dec. 8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold, Shirley Grey—Was agreeably surprised at this one; it was a nice program picture. We couldn't get them in, but it was a good picture and if we could have sold them on the unknowns in the picture they would have liked it. Those that came liked it. Running time, 70 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—A good picture from a Zane Grey story, and a relief to see one without Randolph Scott, who is used by Paramount in all their Zane Grey westerns. They told us they liked this one, which is unusual for a Zane Grey western in this town. Played Dec. 28-29.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

WHERE SINNERS MEET: Diana Wynyard, Clive Brook, Billie Burke—I thought this was a clever comedy, but no one seemed to agree with me. The dialogue is quite too frightfully British for my people. It did a slim Sunday, and the poorest Monday I have ever had.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Nice little program picture, but I think I made a mistake in telling them it was by the author of the "Thin Man," for it is about as close kin as a blood and thunder western, from entertainment values. However, as a program picture, it is acceptable. Played Nov. 20.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Another wonderful show that will not gross film rental in the small towns. Good story, fine acting and great entertainment if you can get them in to see it.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland. Ala. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Get out all your adjectives, add some new ones and step on this for all you're worth, for here is as superlative a production as has come out of Hollywood in many a moon. But how it flopped for us—too high class for the general run of our patrons. Those who came told us it was the finest picture they had ever seen, but very few came. Running time, 113 minutes. Played Dec. 16-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

Universal

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—This program picture is so silly and fantastic that it actually amuses. Our patronage enjoyed it on a double feature program, where it rightfully belonged, as it is too light to single.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria White—Audience decidedly divided as to merits of this all-star cast. Some thought it was absolutely worthless; others held a contrary opinion. Business poor. Played Jan. 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes—Universal can take a bow for this one. Those who appreciate Dickens will find this to their liking. But it proved to be just what our patrons do not care for and while we did not have great expectations for the business that might be done, the results were very, very poor indeed. But I still insist, it is a great picture. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Dec. 19-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes—Went after the class of trade we felt this truly great drama would appeal to and we were rewarded with exceptionally good results, having just a whole lot of folks out who very, very seldom come. We clocked our crowds so we know the type of patron that came and we likewise received lots and lots of very complimentary comments on this type of drama. We call it a successful engagement in all ways, extraordinary acting, good suspense, well told story, good sound, fine photography, just a damn good picture for the exhibitor who knows how to use it and put it over to those who will thank him for showing it; so take it and build up your business. You can do it. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Jan. 1-2.—C. Rorwk, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Is bringing in the matinee crowd. Good story and a most entertaining picture. Gets lots of laughs, too. Played Jan. 2.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Phillips Holmes, Mary Carlisle, Edward Arnold—This got by acceptably on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—I call this swell entertainment, but everyone had gone to Lansing to see the Kerns Hotel fire, so it didn't do any business. Binnie Barnes is a beautiful woman and a swell actress, and has a remarkably fine singing voice.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—A good program picture that should please. Underworld theme of a clever lady jewel thief. It's dressed up and Binnie looks like a million. Playd Dec. 18-19.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—Good story and will hold their interest. It is just a matter of being able to sell a new star to the patrons, which is hard to do in a small town. Played Dec. 26.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Ft. Wayne, Ala. Small town patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—A little better than average western that pleased. However, it played second fiddle to a stage attraction, so cannot report as to its drawing power. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Dec. 23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Heather Angel, Roger Pryor, June Knight, Victor Moore—A nice little picture, with a very charming little leading lady. The picture was sold as a special, but it doesn't measure up to that.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: June Clayworth, Roger Pryor—This is a very pleasing comedy drama; it didn't break any records, as my people don't go so strong for Pryor. June Clayworth is a swell little trouper and very easy on the optic nerve.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANGE WIVES: Royer Pryor, June Clayworth—A rather amusing picture of a sworn bachelor who marries his wife and her 40 relatives. A weak picture for Pryor, who has been seen in some good roles lately. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 2-3.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

WAKE UP AND DREAM: Russ Columbo, June Knight, Roger Pryor—Seemed to please a fair sized audience just previous to Christmas. Played Dec. 22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warners

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—A surprise picture if ever there was one. Laughs galore. And how they ate it up. Drew well.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—Here is one of the best comedy dramas that you will get a chance to show in a long, long time. Don't be afraid to boost this picture. Promise them anything to get them in and then take the bows. Every patron will be a walking advertisement and your business will pick up on the next run.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—One of the best comedy pictures we have ever played. Gave splendid satisfaction. Played Dec. 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent, Verree Teasdale, Charles Starrett—A delightful pirture in every sense. Holiday patrons liked this one and didn't fail to tell us so. Jean Muir is very lovely. Played with Merrie Melody and one of the Melody Master series, which made up a perfect holiday program. Played Dec. 27.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—A rowdy farce comedy that pleased a very small crowd on the very tough midweek spot before Christmas.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FROM HEADQUARTERS: George Brent, Margaret Lindsay—This is a formula mystery which is entertaining but will not send your patrons out talking.

This picture exposes several methods used in police headquarters to solve crimes.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—A good picture, but entirely different from the type of story these two usually play in. The pre-holiday slump hit it a hard blow.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HI, NELLIE: Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell, Ned Sparks—The customers called this swell entertainment. —Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I AM A THIEF: Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—Lots of jewel thieves. A clever female Philo Vance, all whooping it up on a train trip. OK for the program dates. Played Dec. 29.—J. Glen Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Robert Armstrong, Osgood Perkins—Lot of laughs and wisecracks. Just enough spice to make them like it and not enough to hurt. We all enjoyed it and it drew better than average business.—Mayme P. Muselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio—Good picture, but just don't ring at the B. O. Another costume affair and my patrons do not like them. Running time, 79 minutes. Played November 25-27.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell, Claire Dodd—This is fair entertainment. I played with a dog and pony act and there were no complaints.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—Step on it! Tell them it is a big picture. For it will stand all you can say about it. Another program picture that beats most specials. It is a pleasure to be in the show business and run pictures like this. Average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Dec. 30.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis—Typical fast moving Cagney vehicle that provided plenty of laughs for our patrons. And believe it or not, Cagney did not "sock" a single dame, but what wallops he handed out to the tough mugs, with his head. Drew well and pleased. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Dec. 14-15.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins—A very good picture with a lot of fun and action. He gets into everything, has plenty of fights and keeps the picture moving at a fast clip. Everybody enjoyed it and business was very good. Played Dec. 26-27.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—Really a big musical. Why Warners pulled this from the first class of pictures and put it in the programs is a mystery to me. It has a good love story, good comedy, dandy songs and beautiful dance numbers. Business good. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Jan. 6-7.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FLYING PIGSKINS: World of Sports Series—Good football reel with plenty of football and in all kinds of weather and on all kinds of fields. Run it; you'll like it, and so will every patron who ses it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOOD GOLFERS START YOUNG: Maureen Olcott, Johnny Hines, Johnny Farrell—Good one-reeler that all can enjoy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLIDAY LAND: Color Rhapsodies Series—Very clever cartoon in color.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLIDAY LAND: Color Rhapsodies—Hats off to another fine color cartoon that goes over with young as well as old. Running time, 8 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLIDAY LAND: Scrappy Cartoon—An excellent color cartoon with a story that has an original twist. —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

KATNIPS OF 1940: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Good cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPICE OF LIFE: Got some laughs with their printed jokes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THREE LITTLE PIGSKINS: Three Stooges—Rough stuff, but it got some laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

DuWorld

SWORD OF THE ARAB: Duncan Renaldo—I expected this to be terrible but it is passably entertaining in its 28 minutes running time. There are a number of beautiful horses and there is some good photography. The acting is poor, however, and the story trite. This featurette will not cause your patrons to walk but they will doubtless care very little for it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Educational

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—A good comedy. Good old Buster—he's still the best pantomime comic on the screen. I still think the funniest pictures ever made were his features, "Our Hospitality," and two-reeler, "The Playhouse."—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HALF BAKED RELATIONS: Andy Clyde—This is a funny comedy, and it's certainly a pleasure to get a two-reeler that is funny.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West —Good comedy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIS LUCKY DAY: Ernest Truex—Excellent. Running time, 2 reels.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD MOVIE PARADE, THE: Treasure Chest Series—Not much to this. Running time, 1 reel. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series—This is a very entertaining number, but not as good as "Mountain Melody." Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MAGIC FISH, THE: Terry-Toon—OK cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICE IN COUNCIL: Terry-Toon—A very good cartoon. Running time, 6 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICE IN COUNCIL: Terry-Toon—An amusing Terry Toon that is a credit to any short subject program. Running time, 8 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

RURAL ROMEOS: Harry Gribbon—Educational should have some sort of medal for making the poorest line of shorts of the year. I don't see how any company could do it even intentionally.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Will Mahoney—Here is an outstanding musical comedy, we think. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO LAME DUCKS: Coronet Comedies—This is a fair comedy. I've seen much worse from Educational. —Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

MAN'S MANIA FOR SPEED: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very good, will surely please. Running time, 10 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHEN DISASTER STRIKES: Good one-reeler. Rehash of old newsreel shots but good ones.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Inter-American

FIGHTING PRIEST, THE: Rev. Charles E. Coughlin—This is a very dull and tiresome effort to capitalize on the popularity of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin. It has about three minutes of "The Fighting Priest" in a closeup giving a short sermon and the remainder is nothing but shots of newspaper headlines and photographs. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

GENTLEMEN OF POLISH: Musical Revues—Not so hot. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farm and small town patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: FitzPatrick Travel Talks Series—Beautiful color and interesting scenes that every one will enjoy. We had lots of compliments on this. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—Very good two-reeler. We thought this one better than the run of Laurel and Hardys. Patrons ate it up.—Clifford M. Anderson, Lomar Theatre, Lohrville, Iowa. General patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—Fine. Had many favorable comments.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farm and small town patronage.

SOMETHING SIMPLE: Charley Chase—Not the best Chase ever made but OK.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER, THE: Cora Sue Collins—A wonderful two-reel fairy tale in beautiful coloring with good music. One of the best shorts I ever exhibited. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER: Musical Revues—Beautiful color and settings and a nice bedtime story, but we hope MGM starts putting some pep and music in their colortones.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WASH-EE IRON-EE: Our Gang—Pleasing Our Gang comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CLUB CONTINENTAL: Leon Belasco & Orchestra, George Givot, Vivian Janis, Grace Barry—This was only fair. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MONKEY SHINES: Paramount Varieties—This is a dandy one-reel subject. Will fit in any program.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Betty Boop—This was done in colors, and it was beautiful. Many comments in its favor.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR—The audience response to these cartoons is splendid.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Principal

WINGS OVER ANDES: This is strictly another travelogue that is as interesting and well made as most travelogues but it is too long.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BIG MOUTHPIECE, THE: Chick Chandler, Tom Kennedy—This is tragic instead of funny. Just as bad as "Unlucky Strike" was good.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

BRIDAL BAIL: Blonde and Red Head Series—Fairly good comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER: Ruth Etting—I didn't care for this but the customers seemed to take it. This high fidelity recording is a pain in the neck.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DUMBBELL LETTERS: No. 7—Some laughs but a very short reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HURRY CALL: "Chic" Sale—A snap-bang-up two-reeler that got plenty of laughs and what else matters. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

JEST OF HONOR: Soglow's "The King" Cartoon Series—Like all the rest of this series, this is a very poor comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—Though this is a short, it belongs in the same list with the features. I broke some nice records with this subject. We couldn't see any third dimension, but it is the finest short subject we have ever played. Gave it top billing, and it went over 100 per cent. Played "The World Moves On" with this subject. Running time, 21 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

LITTLE BIRD TOLD ME, A: Toddle Tale Cartoon—Another good cartoon in the Toddle Tale Series. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A LADDER: Edgar Kennedy—Good knockabout comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PASTRYTOWN WEDDING: Rainbow Parade Cartoons Series—Okay.—Mayme P. Museslman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SONGS OF THE COLLEGES: Headliner Series (1934-35)—This is very appropriate for the football season and will probably be liked at any time. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN STYLE: Ruth Etting—Ruth, I'm mad at you. You only sang two songs in this and I consider you cheated on us. We expected three. "Old Kentucky Home" and "Swanee River" were fine, but why didn't you sing "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia"? Then this 2-reeler would have been a knockout. Even as is, we liked this a lot, and received several nice compliments on it. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN STYLE: Ruth Etting—This one is very good with the exception of the overemphasis on "you all," an expression that some "nit-wit" director tried to put over as authentic in the South. I'll bet this guy can't pronounce "your" correctly. He would pronounce it "yore," so my advice along this line is cut out stuff you don't know anything about.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY FRESH YEGGS: Gribbon-Kennedy-Stanton Comedy—Mediocre comedy with a few laughs.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

TORCH TANGO: Ruth Etting—Not as good as the other Ruth Etting subjects, but will please.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

State Rights

SILENT ENEMY, THE: Remember the old Paramount silent film "The Silent Enemy?" Here it is cut down to three reels with musical accompaniment and off-screen dialogue. It is good entertainment and different from the usual short or features as it impresses as being an authentic Indian story and not a studio action picture. The scenery, photography and acting are excellent and most any type of audience will appreciate it. The musical accompaniment is especially noteworthy, and the off-screen voice does not detract from the entertaining qualities of this film.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

FATHER NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphony—Unusually good. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

Universal

DEMI TASSE: Doane Musical No. 1—This is a very entertaining vaudeville program of singing, dancing, knockabout tumbling and piano clowning. The only criticism is that Ray Meyers (if that's his name) duplicates the piano comedy act which he had in an earlier Mentone comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLDILOCKS AND THE THREE BEARS: Oswald Cartoons—Very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GUS VAN AND HIS NEIGHBORS: Mentone No. 2-A—A two-reeler of acts with Van as master of ceremonies. Gus does very well with some dialect songs, but has no backing. Running time, 19 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—Excellent. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrtington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—A very fine color cartoon which as usual pleased everyone. Such cartoons are greatly appreciated and always receive plenty of unsolicited praise. Running time, 8 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

PLEASING GRANDPA: Sterling Holloway—This is the worst comedy Holloway has ever made. Poor.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION: No. 3—Interesting and unusual presentation. The voice of the announcer is very poorly recorded and difficult to understand at times. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

WHAT A BUSINESS: Smith and Dale—An entertaining comedy team backed with some good vaudeville acts, including the Russian revels and the Four Ink Spots. A passable two-reeler. Running time, 19 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

WILLIAM TELL: Oswald Cartoon—OK cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WILLIAM TELL: Oswald Cartoon—Not as good as some of the others of this series, but it gets a few laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—Only fair slapstick comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevity—Musical in color. Old but still a good short.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Roscoe Ates—What a comedy. Here's one like you have never presented to your patrons before and you can ballyhoo it in feature style with good results. Can't fail to please. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Dizzy and Daffy Dean—You get a chance to see the Dean Boys in action. They don't do so bad. Would have been better had they left the comedian in the dressing room. He wasn't funny and took up too much footage that should have been filled with Dean Brothers.—Mayme P. Museslman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GEM OF THE OCEAN: Jeanne Aubert—Not so hot. Running time, 2 reels.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

GEM OF THE OCEAN: Jeanne Aubert—Not as good as some of the Broadway Brevities, but will please.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

GOOD BADMINTON: Pepper Pot—Clever presentation of an interesting game. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GOOD MORNING EVE: Leon Errol—Good musical short with fine color.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOW DO I KNOW IT'S SUNDAY: Merrie Melodies Series—Clever cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

I SCREAM: Gus Shy—This is a poor subject, and that is unusual from Vitaphone.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MASKS AND MEMORIES: Lillian Roth—Very good and it pleased. One reel longer than most of them, so don't book too many shorts with it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIRRORS: Freddy Rich and Orchestra—One of the best of the Melody Masters. Eton Boys are very good in this one.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

MY MUMMY'S ARMS: Harry Gribbon—Very poor comedy.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

OH SAILOR BEHAVE: El Brendel—A good El Brendel comedy.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

POP GOES YOUR HEART: Merrie Melodie Series—This color cartoon is very clever. Good music, fine animation.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland Theatre, Ashland, Ala. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER THE ALAMO: See America First, E. M. Newman—Give this series a FitzPatrick and they would be fine.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SO YOU WON'T T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates—Pulled about as many laughs as last year's mustard plaster. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

STOLEN MELODY, THE: Pepper Pot—Very fine. Was liked by all. Can stand this brand of entertainment for some time to come.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

THOSE BEAUTIFUL DAMES: Merrie Melodies—Nice cartoon in color.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Increase in Virginia Theatrical Charters

Norvell W. Atkinson, clerk of the Virginia State Corporation Commission, has reported an increase in the number of Virginia theatre charters. Several new theatrical corporations have been granted charters by the commission within recent months. Among the new corporations here are the Lyric Theatre Corporation, Colonel Robert T. Barton, Jr., president, and the Grace Amusement Company, Clarence Vaden, president.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CAUSE FOR AMAZEMENT?

A few weeks back, on this page, your Chairman directed to Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth, in Washington, an open letter in which was pointed out the necessity for immediate alleviation of the intolerable conditions under which so many theatre managers are forced to labor. We referred in particular to the economic waste created by working theatremen to exhaustion and compared their lot to other workers in the theatre who are protected by provisions of the Code.

Taking decided exception to the opinions we voiced is Mr. Robert H. Poole, of Los Angeles, business manager of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California. Mr. Poole's comment, to which we shall add a word in the adjoining column, is as follows:

DEAR MR. VOGEL:

We have just read the open letter you sent to Mr. Farnsworth, which appeared on page 93 of the December 29 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and we were quite amazed at the contents of this letter. We understand that your publication is published primarily for the benefit of the motion picture industry as a whole and particularly for the benefit of the theatre owners throughout the country. If you have been following the current trend in the industry, you are undoubtedly aware of the fact that that part of the Code which has to do with labor, as it affects projectionists, stagehands and others has thus far not accomplished much for the theatrical industry. Knowing the set-up of the exhibition business as you should know it, it certainly is not practical to limit the time of managers to 40 hours per week. They are unquestionably executives and as such it is not practical and not feasible to put them on a time clock. Their only value is in any constructive thinking that they might do for the business. Whether he comes to the theatre office and sits in a chair for two or three hours, thinking up ideas, or whether he stays at home and thinks of the ideas is immaterial.

While we do not believe that managers or anyone else should be worked as slaves or an unusual amount of unnecessary time, we know from experience that the majority of the managers are practically their own bosses and can do as they please and are not answerable to the owners of the theatres except insofar as it affects the results of the theatres. If a manager could accomplish his duties in five hours successfully, it would be very pleasing to the theatre owner, indeed. The theatre owner today is beset from all sides by restrictions, rules and regulations and to heap more trouble into his lap insofar as managers' time is concerned certainly would be the last straw and it would lead to the closing of many theatres, as well as causing the discharging of hundreds of managers, inasmuch as it would be economically impossible to operate in such a manner. We do not think that your arguments are constructive, and believe the only thing they would accomplish would be further destruction to our industry.

We see no reason for Mr. Poole's amazement. This department has never at any time led or supported any movement to restrict the manager's working week to 40 hours. If the gentleman from California will again read the open letter, he will find our exact words were as follows: "We know of no manager campaigning for anything so fabulous. . . ." In fact, we doubt that any conscientious showman would care a lot for the idea.

However, we reiterate that theatremen must be protected from the greed of exhibitors entirely unconcerned with the welfare of managers to the point of working them 12 to 14 hours, seven days a week.

It is pleasing to know that, according to Mr. Poole, members of his Association do not believe in working managers as slaves, allow managers to practically be their own bosses, and, further, would be pleased to have managers accomplish their daily duties in five hours.

Unfortunately, such reported conditions do not exist in other less favored parts of the country, and therefore we shall continue to wage our campaign for betterment until managers everywhere are given a decent break.

4,389 TO 7,346,007

Discussing the Quigley Awards, a few of our correspondents have suggested giving separate plaques for small town campaigns. Well, how about East Lansing (pop. 4,389) and, for that matter, how about New York (pop. 7,346,007), localities of two of the 1934 winners.

Which is another way of remarking that size of location has little bearing on the decisions of the judges. We again say, it's what a manager accomplishes, rather than where.

If the Wrigley people wish to check the recent distribution of 30 million pieces of gum mailed, according to Advertising Age, in a sampling campaign, we suggest close examination of the underside of the nation's theatre seats.

BILL HENDRICKS

MORRIS ROSENTHAL

Duplicate December Plaques go to both Managers Bill Hendricks of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tennessee, and to Morris Rosenthal of the Loew-Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Connecticut, incidentally, the only deadlock encountered in the Competitions for 1934. These Round Tablers share the unique distinction of finishing in a dead heat for the Quigley December Award. Hendricks clicked with "Six Day Bike Rider" and Rosenthal with "The Mighty Barnum."

Shepherd Ties In on "Broadway Bill" Race

Although Sonny Shepherd modestly states he did not originate the idea he sure did move fast on that snappy gag of promoting a special "Broadway Bill Handicap" at Tropical Park, Miami, the stunt originated by Nate Spingold of Columbia Pictures.

Sonny was putting on a strong advance for the picture at the Mayfair, in the resort city, and tied in by wiring for a special print with which he staged a preview for a flock of important race track people, turf and newswriters.

Tack cards were used to cover every traffic artery to the track, and the course was flooded with all sorts of tiein advertising. Outstanding aid well timed was an airplane towing a theatre banner which flew over the track before and after the race and during the presentation of the cup. Accompanying photo shows the plane over the track just before the race with horses lined up to go.

A P and other photographers covered the presentation, in which the noted Damon Runyon did the honors. All concerned were announced over the track p.a. system, including Sonny and the theatre. Newspaper men, visiting and local, also spread themselves on giving the stunt a good break, with pictures and stories mentioning the title and the theatre.

The track officials gave further aid with a barrage of newspaper and other advertising and plugged the stunt at the track well in advance.

Deering Stages Cantor Voice Audition Contest

Francis Deering at the State, Memphis, Tenn., engineered an Eddie Cantor voice audition contest in connection with his "Kid Millions" campaign tying in with local radio station with the winner going to New York as guest of Eddie.

Phoney money with copy was distributed by cashier and two girls on streets, and "blot your blues away" blotters in offices, banks, post offices and schools, imprinted paper bags were used in the five-and-tens. Music store on main street had singer in window plugging hits and night before opening merchants tied in on the premiere with their annual Christmas parade. Deering arranged with hotel to set up amplifier and music and announcements concerning picture were made before and after parade.

Much Coverage for Bill's "Bike" Date

Bill Hendricks' campaign on "Six Day Bike Rider" at the Warner, Memphis, was typical of the sterling efforts of this Round Tabler and contained a multitude of box office angles. We list a few of the more novel, as follows:

A window dressing contest for grocers for a $50 prize, and passes for all those submitting photos of their entries. The passes were giant size and had to be brought to the theatre unfolded, to make sure they would be seen while carried to the theatre. Grocers' association and trade papers got behind this. Photos of windows were posted in lobby and patrons voted for the best.

Bill varied the bike idea by having girl in shorts riding atop marquee, and pulled another neat stunt by putting on a golf gag wherein passes were given those who drove the ball off tee (see photo) into large mouth of Joe Brown cutout head some distance away. Girl in shorts riding bannered bike in Shrine parade also brought attention, and the gals were called on again when Hendricks had good looker wearing lettered sweater distribute phone memo pads at offices, stores, etc.

"Television" was also attempted with small screen showing trailer set above radio in store window plus sound projector. Sound was carried through to horns concealed below radio. This was planted at night in prominent spot with costumed gal in attendance. Effective also was sticker with copy saying—"Time to see, etc., etc.," placed on clocks in stores and windows.

Many Newspaper Tieins

Of course the newspaper tieups were many, a co-op page with a novel twist having to do with a contest in which readers were asked to select from the ads a complete outfit of wearables, eatables, etc. for Joe Brown, who was supposed to be starting on a six-day bike trip to see his girl.

Other newspaper angles were plenty, including hookin with Christmas Fund, contests, and a flock of others. Tieins with radio were well spotted, a host of good windows secured, railroad excursion cooperation obtained and advertised in all stations within the drawing area.

Lobby display stood out, with animations above and around box office. Inside Bill had artist working on feature posters, and all in all, put across a campaign that well rates his December honors in the Quigley Awards.

Hendricks' "Brown" Golf Gag

SECOND GRAND AWARD TO BE GIVEN FOR 1934

Entrants in the Quigley competitions, and especially those who have won the monthly plaques, will be interested in knowing that in addition to the 1934 Grand Award, a Second Grand Award is also to be given, this for the second best campaign selected.

Winners will be chosen on Jan. 22. Thirty distribution, advertising and exhibition executives have been invited to act as judges to select the two campaigns for the high honors. These will be determined from among the 13 awarded the Monthly Plaques.

Further details, including names of judges invited, names and campaigns of the monthly winners, will be found in the news section of this issue.

Mae West Doubles Attract in London

And now it's "Itometer," and you will have to lay that one to John Armstrong, fast moving ad director of Paramount London Theatres, who put the contraption to work for a heap of publicity on the date at the Plaza on "Belle of the Nineties."

John used it on a special tiein with a flock of Mae West doubles who answered classified ads run as a part of the campaign. Those qualifying were engaged to work the important spots in town, and the auditions of course were covered fully by the local papers, which ran a lot of the pictures showing the judging.

The above "itometer" was used to measure the appeal of the various Wests, accompanying photo also clicking for extra publicity. The machine also was planted in the lobby, where patrons were invited to measure their personal magnetism, the stunt being tied into a film test angle.

Armstrong landed a lot of excellent locations with a large window card illustrated with photo of Mae inviting the folks to come-up-and-see-her at the Plaza after the Christmas shopping was completed.

The holiday season was also used as an angle with greeting cards from Mae which were distributed at the theatre and other spots, as were other expensive looking cards announcing the coming arrival of the star, theatre and date.

SOLOMON HONORED IN AWARD CEREMONIES

Plaque Presented to November Winner at Special Luncheon in Newark by I. J. Hoffman

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Headed by Don Jacocks, Newark Warner Theatres division chief, on January 10, the entire manager personnel of the division, district managers and home office executives assembled at the Hotel Douglas, in that spot, where at a special luncheon, Manager Sig Solomon, of the Regent Theatre, received the Quigley Award for November from I. J. Hoffman, Assistant General Manager in charge of Warner Theatres in the East. (Photo on picture page.)

At the speakers' table also were Frank Damis, assistant to Mr. Jacocks, District Manager A. Williams, Solomon's direct superior, and your Chairman. Joseph Bernhard, Warner Theatres General Manager, had accepted an invitation to be on hand, but was called out of town unexpectedly.

The ceremonies were presided over by Mr. Jacocks. who voiced his appreciation of Solomon's success, and pointed out that Sig had been able to win his Quigley spurs while doing a good job of operation at the Regent.

Hoffman Praises Winner

Mr. Jacocks further expressed himself favorably toward the Quigley project and indicated that the Awards served their purpose by encouraging managers to exert themselves toward better grosses.

Mr. Hoffman was then presented and stated that it always was a pleasure to recognize signal accomplishments. He emphasized that Solomon was to be congratulated for winning an Award so soon after his transfer to the Newark territory.

"I am particularly gratified," he continued, "for it has been said that chain operation is stereotyped. But Solomon's success, as well as those of other Warner men in different divisions, has disproved this. These winnings should give managers a mark to shoot at."

Mr. Hoffman further brought out that the majority of Awards won by the Warnerites had been taken down by Harry Kalmine's Pittsburgh division. He hoped that the Newark sector would be counted among the winners more frequently in 1935.

Your correspondent was also called upon and took the occasion to speak of the five promotions given to winners of Quigley Awards who were stepped up because of their efforts in the Competitions. He further brought out that the Quigley project was directed to stimulating higher grosses, and also counseled managers against overelaboration in making up their entries.

After the presentation of the Award, Solomon then spoke his piece, and expressed appreciation of the splendid cooperation offered by the divisional executives and brother managers in aiding him to make a good showing at his theatre. He also promised to extend his Quigley participation in 1935 in making a bid for new honors.

In addition to those mentioned, the following managers and home office executives were present:

Many Tieups Feature Hong Kong Campaign

Merchants and English newspapers in Hong Kong, China, are evidently well educated to picture tieups according to the well executed campaign on "Baby Take A Bow," forwarded by Fox South China manager, A. L. Caplan, who cooperated on the advance at King's Theatre.

Paper ran drawing of Temple and invited children under 12 to color it for prizes of autographed photos and tickets. Portrait studio took free photo of children for those purchasing special reserved seats at theatre, and advertised tieup in display ads. Star postcards distributed at leading hotel tea dances and lunch spots to patrons allowed free admission to children accompanied by adults on presentation of card. Two restaurants held drawings for free seats. The results brought more children to the theatre since the opening, which was one of the main objectives of the drive, Caplan reports. In every tieup, merchants placed large newspaper ads to plug hookins.

Campaign in the Chinese newspapers was run along similar lines, and in addition to the general publicity, leading station broadcast the picture's hit tune four nights ahead.

Powell Goes After Student Patronage With "Cleopatra"

William Powell, Paramount, Newport, R. I., sent a letter to the superintendent of schools, asking and securing cooperation for letter to be sent to all school principals, pointing out that the Latin and Greek students should be particularly interested in seeing "Cleopatra." Powell stressed also that classes in sewing and design should find an appeal in the costumes, dramatic groups in the story itself and arts and crafts in the utensils.

Tieup with shoe store brought lobby display (see accompanying photo), and costumed girl gave out promoted Old Gold cigarettes. Drug store devoted window to face powder and perfume display, with "Cleo" stills, beauty parlor featured Colbert coiffure, and back of Clover Farms heralds bore theatre copy.

Hunt Stages Dinner Party For Mayor on "Widow"

One of the highlights of George Hunt's "Merry Widow" campaign at Loew's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., was a dinner party given after the premiere for the Mayor, other notables and members of the press.

Local couple performed "Waltz" atop marquee and another attractor was girl at switchboard in window of sports shop using telephone gag. Waitresses in leading restaurants wore "Widow" badges.

RKO Ties School Picture To High School Anniversary

"Grand Old Girl", RKO's picture dealing with American school teachers, has been hooked up to the 300-year anniversary of high schools in this country sponsored by the National Education Association.

Leon J. Bamberger, RKO sales promotion manager, has written to exhibitors suggesting they tie in to the anniversary when playing the picture. Attached to the letters is a copy of endorsement from the anniversary publicity committee, to over 150,000 principals and teachers, requesting cooperation with local exhibitors on the date.

Hat Box Street Bally Spreads Word on "Widow"

Dark hat boxes tied with red ribbons, title lettered in gold, and carried about the city on busses and street cars by two comely gals (see photo) three days ahead was the snappy bally pulled by Loew Cleveland publicity head, Milt Harris cooperating with Manager Everett Steinbuch for "Merry Widow" date at the State.

There were other good stunts reported. For instance, the wisecrack newspaper contest, with cash prizes and tickets for the best answers to the "What are they saying" photos run daily. Cooperation of various stores also contributed to the newspaper lineage, hat shop advertising duplicate of style worn by MacDonald, and beauty salon doing likewise on star's hair. Both stores ran windows, as did furniture dealers, drug chain on "Widow" sundae, and "Widow" cocktail was featured at bars.

Special herald was distributed with each package by transfer company handling deliveries from leading stores, the trucks all being bannered. Back page of MGM Screen Forecasts was imprinted and these given out at many of the stores.

Waltz contest clicked at leading ballroom, orchestrations were featured by various orchestras, and the "this table reserved for the Merry Widow" stunt was put on at prominent hotels and night clubs.

G. E. Sargent, Paramount, Rutland, Vt., rigged up his loud speaker to the marquee, and, using electrical transcription, played tunes from "Belle of the Nineties" ahead and during run. At conclusion of each song, short spiel selling picture was given.

Accompanying photo shows auto, vintage of 1914 with cutout figure of West riding in back of car. Bally on streets day prior and opening day. Week prior, six daily broadcasts were held, bands supplied with orchestrations and special heralds distributed from house to house. A twenty-four sheet of Mae was pasted on old drop and lowered between each show while music from picture was played.

Joe Kinsky Has "Goo Goo" Booked on Police Blotter

District manager Joe Kinsky at the Capitol in Davenport, Ia., had an attractive "College Rhythm" display rigged up in his lobby (see photo), with Penner's performing duck doing its stuff.

Night before opening Joe arranged to have the duck stolen and the "crime" booked by the police. Newspapers picked the story up and theatre ran ad in the classified section offering a reward for the return of "Goo Goo" with "no questions asked."

Harry Browning, M and P ad head, tells us that Nat Silver received some unexpected appreciation on a stunt for "One Night of Love," at the Strand, Lowell, Mass. It seems that Nat had a lot of hotel post cards sent out from New York with a word of recommendation from Grace Moore.

Imagine Silver's surprise in receiving a letter some time later from one of the recipients, addressed to Miss Moore and containing thanks for the OK on the picture. Writer went into dithers on the show and promised to see the star's future productions.

McGowan Invites Orphans To See "Kid Millions"

Ralph McGowan, Poli Theatre, Worcester, Mass., tied up with newspaper for a special showing of "Kid Millions" for orphans and crippled children. Street parade was arranged with each child wearing a special tag. Ice cream companies donated cream and used window streamers in all ice cream parlors.

Tabloids plugging the picture were inserted in evening issue of newspaper and additional tabloids distributed by newsboys. Milk bottle covers used by local milk companies. Hotel, night clubs and dance hall orchestras played tunes from picture and department stores used window displays.

Newport, R. I.

The cumulative results of this plan must have been of decided assistance to every motion picture exhibitor and group operator in the country. It certainly has focused a spotlight on the efforts of the men in the field; it has demonstrated that promotion is possible for those who deserve it; and more important that anything else, it has provided us all with a library of alert showmanly exploitation and ingenious ideas which will get money into the box office

ROY L. PATTERSON

Manager, Gordon
Middletown, Ohio

Am certainly happy to learn that you are going to continue the Quigley Awards during the year of 1935. It is an inspiration to us theatre managers and will assure you that this campaign competition has meant money to my box office, as a result of my putting a little more effort behind it in order to show up well with my campaign. . . . Believe me or not, you will find me in there with a campaign every month next year. . . .

Congratulations to you—you are doing a great job—and it will be a pleasure to look forward to competing again.

JACK A SIMONS

Manager, Poli
Hartford, Conn.

I would rather win a Quigley Award than any exploitation honor or recognition that could be bestowed upon me. Therefore, I personally am grateful that you have extended this splendid project for another year—12 more chances to bag this coveted honor.

LESTER POLLOCK

Manager, Rochester Theatre,
Rochester, N. Y.

We were very glad to hear that the Awards project will be continued during 1935. The Awards certainly keep one alert and set a pace for competing showmen. Trust the coming year will be even more successful in furthering your worthy cause than the first year.

BOB PASKOW

Manager, Stanley
Jersey City, N. J.

The imposing list of Judges who have served on your Committee and who have expressed their appreciation of the value of this excellent award of merit to outstanding showmen, indicates that it is a worthy idea and I am overjoyed at your decision to continue in 1935.

GEORGE ROTSKY

Manager, Palace
Montreal, Canada

I certainly think that your Quigley Awards project is one of the best things that happened for the theatremen, and if only more managers would take advantage of it it would be a great thing for everybody as it certainly gives a man a lot of incentive to put things over when he knows that the entire trade knows about it. As was the case with our firm, two of our men got promoted just through their recognition when they received the Quigley Award. I am only sorry that I did not start long ago to send in my stuff. . . .

J. KNOX STRACHAN

Manager, Warner Portsmouth Theatres
Portsmouth, Ohio

The announcement that the Quigley Awards will continue during 1935 is very gratifying. The friendly competition fostered among the participants must have proven enjoyable, helpful and instructive to every man in the field.

The establishment of the Quigley Awards should be hailed as a distinctive innovation in a business in which new and worthwhile ideas are very often under-publicized.

HERSCHEL STUART

Director of Advertising & Publicity
Columbia Pictures Corporation

I would consider it a privilege to serve as one of the Judges for the Quigley Awards in 1935.

One of the pleasures this year was serving on your Committee. I was amazed at the number of marvelous showmen there are in the field. Those hard-hitting managers and press men prove to everybody that the way to sell the picture is to get behind it.

ARTHUR SWANKE

Manager, Saenger
Hope, Arkansas

Your letter saying that the Quigley Awards would be continued through the year of 1935 was great news. That alone is something to look forward to. . . .

I am happy over the several Honorable Mentions that I received during last year, and you can rest assured that I shall try harder than ever to win that coveted First this year. . . .

GEORGE W. TRENDLE

President, United Detroit Theatres Corp.
Detroit, Michigan

. . . I would be delighted to do anything to be of assistance to Mr. Quigley and yourself. . . .

W. G. Van SCHMUS

Managing Director,
Radio City Music Hall

Thank you for your letter of a few days ago in which you asked me to serve as a member of the Committee of Judges for 1935. I shall be very glad if I can be helpful, to accept this privilege. . . .

J. R. VOGEL

Loew's, Inc.
New York City

Will be glad to again serve on your Committee.

A. P. WAXMAN

Advertising Counsel
Gaumont British Picture Corp.

Delighted to be of service to you as one of the Judges on your Award Committee.

This idea of yours of encouraging showmanship in the men in the field is a very fine one and worthy of the interest and cooperation of everybody in the industry. When all is said and done, it is how the pictures do in the field—and what the men do for the pictures in the field—that counts. I have nothing but admiration for these men who with limited resources, limited channels and limited opportunities still manage to demonstrate that a showman is a showman regardless of his local situation. . . .

DAVID E. WESHNER

Division Manager, Warner Brothers
Philadelphia, Pa.

. . . I shall be happy indeed to act as one of the Judges of Quigley Awards for 1935.

I believe that Quigley Awards represent a much needed stimulus to all who are in the exhibition end of this business. The mere fact that thousands of managers are spurred on beyond the line of duty for the recognition they can achieve by winning the Quigley Award not only helps make each manager more valuable to himself but makes for a healthier and more progressive spirit among those who constitute the most important element in show business.

R. B. WILBY

President, Wilby-Kincey Management Corp.
Atlanta, Georgia

I appreciate very much yours of December 10.

I am in New York very seldom but if I can be there at a time when I can serve as one of your judges in your Quigley Awards, I will be very happy to do so.

Newspaper Cooperates With Katz on "Du Barry"

A five day contest at a cost of $25 and a few passes to the newspaper was put on by Ben R. Katz, Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., for "Du Barry" premiere, idea being for readers to submit a series of five Del Rio captions along with fifty-word essay on why they would like to see the picture. Newspaper published serialization of "Du Barry" in their green sheet section for the five days.

Opening was plugged over radio, special lobby display (see photo) was built and "Du Barry" cosmetic booklets were mailed by department store to special accounts. Chain drug store featured a Del Rio sundae and congratulatory letters from officials of the city and leading merchants on the world premiere being held at the Warner were posted on special easel.

Amateur Nights Prove Successful for Harry

Every Friday night, Harry Salisbury, Lawler Theatre, Rochester, Minn., has been holding amateur vaudeville programs with local junior college dramatic teacher staging the plays. Recently "The Trial of Mother Goose Folk" was given with twenty-five students participating.

Those plays that are particularly well received are given the following afternoon at the kiddies matinees.

Schell Goes Cereal On "Bike Rider"

For what he had in mind, Manager Bill Schell, Ambridge, Ambridge, Pa., did a lot of spreading on the Quaker Oats tiein with "Bike Rider." Front (see photo) was well decorated with jumbo cartons and others sniped were planted in various stores.

Bill also staged a cereal bike parade, boys wearing cartons with peep-holes for eyes and arm holes, novel enough to command attention. Rain checks distributed at factories and Brown bike club buttons to the youngsters also helped. Schell states these tieins all were promoted.

Old Time Hack Bally Attracts on "Belle"

That section of Brooklyn, New York, in which his theatre is situated was admirably covered by Manager Seymour R. Mayer, of Loew's Pitkin, on "Belle of the Nineties," of more than passing interest being the effective street ballys that featured the drive. Foremost among these was old time bannered horse-driven hack (see photo), driver in costume, and girl in Westian attire. Another girl, dressed as the star, distributed heralds at busy corners. Mayer also reports successful the press book gag of comparing figures to West lobby cutout.

Good locations were tied in on contest wherein enlargements of star were planted in seven windows, each having one letter of star's name. Patrons were required to find the seven and submit the locations to win tickets. Other windows were secured, including Woolworth's, which gave away the autographed star stills with each purchase.

Another giveaway that helped was small card with theatre copy, reverse side containing words of the picture's hit tune, at dance halls and other spots patronized by the younger element. Candy and perfumes promoted locally were likewise distributed in small imprinted bags.

Stenciled sidewalk within 20-block area, lettered cardboard arrows, and street parade of bannered new model cars were other gags that were found effective.

Ballroom Stages "Widow" Waltz Contest for Reid

A leading ballroom cooperated with Ken Reid, at Loew's, Canton, Ohio, in putting on a "Merry Widow" waltz contest at a net cost to the theatre of fifteen pairs of guest tickets for minor prizes, ballroom donating the main prize. Tie-up with beer garden had singing waiters plugging hits.

Sign artist, J. R. Kline was responsible for the new front constructed (see photo), and special lobby easel was later used in five and ten display. Shoe store featured still of Chevalier putting on Jeanette MacDonald's shoe.

High school football rally was held at theatre opening day with the team and cheer leaders theatre guests, stunt was publicized by heralds which were distributed at school prior to opening.

Doug's Last Five

Ed Melnicker, at the Grand, Atlanta, got a bit of action on "Don Juan" by planting radio contest, prizes being tickets to first 50 sending in list of Doug Fairbanks' last five pictures. Station gave the stunt a lot of daily plugs and also put on the 15-minute air playlet.

Woman's Club President Sells "Barretts" for Gould

S. W. Gould, Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., succeeded in getting an announcement of the playdate of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" before a meeting of the leading women's clubs of that city, enlisting the aid of the president of one of the clubs. A short talk on the picture was given.

Window displays were placed in leading department stores, hat shop tied in with mat of Norma Shearer and public and high school principals informed of the play dates.

Pete Hits Page One With Air Delivery

Pete Egan, up in Calgary, Alberta, has not had a missout in ages, so he decided to hit the front pages on "What Every Woman Knows" with a shot of the print being delivered by plane, the film conveniently missing arrival through the usual transportation channels.

Local papers ran a two column shot on page one showing air pilot delivering print, the theatre and title, of course, being mentioned in the story. Caption over cut—"Service for Theatre Fans," was, of course, an ace goodwill gesture.

Rotsky Arranges for Radio Station to Plug Picture

George Rotsky at the Palace in Montreal, Canada, arranged with his local broadcasting station to have the music from "Thine Is My Heart" played mornings and afternoons week prior to opening in addition to announcement of picture and playdates.

A "Produced in Canada" exhibition was in full swing at the time and George promoted himself a booth in which stills from picture were prominently displayed. Girl in music department of leading shop aided in plugging date and a special screening was held for newspaper men.

Up Go Renewals

Better than the Boom Days

The quickening pulse of the motion picture industry is nowhere so strikingly recorded as in the rising rate of spontaneous renewal of subscriptions for Motion Picture Herald.

This rate is equalled by only an extremely few publications in other older industries.

The astonishing fact develops: that today the Herald subscribers are responding to the reader interest impulse nearly twice as rapidly as in the easy money years of 1928-29.

Motion Picture Herald, on its record, stands as the dominant business journal of the motion picture industry.

Smith Asked Banning Of Czech Film "Ecstasy"

Al Smith, former governor of New York, in his capacity as chairman of the Advisory Council of the Legion of Decency for the Catholic Diocese of New York, last week addressed a telegram to President Roosevelt, asking that he bar from this country the Czechoslovakian film, "Ecstasy," but the film had already been barred by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. Mr. Smith said he was "opposed to all films on nudism and all those which are obscene and indecent." He warned that the showing of such films as "Ecstasy" would "tend to loosen the bars on motion pictures in general."

Erpi Files Suits On Infringements

Electrical Research Products has filed patent infringement suits at Minneapolis in the federal district court against Cinema Supplies, Inc., Joseph Numero and Theodore Karatz of Minneapolis. The suit is based upon alleged infringements by Ultraphone of patents granted H. D. Arnold and others between 1920 and 1925 and subsequently assigned to the complainant. The suit asks for a payment of profits, damages and an injunction against further infringements.

Pending the hearing on a permanent injunction the court has granted a temporary restraining order.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

WHEN it was introduced in 1931, Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative was definitely a "new and different" product. And there is still no other film like it...no other has wrought comparable changes in motion picture procedure, or contributed as much to motion picture quality. It is only natural that this Eastman film should be unique, also, in the enthusiasm which it continues to arouse among cameramen and producers. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. 1. Be sure that you have booked a good picture. (Note: This can best be done by getting a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract).

2. See that the picture has good name attractions. (Note: This can best be done by signing with M-G-M and getting practically all the stars).

3. See that the picture has been nationally exploited so that you get the benefit locally as well. (Note: In the case of "David Copperfield" 40 national magazine full-page ads for a total of 34,048,736 circulation).

4. See that tie-ups have been made. (M-G-M rarely has less than 50 tie-ups on a picture).

5. That serials have been placed. (1,000 serializations on "Copperfield" running in as many newspapers).

SAN SIMEON, Cal., Jan. 17.—

Warner Brothers have produced a moving picture, "Devil Dogs of the Air," that should be seen by every intelligent American, and by every member of Congress.

In this picture you will see, not actors imitating airmen, but real fliers, officers and men of the United States Marine Flying Corps. You see actual operations on our airplane carriers, discharging planes as needed, trained officers of the United States Navy issuing brief orders. You see the laying of smoke screens for the protection of surface ships, torpedo boats and landing parties, every detail of the training and marvelous effiency of American airmen.

Young American men and women, seeing the actual flying, extraordinary courage and skill of American war pilots, will be fired with the ambition to fly and help conquer man's newly acquired realm, the ocean of the air. And, from our marvelously efficient and courageous little "sample" national air fleet, you will learn that, weak as we are in the air, weakest among important nations, the fliers that America develops could subject any hostile air fleet to exceedingly unpleasant experiences.

Congressmen and Governors of States, seeing this picture, will take pride in the marvelous efficiency of the American flier and will be humiliated by the knowledge that among the world's important nations we stand last in airplane defense.

One or five hundred of the bravest, most skillful fighting airmen that ever lived could not protect six thousand miles of coast line and the nation's great cities against an attacking fleet of four or five thousand invading planes.

There is the usual American "love story" in Warner Brothers' picture. Actor James Cagney looks extraordinarily brave and broad shouldered. Although infinitely "tougher" men of the United States Marines do the actual flying. A dear little girl runs out on the air field in high heels and an apron to reward with one kiss or more the hero, who hasn't really done anything. The real picture is in the flying of real American air fighters. Don't fail to see it.

Warner Brothers deserve thanks for producing a picture that will stimulate patriotism, and make the nation think of air defense.

Every exhibitor should know the answers to THESE ④ QUESTIONS:

① Who is the most popular news commentator today?

Answer: Lowell Thomas, whose forceful, clear-cut delivery humanizes the news to radio millions as well as for Fox Movietone News.

② Which newsreel presents the news most dramatically?

Answer: Fox Movietone News, because it is edited by Laurence Stallings, famous as a newspaper man, dramatist, novelist and screen writer.

③ Which newsreel is best equipped for speedy, world-wide coverage?

Answer: For years, Fox Movietone News admittedly has had the most complete world-coverage ... now exclusive with Fox.

④ Does the newsreel record actual sounds of the scene shown?

Answer: Fox Movietone News, first to give you talking newsreels, continues to thrill audiences with actual sounds, recorded on the scene!

MANPOWER SHOW

THIS industry of the motion picture has only two components, film and manpower. In a distribution sense, the art merchandise comes in a can from Hollywood, but there is another art, the art of industry, in purveying it to the customers at the box office. Certainly the most conspicuous and important instrument for the revelation of that manpower currently are the competitions continuously conducted by the Managers Round Table Department of Motion Picture Herald, conducted by Mr. A-Mike Vogel.

Considerable attention is devoted in this issue of The Herald to the Quigley Grand Annual Award, determined by the vote of the judges, some twenty-and-odd executives of sales and exploitation. The session of those judges assembled at the New York Athletic Club Tuesday was impressive in the serious intensity of attention, the acute and alert interest of those showmen. Seasoned, experienced as they all are, they found fresh challenge to their interest and enthusiasm in the extraordinary array of displays of talent and skill represented in the exploitation campaigns submitted by the contestants.

The earnest interest of these men, surveying this displayed cross-section of the labors and methods of the showmen responsible directly at the box office, was an attest to the endless vitality of the industry, evidence of the inexhaustible resources of intelligent energy which are the industry's real insurance of continued performance and prosperity.

"CURSE," SAYS MR. DRINKWATER

MR. JOHN DRINKWATER, author and dramatist,* is by way of being something of a name in America, and in addition is known as the biographer of one of the famous founders of the motion picture industry. So, it is with special interest that we find Mr. Drinkwater speaking with a remarkable bitterness in disapproval of all things cinema.

"It is my opinion that the discovery of the cinema was an unmitigated curse to mankind," Mr. Drinkwater opined to the Alpha Club at the Grand Central hotel in Belfast.

"Nothing," said Mr. Drinkwater, "has done so much to vulgarize the taste of the world as the cinema." He continued to proclaim to his Irish audience that he expected that "in ten years' time there will be no cinemas as we know them." He says that a new public is being educated, to demand art.

What Mr. Drinkwater thinks is more interesting than important. What he says gives us information, not about his subject, but about Mr. Drinkwater.

As we have said so often before, the motion picture has ever been less a creator of tastes than a revealer of them. Before the coming of the screen serving the millions no one had ever had real opportunity to discover what those millions might like in dramatic expression. As time passes and these millions grow experienced of the art, evolutions in tastes may become apparent.

Mr. Drinkwater is not really making a discovery when he charges, as he does, that the purpose of the motion picture industry is to make money. In our opinion art that is not self-supporting is lacking something of significance.

Again, Mr. Drinkwater confuses the art with the tools. We recall at the moment a conversation between the Herald's Mr. Al Finestone and Mr. Guy Bates Post in Kansas City a few weeks ago, in which Mr. Post observed that the theatre is as alive and vital as ever today, living a new career on the screen. The screen, commented Mr. Post, is the theatre.

MR. HAYS' JOB, AGAIN

ANOTHER hell of a pother in the vaudeville columns of the daily press is being raised over the ill-advised allegations that Mr. Jim Farley has eyes on the job in the movies held by Mr. Will Hays.

The Washington columnists who are responsible for the concoction of the story, and the attendant garnishment charging that the current government activities with reference to motion picture trade practices are a part of the plot, are the real villains of the piece. They have to have copy, at all costs, and they do.

Mr. Farley probably knows that a job in the movies would head him nowhere in the line that his ambitions lead, beginning with an objective of the governorship of New York.

It is also reasonably obvious that the job which Mr. Hays has been doing these many years for the motion picture has required something more than being just a Republican. There are a number of Democrats intimately related to the Roosevelt administration who know a lot more about the business than Mr. Farley and there is also no indication that they want Mr. Hays' job. In fact, there is every indication that the more they know about it the more they stand away.

There are to be sure many who would like Mr. Hays' salary, but few, indeed, who would want the work.

SPEAKING before a scientific gathering in Cleveland this week, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, discussing television, admitted that the researchers are even now dreaming of "Telefactory" transmission by which smells might be broadcast. They need not go to any further trouble. Many present broadcasts approximate the result closely enough.

MINES BUREAU FILMS

Of interest is the report on the annual distribution of films of the Bureau of Mines of the U. S. Department of Interior, which showed the films were exhibited on 54,410 occasions to 4,313,797 persons. There are 3,000 reels in the Bureau's library, the demand so heavy that bookings are for three and four months ahead. Three requests are received for 16 millimeter film to one for 35 mm. . . .

LEGISLATIVE PASSES

Originated by James Hone, secretary of Allied Amusements of the Pacific Northwest, is a plan in which all exhibitors of the state of Washington are cooperating to supply all members of the state legislature, the governor and lieutenant governor with a pass to any film theatre in the state.

A 'PHONE CALL

Something of a record for distance interviews was established last week when the editor of The Asahi, newspaper of Osaka, Japan, interviewed Eddie Cantor in New York and Anna Sten and Samuel Goldwyn in Hollywood, on a three-way telephonic hookup via trans-Pacific telephone service. All four were "on the line" simultaneously. . . .

FILM ARCHIVES

Plans are under way, with the tacit consent of the budget bureau, for reconditioning invaluable war films now deteriorating in the government files. The U. S. Signal Corps is at work on the rehabilitation, to cost about $35,000. An orderly library is the object of the work. . . .

ROSENZWEIG RESIGNS

Charles Rosenzweig this week resigned as general sales manager of First Division because of ill health. He will vacation in Florida. President Harry Thomas will assume the duties "for the time being." . . .

LEGAL VICTORY

Columbia last week scored in court when the Los Angeles superior court upheld a temporary injunction against Jean Parker to prevent her appearance in any films until she has made a second picture for Columbia. Her defense was that the company had made no demand for her services. . . .

UNCLE CARL 68

Marking his twenty-ninth year in the motion picture business, Carl Laemmle, Universal president, last week in Hollywood celebrated his 68th birthday. . . .

ON JOB 30 YEARS

Julius Ehrlich was re-elected treasurer of Local 31, Kansas City, of the IATSE, an office he has held for 30 years without opposition. Other officers: J. R. Sanderson, president; Cyril Donovan, vice-president; Joseph Caldwell, financial secretary; A. T. Brainard, recording secretary; Felix D. Snow, business representative; C. J. Klawson, sergeant-at-arms. . . .

STOCK ISSUES

The Securities and Exchange Commission has ordered effective the application of Harry Cohn, Jack Cohn and Attilio H. Giannini, as voting trustees, for registration on the New York Stock Exchange of 5,023 voting trust certificates on Columbia Pictures common. Also ordered effective is the registration of 4,340 shares of unissued stock of Columbia Pictures on the New York Curb Exchange. . . .

COWARD TO SCREEN

Noel Coward, versatile as playwright, actor and composer, has signed to star in a film to be produced by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur in the East, and tentatively titled "Miracle in 49th Street."

PURE DIALOGUE

American and British film producers should eliminate from their product whatever in the way of dialogue is unintelligible to the people of the other country, Viscount Lee of Fareham, president of Gaumont British Pictures, told the American Chamber of Commerce in London. Films are a great medium of international understanding, he declared, and urged that films, from the standpoint of dialogue, be "100 per cent pure." . . .

TO DROP THEATRES

After 10 years' operation, Dubinsky Brothers will unwillingly relinquish two theatres in Jefferson City, Mo., the Code Authority having dismissed a lease interference case brought by Dubinsky. Their leases on the houses expire Jan. 20, 1936, when Harry Sodin and Joe Levy assume operation. . . .

UNIVERSAL SERIALS

This week Universal announced its schedule of four serials for the 1935-36 season, its twenty-third year of serial production, which began in 1913 with "Lucille Love," with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. Through the 1934-35 season the company has made 104 serials, with negative footage of 2,704,000. . . .

ASCAP WINS

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has won a victory over the state of Washington, contending a state tax on music royalties was illegal, since technically the ASCAP is not doing business in the state. Harry Bottger, California theatre owner, sued in federal court to have the ASCAP dissolved as being in restraint of trade. . . .

ACADEMY AWARDS

Expanding the scope of its recognitions of production merit, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will make 16 awards for film achievement, these to be presented at the Academy's seventh annual dinner dance, February 27. Last year 12 awards were made. . . .

A RODENT HERO

Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Walt Disney's most famous children, were honored in Newark, N. J., federal court last week when the Lionel Corporation, toy train manufacturer, was discharged from receivership. The extraordinary recovery of the firm was due largely, the court revealed, to the popularity of a toy train featuring Mickey and Minnie at Christmas. Disney now is making a cartoon feature.

Paramount and Erpi Confer On Servicing Contracts

Paramount Publix Corporation and Electrical Research Products, Inc., are engaged in discussions of new sound servicing contracts for Paramount houses which, if negotiations are successful, are expected to result in reduced rates for parts in addition to servicing. On Wednesday C. W. Bunn, Erpi general sales manager, said that discussions in progress involve all future relations between his company and Paramount theatres, of which the servicing contracts are a part.

The initial meeting was held by Mr. Bunn in New Orleans last week with Paramount theatre operating partners representing approximately 350 houses. These included Barney Balaban, Karl Hoblitzelle, E. V. Richards, A. H. Blank, R. B. Wilby and William Jenkins. Although no definite agreement resulted, other conferences will be held soon, Mr. Bunn said.

The motion picture industry chose the outstanding showmen of America on Tuesday as 26 leading executives gathered at the New York Athletic Club to select the winners of the 1934 Quigley Grand Award and the Second Grand Award, given annually by Martin Quigley, publisher of Motion Picture Herald.

By majority vote of the judges, Bill Hendricks, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., received the Grand Award for his campaign on Warner's "Six Day Bike Rider," closely followed by Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Loew-Majestic theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., who was named for the Second Grand Award on United Artists' "The Mighty Barnum."

Scoring next highest totals in the voting were Walter Golden, manager, Riverside theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., on United Artists' "Nana," and Sig Solomon, manager of the Regent Theatre, Newark, N. J., on Fox's "Judge Priest."

HENDRICKS AND ROSENTHAL TIED FOR FIRST HONORS IN DECEMBER

All winners of the monthly plaques in the 1934 Quigley Award competitions were eligible for the annual prizes. Mr. Hendricks and Mr. Rosenthal, deadlocked in the December voting, were both listed as winners in that month. Mr. Golden finished first in April and Mr. Solomon was high man in November.

The conference opened promptly at noon, and as the judges arrived they were given voting ballots and itemized numbered lists containing names of the entrants and their campaigns. The entries, also numbered, were arranged upon a long table where they were examined and tabulated, luncheon being delayed until all the judges present cast their votes.

The luncheon was presided over by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, who reviewed the history and accomplishments of the Awards competitions. Mr. Ramsaye then presented Mr. Quigley.

SHOWS JOURNALISM INTEGRATED WITH INDUSTRY, SAYS QUIGLEY

"The activity represented here," said Mr. Quigley, "is a definite part of the process by which we find motion picture journalism integrated with the industry. Functions performed and evidenced here are indication enough that we can and do serve in the furtherance of the constructive works of the business, that the journalism of the motion picture as represented by this work of The Managers' Round Table is not something superimposed upon the industry but a part of it. We are appreciative, too, of the large contribution that is made and continuously being made by the executives around this table, another tribute to the fact that the Round Table of the HERALD is a part of the motion picture industry."

Mr. Ramsaye prefaced his remarks thus:

"This august gathering reminds me much of the time that John Flinn opened a sales convention by looking over a large and costly gathering with the remark: 'Good Morning, Overhead.'

"A lot of the industry's overhead is around this table and it is a tribute to the direct motion picture dollar significance of the efforts of the showmen in the contest of their craft which is brought to focus in the contest which today decides the annual Quigley award for picture exploitation. You may properly be reminded that among the four thousand members of The Managers' Round Table Club there are not less than three thousand active men, and if you will consider a moment how many of your pictures play on a percentage basis you will agree in my calculation that those campaigns out on that table in the next room represent the flower of the effort that had in the last year brought the motion picture industry not less than 65 to 70 per cent of its gross revenue. That's money, and they've done a job."

What the Quigley Awards had actually accomplished in discovering manpower was discussed by A-Mike Vogel, chairman of The Managers' Round Table Club, in pointing out that five promotions already had been made from among the monthly winners in 1934, these recognitions coming about because of the success of these showmen in the monthly competitions. Mr. Vogel also announced the results of the voting. The names of the judges appear on page 9.

Besides the managers mentioned, these also were contenders for the yearly honors:

Charles Curran, Strand, New York City; Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay, Palace, Montreal, Canada; Ken Grimes, Warner Theatre, Morgantown, West Va.; Ed M. Hart, Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J.; R. E. Knight, Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, West Va.; Nevin McCord, Granada, Boise, Idaho; Bob Suits, Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa.; Howard Sweet, State Theatre, East Lansing, Mich., and James M. Totman, Warner Theatre, Erie, Pa.

Monthly Awards, by Theatres

In addition to the Grand Award, Warner theatremen were listed among the Award winners in January, June, July, November and December. Loew managers landed in the winning column in October and December with Mr. Rosenthal of the Loew circuit also winning the annual medal.

The Butterfield circuit was represented in February, Publix Theatres in March, and the Walter Reade circuit in August. Famous Players Canadian theatre men won in May. The Riverside theatre, in Jacksonville, named in April, is listed as an independent house. Both circuit and independent managers shared the many First and Honorable Mentions given in 1934.

Various types of theatres were included among the winners, deluxe first-run houses sharing honors with subsequent operations. Towns as small as East Lansing, Michigan, were included, as were large cities such as New York.

The Quigley Awards, now in their second year, were inaugurated by MOTION PICTURE HERALD through the Managers' Round Table Club, to bring recognition to the efforts of the theatre manager, responsible for the advertising and exploitation campaigns on individual pictures.

Silver Plaques for Months

For this purpose, in 1934, silver plaques were awarded, one each month, for the campaign put on in that month which in the opinion of the judges was the most meritorious of all those submitted. First and Honorable Mention certificates to those finishing next in the voting were also given.

To decide the competitions, three different judges acted each month, these representing the distribution, advertising and exhibition branches respectively. Many of those who served on the 1934 monthly committees participated in Tuesday's judging.

During the past year, presentations of the monthly Awards have been made to the winners in many instances by the Governors of states represented. Presidential Secretary Stephen Early acted in this capacity as did Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania, Postmaster General James A. Farley, Mayor Camillien Houde, of Montreal, Canada; Mayor William N. McNair, of Pittsburgh; Mayor John T. Alsop, of Jacksonville; Joe E. Brown, Warner star, among others.

The state heads represented were William A. Comstock of Michigan, C. Ben Ross of Idaho, David Sholtz of Florida, Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and A. Harry Moore of New Jersey.

The 1934 Quigley Grand Award, exhibited at Tuesday's luncheon, was described and illustrated in the January 13, 1934, issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It measures, over-all, 11 inches wide by 14 inches deep. Lettering and details of design are finished in strong relief, and included are the names of the monthly winners, etched on special plates.

The Second Grand Award is a desk piece, similar in design and execution to the monthly awards and larger in size. Preparations for the formal presentations of both Awards are now underway.

For 1935, it has been decided to award two plaques, silver and bronze, monthly and sheepskin certificates for the First and Honorable Mentions. The two yearly prizes are to be continued.

RCA Board Votes Dividend Arrears

The board of directors of Radio Corporation of America, of which David Sarnoff is president, last week declared dividends covering all arrears on "A" preferred stock of the company. Such dividends have not been paid since the first quarter of 1932. The period covered in the declaration is from April 1, 1932 to December 31, 1934. The total amount to be paid is approximately $4,520,000. Payment will be made on February 19, 1935, to stockholders of record on January 29.

Mr. Sarnoff appointed Henry Kittredge Norton, former treasurer of the subsidiary National Broadcasting Company, as assistant to the president of RCA, Mr. Sarnoff.

David Rosenbloom was elected vice-president and treasurer of the National Broadcasting Company, succeeding Mr. Norton.

Universal Names Hart To Werner Eastern Post

Max Hart, agent, has been named eastern production executive for Universal, succeeding Dave Werner, who resigned recently to enter the agency business. Mr. Hart will handle stories and talent.

Lutheran Council Joins Decency Campaign

The National Lutheran Council, representing 2,000,000 persons, voted unanimously last week to join the campaign against salacious motion pictures. The Council, in addition to agreeing to boycott all films in which there is the slightest doubt insofar as morals are concerned, insisted that Hollywood players must "lead lives that conform to decent standards of society."

Operator Scale Hearing Feb. 1st

NRA Compliance Director Sol A. Rosenblatt on Monday put off for the fourth and, he said, final time the public hearing in Washington on the basic operators' scale for metropolitan New York exhibitors, the new date being set for February 1. Last week the NRA announced the hearing would be held January 25. The session will be in the Oak Room of the Raleigh hotel in Washington.

Attending a meeting of the fact-finding committee in New York, Mr. Rosenblatt ordered that all data tabulated by staticians of Loew's, RKO, Empire Operators' Union, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of New York, and the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, be forwarded to Washington for the hearing.

The delays, Mr. Rosenblatt explained, were due to lack of unanimity by committee members on certain points of the schedule.

It is expected that Local 306 of the ITASE will fight the tentative scale at the Washington hearing, the union objecting to the 30-hour week provision and insisting on the present 40-hour schedule.

In Chicago Ralph O'Hara, organizer for Tom Maloy's operators' union, was indicted by a federal grand jury on a charge of perjury in the Government's investigation of Maloy's income tax returns. O'Hara's bond was set at $15,000 and a capias for his arrest was issued by federal judge John P. Barnes.

Employment provisions in codes will be taken up at the second of the hearings on this subject on January 30, the Review Board announced this week.

Clarification of the National Industrial Recovery Act will be one of the major points of the new legislation which will be sent to Congress by President Roosevelt within the next two months. Numerous plans for giving organized labor what it demands in the way of legislation are being made by various groups within the Administration for submission to the President when he begins consideration of the legislation, it was said this week in Washington.

Labor groups are pressing for a law which would turn collective bargaining over to that group in each establishment which represents a majority of the women.

Another plan has been proposed, however, under which minority groups would be recognized, on the ground that the individual's freedom should not be curtailed by forcing adherence to a group which might be numerically stronger than that with which he is affiliated.

Settlement Approved In Skouras-Central Case

Judge Mack in New York federal court last week approved a settlement whereby Skouras Brothers and Irving Trust Company withdrew claims totaling $180,000 against the Central New York Theatres, in bankruptcy, in consideration of the withdrawal of claims totaling $100,000 against them.

The settlement must be submitted now to the special master in the Central Theatres proceedings.

U. S. AMASSING ANTITRUST DATA IN SIX AREAS AS ST. LOUIS ECHO

Cummings Hints Justice Department Is Studying Fox W. C. Theatres' Operations Following Complaints of Exhibitors

Department of Justice agents are working with usual secretiveness in half a dozen territories, it is understood, collecting evidence that might be used to further the Government's investigation into alleged antitrust activities by distributor-circuits in their product relations with competing independent exhibitors.

Speculating as to the centers of the investigators' operations, industry factors were giving an eye particularly to the territories of Atlanta, Cleveland, Kansas City, Los Angeles, New Orelans and Philadelphia, as possible scenes of action similar to that taken three weeks ago in St. Louis. That inquiry resulted in the federal grand jury returning indictments, asked for by the Department of Justice, against Warner, RKO and Paramount, in connection with complaints from the independently owned Ambassador, Grand Central and Missouri downtown first-runs.

In Washington, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings declared no official "plans" had been made for further prosecutions, but he did say that complaints about large distributors had been received from independent owners in various sections and these were being studied. He said, too, that the special assistants to his office who had conducted the St. Louis grand jury presentation were, as is generally known, now in Los Angeles. The inference was that the Department was studying the Fox West Coast Theatres' operations which have brought bulk complaints from exhibitors in California.

Denies Plans Made

The attorney general's denial that plans actually have been made for further prosecutions were considered to mean little, particularly in the face of his comment that unless a matter reached a stage where it was considered possible of, or ready for a federal grand jury hearing preliminary to court proceedings, it did not ordinarily come to his attention, but is handled by subalterns.

The Department of Justice would have no "plan," since it takes each case into court on its individual merits. Furthermore, it is said to be the usual policy of the Department to bring no prosecution unless it believes it has more than an even chance of successful prosecution.

In any event, the Justice Department is weighing the value of progress made in the St. Louis case. And so is the state of Missouri, which has in mind possible prosecution independently under state statutes.

A legal definition of the word "commodities" may decide whether Missouri's attorney general, Roy McKittrick, will prosecute Warner, RKO and Paramount. The attorney general found that the Missouri antitrust laws specifically cover conspiracy to control prices of commodities.

The territory of Atlanta, and especially Florida, was reported to be under surveillance of the Department of Justice investigators who, it was said, have gathered considerable evidence from independents charging inability to buy product. It is not likely, however, that a southeastern case would be prosecuted before the Department acts in Los Angeles.

Explaining his situation as paralleling that in St. Louis, Earl Seitz in Cleveland indicated this week that he would proceed with a complaint in federal court against Warner Brothers, charging conspiracy to restrain trade at his State theatre at Sandusky. Mr. Seitz's difficulties have gone through the motion picture code machinery without relief.

In Kansas City, independent owners were considering a petition to the Department of Justice against distributors' trade practices.

President Roosevelt, 20 California congressmen, Senators Borah and Nye, Congressmen Culkin and Celler and Attorney General Cummings heard echoes of California exhibitors' demands for a federal investigation into distributing and exhibiting conditions in that state. Each received letters stating that a monopoly existing for many years has forced exhibitors to sign contracts wholly favorable to the distributor if the exhibitors wish to remain in business.

New Orleans Inquiry Reported

Compulsory block booking, the forcing of short subjects and newsreels with features, and percentage contracts prevent theatre owners from making a profit, it was charged, and virtually make the producer-distributor a partner in the business of the independent exhibitor, without any investment by the producer-distributor and without his sharing any of the exhibitors' losses.

From Washington came unconfirmed reports that the President personally may hear some of the California exhibitors' charges of monopolistic practices in that state, especially as they relate to Fox West Coast theatres.

Exchange Row in New Orleans appeared quite concerned over a gush of rumors about a possible investigation similar to the St. Louis inquiry. Film interests remembered that Henry Lazarus, New Orleans independent owner, had been appealing to Washington for months. Recently Mr. Lazarus charged malfeasance by the entire personnel of the New Orleans Grievance and Clearance boards.

From Philadelphia, too, came word of antitrust prosecutions. The Independent Exhibitors' Association of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware issued notice in its weekly bulletin that, "in this territory it is altogether likely that a couple of important antitrust actions will be started within the next few weeks by independent exhibitors who have exhausted every avenue of peaceful settlement of their grievances. Monopoly is more rampant here than probably anywhere else in the United States."

Circuit Attacks RKO-Loew Deal

Charging conspiracy through a metropolitan product agreement of September between RKO and Loew's, Inc., the Meyer & Schneider theatre operating company of New York last week placed RKO in a position where, if the M. & S. charges are sustained, its agreement with Loew's may be nullified and result in a film shortage for RKO. Counsel for the plaintiffs is Max D. Steuer.

M & S charged a breach of lease provisions under which RKO was said to have agreed to play all first runs at the Hollywood and Apollo theatres day and date with the Academy and Jefferson.

Under the provisions of the RKO-Loew's product agreement of last September, whereby Loew's released all Fox product and half of Universal and Columbia to RKO for situations not in conflict with Loew's, RKO was prevented from carrying out its first-run playing agreement with M. & S. in the Hollywood and Apollo, the plaintiffs said. These two houses, leased by RKO from M & S, are in competition with Loew's Delancey and Avenue B, and thus were prevented from playing RKO product day and date with the Academy and Jefferson, the complaint said.

A board of arbitrators was named to hear the dispute Tuesday at the New York County Lawyers Association.

It was reported that an offer to settle for $225,000 had been rejected by RKO. After an all-day hearing by a board of arbitrators Tuesday, the session was adjourned until Thursday.

Bruce Bromley of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, and I. E. Lambert, RKO theatre attorney, are representing RKO.

Des Moines Organizes Variety Club Chapter

A Variety Club is being organized in Des Moines with R. M. Copeland heading the list of temporary officers. Others are Hale Cavanagh, Hal Sheridan, W. E. Banford, Lou Patz. Thus far 53 have applied for membership.

The Variety Club of Milwaukee has selected permanent quarters in the Plankinton Hotel. Art Schmitz has succeeded H. J. Fitzgerald as treasurer, Mr. Fitzgerald having resigned the post, but retained his membership. The Columbus Variety Club will hold its annual banquet at the Deshler Wallick Hotel, February 3.

J. P. Kennedy in Hollywood

Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, and former motion picture executive, was in Hollywood last week from Washington for talks with Will H. Hays and Robert Montgomery, member of the actors' committee seeking a code of fair practices for players.

THERE'S THEATRE FOR EVERY 8,590 IN U. S. AND A SEAT FOR EACH 13

Total of 816 More Houses in Operation Than a Year Ago and 1,136 More Than at Turn of 1933, Reflecting Upturn

There is in the United States one motion picture theatre seat for every 13 inhabitants, and there is only one theatre to serve every 8,590 persons. Yet, distributors were serving film to 816 more theatres, seating 600,000, on January 1 than on the same date a year ago, and to 1,136 more theatres, with a capacity of 700,000, than at the turn of 1933, indicating the extent of the steady improvement reflected in the motion picture business during the general upturn the past two years.

Virtually all of these new theatre customers created since 1932 reopened existing properties, new construction having been negligible. There has been, however, a tendency to remove on the wholesale all antiquated srtuctures in the theatre field, also those with insufficient seating capacities, as reflected in the following four-year analysis of the motion picture theatre properties:

| JAN. 1 | PROPERTIES STANDING | THEATRES OPERATING |
|---|---|---|
| 1935 ....... | 18,263 | 14,552 |
| 1934 ....... | 18,371 | 13,736 |
| 1933 ....... | 19,311 | 13,416 |
| 1932 ....... | 20,100 | 14,750 |

During this period the average seating capacity per theatre for the country as a whole increased from 535 seats in 1932, to 599 in 1933, 600 in 1934, and 610 on January 1st, 1935, and although there were 1,837 fewer structures standing at the beginning of this year than at the same time in 1932, there were 365,000 more seats, total capacities of all theatres—operating and not—having fluctuated since 1932 as follows:

| JAN. 1 | PROPERTIES STANDING | TOTAL CAPACITIES |
|---|---|---|
| 1935 ....... | 18,263 | 11,132,595 |
| 1934 ....... | 18,371 | 11,028,950 |
| 1933 ....... | 19,311 | 11,161,193 |
| 1932 ....... | 20,100 | 10,767,411 |

These and other foregoing conclusions were drawn from reports made this week by the Film Boards of Trade of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and which were taken from customer records on film service appearing on the books of the eight large distributors and their exchanges in the field.

Further evidence of the results of the trend toward fewer but larger and successful theatre operations is obtained by comparing the 9,719,537 seats in the 14,552 theatres now operating with the total capacity of 10,767,411 seats in all of the 14,750 opened and 5,350 closed properties in 1932—the deduction being 5,548 less theatres on January 1st and only 1,047,874 fewer seats.

The silent theatre has disappeared to the point where today there are only 50 operating, and none is on a full-week schedule—probably local civic or municipal halls in the remotest sections, yet carried as customers on the distributors' books. The story of the slow but certain death of the silent nickelodeon is told in these compilations:

| | TOTAL THEATRES | | CLOSED THEATRES | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| JAN. 1 | SOUND | SILENT | SOUND | SILENT |
| 1935 | 16,325 | 1,938 | 1,824 | 1,887 |
| 1934 | 15,652 | 2,719 | 1,979 | 2,656 |
| 1933 | 15,231 | 4,080 | 2,170 | 3,725 |
| 1932 | 14,805 | 5,295 | 1,582 | 3,757 |

Sound theatre structures, both open and closed, have increased, then, some 1,520 since 1932, the while all unwired theatres, operating and not, have decreased 3,357 in the same period, and it is quite unlikely that any of the 1,887 so-called "silent" theatres now in the dark will ever reopen with other than a talking picture policy. It is reasonable to assume, too, that the 50 silent houses now operating will one day soon give way to the scientific advancement of the screen.

There are 1,640 fewer theatres of all types closed today than on January 1st, 1932, when 5,350 were out of operation, compared with 5,895 in 1933, 4,635 in 1934 and 3,711 in January of this year. Some 1,824 of these properties, all equipped for sound, could be reopened at almost any time. The entire group of 3,711 theatres now closed have 1,413,058 seats.

Affiliated circuits have added some 139 properties since January 1st, 1934, although at this time they have as a whole 193 fewer theatres than in 1933. The so-called "unaffiliated" circuits, many of them formerly controlled by the large producer-exhibitors, made greater expansion progress in 1933, increasing their holdings by 224 theatres, from 2,846 in January, 1934, to 3,070. The independent owners lost ground, listed in this connection showing 13,120 this year, compared with 13,571 in 1934 and 13,796 in 1933. All of these totals, of course, include theatres operating and closed. Based on seating capacities, holdings of these three groups are as follows (embracing theatres open and closed):

AFFILIATED CIRCUITS

| | TOTAL THEATRES | SEATING CAPACITIES |
|---|---|---|
| 1935 ...... | 2,073 | 2,718,701 |
| 1934 ...... | 1,954 | 2,586,643 |
| 1933 ...... | 2,266 | 2,937,644 |

UNAFFILIATED CIRCUITS

| | TOTAL THEATRES | SEATING CAPACITIES |
|---|---|---|
| 1935 ...... | 3,070 | 2,539,416 |
| 1934 ...... | 2,846 | 2,493,382 |
| 1933 ...... | 3,189 | 2,561,726 |

INDEPENDENT THEATRES

| | TOTAL THEATRES | SEATING CAPACITIES |
|---|---|---|
| 1935 ...... | 13,120 | 5,874,478 |
| 1934 ...... | 13,571 | 5,948,925 |
| 1933 ...... | 13,796 | 5,585,830 |

In the analysis above of affiliated circuit properties the wide difference between the totals of 2,266 theatres controlled on January 1st, 1933, and the 1,954 on January 1st, 1934, gives effect to the nationwide decentralization by which some of the large circuits, especially Paramount, divested their holdings on the wholesale. However, the 2,073 total listed at this time indicates that they are reclaiming some of these properties. In any event the affiliated circuits still have 200,000 less seats than in 1932.

Average Seating Capacity Increases; Only 50 Silent Theatres Operating; 1,640 More Houses Dark at Start of 1932

Some indication of the improvement in motion picture business may be had in the following comparison of theatres open at the turn of the year:

|---|---|
| 1935 ........................ | 14,552 |
| 1934 ........................ | 13,736 |
| 1933 ........................ | 13,416 |
| 1932 ........................ | 14,750 |

The industry has not yet felt the real effects of the business deflation at the end of 1931 to have sufficient cause to darken theatres. That began to happen soon after January of 1932.

It appears that many hundreds of the "silent" and dark theatres would be found among the theatres listed in the table in the center column which shows independent theatres, open and closed.

Czechs May Open Market Further

Indications in New York last week were to the effect that Czechoslovakia may permit the export of capital from the country by American film companies, as an outgrowth of the recently concluded quota agreement. The agreement, which opens the Czech market to American films, fixes an import fee of 20,000 crowns ($850) per picture, covering an unlimited number of prints

The actual distribution of American films in Czechoslovakia has been set for Feb. 8.

The Ministry of Commerce of Czechoslovakia recently announced the appointment of Dr. Alos Rathausky as chairman of the Czech Motion Picture Advisory Committee. Other members are: Dr. Joseph Piskac, Dr. Adolf Prusa (director, Ocean Film Co.), representing the Czechoslovak film industry; Milos Havel (owner, A. B. Studio), representing the Czechoslovak producers, and Vladimir Wokoun, president of the Association of Czechoslovakian Exhibitors. Alternates include Beda Heller, Dr. Joseph Ort, John Reiter and Bohumil Sottner.

The ministry of foreign affairs is represented by Joseph Palivec, director of the ministry's press service. Dr. A. Matula represents the Ministry of Education.

It is understood the move of Czechoslovakia may lead to similar action by Poland.

Warner will open an office in Poland shortly, supervised by Robert Schless.

CODE AUTHORITY HEARS FIRST PRODUCER CASE

Bellman Charges Breach of Contract Against Goldsmith and Others; Burr Accuses Majestic

The Code Authority last week heard, for the first time, a dispute involving producers and distributors when an appeal committee composed of Austin C. Keough, Paul Burger and Joseph Seider heard a complaint of Jack Bellman, president of Hollywood Exchanges. Mr. Bellman charged breach of contract in his complaint against Goldsmith Productions, Ltd., Ken Goldsmith, Mascot, Majestic, Standard Film Exchanges and Gold Medal Film Company. Mr. Bellman contended that he holds a contract with Goldsmith, the producer, for distribution of "Little Men," and that, instead of turning over the prints for his territories, Goldsmith made the picture for Mascot, leaving Hollywood Exchanges with contracts for 100 theatres which it cannot serve.

The initial Code Authority committee hearing on the complaint was held Wednesday and continued Thursday.

Settlement Proposal Fails

The Wednesday session ended with a recommendation that the litigants make efforts to settle the case among themselves, but such action failed to materialize.

George Moser and John Golder of Hollywood Exchanges in Buffalo and Philadelphia, respectively, testified they had been selling "Little Men" for some time and had not been instructed to stop.

Mr. Bellman testified that he had entered into an arrangement with Ken Goldsmith June 6, 1933, for six pictures, one of which was "Little men." He said he had advertised and sold this picture to his accounts under terms of his contract and had not been advised directly by Goldsmith that the picture would not be delivered. Mr. Bellman added that he had learned through trade publications some time ago that Mascot was making the film with Goldsmith supervising.

Through counsel, Jacob Schechter, Mr. Bellman charged that Mascot and Goldsmith conspired to take the picture away from him.

Counsel for Mascot held that Mr. Bellman's contract was with Goldsmith Productions and did not provide that Mr. Goldsmith himself should not make the picture.

Burr Charges Violations

It was brought out also that Mr. Bellman had signed for eight Ken Maynard pictures to be produced by C. C. Burr and that these will not be delivered because Mr. Burr's option has expired and he is making the series for Mascot. Mr. Burr last week charged violations of the fair practice provisions of the code in a complaint naming Morris Small, Larry Darmour and Majestic Pictures, alleging that Maynard, under contract for the eight pictures, had broken his contract and signed with Darmour and Majestic. This case also will be heard by the Code Authority in New York.

The first real test of the constitutionality of the industrial recovery act, one section of which was declared invalid on January 7, will come within the next few weeks when the United States supreme court hears arguments on an Alabama federal court case holding invalid both the recovery act and the lumber code.

A flare-up over protection in Kansas City came when independent exhibitors made formal demands that the Independent Theatre Owners take immediate action on their protest that Fox Midwest is being favored by distributors.

David T. Wilentz, New Jersey attorney general, probably will be retained by the Allied States unit to represent Julius Charnow, of the Leonia theatre at Leonia, in his fight against Code Authority delay in ruling on his complaint against the Loew and Skouras circuits for clearance relief.

The Motion Picture Laboratories Association rejected the laboratory code.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA compliance director, announced on Wednesday that producer members of the producer-actor committee will be given an opportunity to file a reply to the brief submitted to the NRA several weeks ago by the actors' group.

Plan Reciprocal Trade Agreement with Canada

The state department at Washington this week announced plans to negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement with Canada. Compiled figures indicate that exports of films to the Dominion, one of the more important items, have declined heavily since 1929, decreasing from 19,536,149 linear feet, valued at $793,983, in that year, to 12,273,149 feet, valued at $448,075, in 1934.

It was indicated that the committee for reciprocity information would receive written statements from those interested up to March 11 and will hold a public hearing on March 18.

De Grandcourt Sails to Join Gaumont British

Charles de Grandcourt, for many years in charge of trailer production for National Screen Service, was scheduled to sail for England on the Berengaria on Friday to join Gaumont British in London. Mr. de Grandcourt will serve as an advisor on story and name values for the American market.

AMPA Naked Truth Dinner Set for April 27

The annual Naked Truth Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York will be held at the Hotel Astor April 27, although with a change in the name of the event. Reservations will be limited to 1,000. Paul Benjamin and Marvin Kirsch head the committee on arrangements, Si Seadler that in charge of the show. Tickets are priced at $5 for members, $7.50 for non-members.

Reorganizing of FWC Is Near

Paving the way for immediate reorganization of Fox West Coast, Marshall Square Theatres, operating the Orpheum in San Francisco, and Harry L. Hartman, operating the Orpheum in San Diego, on Tuesday amicably settled a joint suit against FWC. The monopoly charges by the two independents had held up approval of the FWC plan, which was expected to go into effect January 1.

The three-year struggle to solve the financial and structural problems of the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses in New York is still unsolved, with little hope of solution in sight and with a great deal of hindrance in the wrangling of attorneys representing divergent interests. The chief contention is between the receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, Milton C. Weisman, and the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee.

Mr. Weisman has filed a claim of $5,750,000 against Fox Metropolitan on behalf of Fox Theatres' stock ownership in that circuit. The Fox Theatres' receivers who preceded Mr. Weisman's present term in that post regarded this claim as worth no more than $4,500,000 and indicated they would be willing to settle for $1,000,000. Mr. Weisman refused to accept such a settlement and filed the claim in the increased amount. The bondholders' committee contends that Fox Metropolitan is insolvent and intimates, in effect, that the stock certificates are worthless.

Morton G. Bogue, of Beekman, Bogue & Clark, counsel for the committee, clashed frequently with Mr. Weisman at a hearing in New York on Thursday. Finally, Federal Judge Julian W. Mack said that unless some plan of reorganization evolved soon, the company might be thrown back into a detrimental receivership or even bankruptcy.

"I am quite willing to sit down with the parties in interest," Judge Mack said.

Judge Mack granted applications by both the bondholders' committee and the Fox Theatres' receiver for leave to intervene. The motion of each was opposed by the other, but the court permitted both applications.

The committee will now proceed with its effort to obtain acceptances of the reorganization plan prior to formal filing with the court.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Paramount will find a heartwarming quality to the comment on Mae West of George Jean Nathan, "the cocksure critic," in his new book, "Passing Judgment." Said Nathan: "What the movie audiences had been privileged to see before, over a period years, had been nothing but an endless succession of imported Lesbians, spindle-shanked, flat-chested flappers, forty-year-old Baby Dolls, beauty-parlor imitations of women and Sylvia-massaged stringbeans, in not one of whom there was enough real, genuine, honest-to-goodness female quality to interest even a vegetarian cannibal. In the midst of this dearth, the Mlle. West came like a rainfall, a veritable torrent, upon a dry desert. Here, unmistakably, whatever anyone might think of her art, was a woman, a female. No little dried-up cutie, no pretty little narrow-shouldered skeleton of a chicken, no parched and skinny pseudo-vamp, no trumped-up, artificial siren, but a good, large, round, oldtime, 1890-model woman, with 'woman' up and down and sidewise written plainly on her every feature."

Which reminds us of the recent marquee billing of a Hobart, Indiana, theatre, advertising: Mae West—"Belle of the Nighties."

TWENTY-SIX YEARS AGO the profitable advertising columns of the Saturday Evening Post told variously of Union Carbide's new acetylene gas for rural homes, of the availability, through Lowe Brothers, Dayton, Ohio, of the first liquid paint, and of a most generous offer to anyone in the country to enter one of the newest and "biggest paying" businesses—the movie business.

We have in hand from Universal Pictures, Rockefeller Center, New York, on this occasion of another "Laemmle Jubilee"—Uncle Carl's 26th—a copy of the first advertisement that nearing-seventy Carl Laemmle ever placed in a national advertising medium. It appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, in 1908, winter, and contained a picture of a sprightly, just-turned-forty Laemmle standing behind a desk-model projector of the times.

"I Am the Moving Picture Man," boldly declared the advertisement, Laemmle-wise. "I will start men and women in the moving picture business at nominal cost—sell them the machine and outfit, and give them every assistance to make the business prosperous. It is a golden opportunity, the biggest paying business for the amount invested in the world, So Simple and Easily Maintained That Anyone May Embark in It With My Aid." (The italics in this case are ours.)

"Write me at once for my free book, "How to Start a Moving Picture Business," modestly urged Mr. Laemmle, whose Lammle Film Service was just getting started at 196 Lake Street, in windy Chicago.

Today, Universal will give ten dollars for a copy of that booklet, "and a lot of gratitude will go with it," so they tell us.

Mr. Laemmle had three theatres at the time and an eye peeled toward a film exchange. He figured that if he got people into the business they would be his film customers. He did induce one Frank Nowak to engage therein, and Mr. Nowak, in 1909, set up the Lincoln theatre of 299 seats at Broadway and Titus Street in Buffalo. Last week Mr. Nowak, P.C. (Professor of Celluloidia), signed his 26th consecutive Universal yearly product contract—said by Universal to be a world's record. The same Lincoln has been remodeled, rejuvenated, rehabilitated and reconstructed four times since those days when Mr. Nowak, charging a nickel admission, got from Universal a whole week's film service of daily changes for $15, and, at the same time, paid to his projectionist the important daily wage of $2.

There was no problem then of getting folks into the theatre. The ingenuity was applied to getting 'em out, every few minutes, and, one day, Mr. Laemmle made a personal visit to Buffalo to see how Mr. Nowak got around the problem. At Universal they tell us that Mr. Laemmle dragged along with him on that trip a "wild-eyed urchin." The "urchin" is now known in the more polite circles of Hollywood as Junior Laemmle.

One day we hope to have a peek on a screen of Mr. Laemmle's personal library of motion pictures of the world's greatest men, a library which any newsreel—including his own—would willingly admit is valuable. It has been in the making since 1908, and only Uncle Carl's personal friends ever see it. Many of the incidents were filmed during Mr. Laemmle's aggregate 500,400 miles of traveling the globe. Carl Laemmle will not deny that traveling is his best liked relaxation—next to poker and horse racing.

Soon there will arrive on these shores from Europe a Mr. S. Bernadotte, director of motion pictures at Nordic's small studio at Stockholm. Mr. Bernadotte, accompanied by his wife, will travel quietly from New York to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios at Culver City to study our production.

Ordinarily such an expedition from the Continent over the Atlantic to Hollywood would rate only passing recognition in the press. But, this gentleman will be treated to a typographical banquet; he is Prince Sigvard, strong-minded son of Sweden's too monarchistic Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf. "Sigie," as our tabloids undoubtedly will headline him, gave up his title and his right to the kingship of Sweden, last year, to marry Fraulein Erika Patzek, German motion picture player, an incident over which pop kicked up a fuss that was heard 'round the world. And Hollywood is searching everywhere for stories.

APPEALS COURT TO RULE ON THEATRE GIVEAWAYS

Huffman Carries Auto Ticket Draw to High Bench; Writ Prevents Film Stoppage

Constitutionality of the motion picture code clause prohibiting the awarding of a valuable prize to a theatre patron holding the "lucky" ticket in a drawing will be tested in the United States circuit court of appeals by Harry Huffman, Colorado theatre owner. Mr. Huffman last week obtained from the federal appellate division a restraining order against exchanges which had been ordered by the Code Authority to discontinue film service for his persistent refusal to stop the practice of awarding prizes.

With the Government stepping in, Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA compliance director, obtained counsel from the U. S. attorney general's staff, headed by Whitten White.

Mr. Huffman, who has fought the case for weeks through the lower courts, had been refused an injunction against the exchanges in the United States district court and then took an appeal. Judge J. Foster Symes had refused the injunction because he held that the decision of the Denver Grievance Board ordering discontinuance of the giveaway practice was entitled to great weight with the court.

The code clause involved, Section 1, Part 3, Article V-E ("Unfair Practices"), has been the subject of much controversy in recent weeks between exhibitors, the courts and Grievance Boards, as to what constituted a lottery. The code clause says: "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced scrip books, coupons, throwaway tickets, or by two-for-one admissions. . . ."

The code administration officials are not interested in whether there exists a local or state law prohibiting lotteries, merely ruling adversely in this connection on socalled "giveaway" cases in which a patron must purchase admission in order to participate in the awarding of a prize given in a drawing to the holder of the ticket or coupon.

Ordered Service Stopped

The Denver Grievance Board had ordered local exchanges to cease serving Mr. Huffman with films unless he complied with their order to cease a weekly auto giveaway. Mr. Huffman refused and went into court asking a temporary injunction. When this was denied he asked for a restraining order until an appeal could be heard. This was refused by Judge Symes on the ground that Mr. Huffman could stop the auto giveaways and still get films. Mr. Huffman then went before Judge Orrie L. Phillips of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, who issued the restraining order against the exchanges. Presiding Judge Robert E. Lewis also signed the order. The case is set for hearing at Oklahoma City on January 24 at 10 a. m.

According to Denver attorneys, if Judge Symes had issued the restraining order it would have been effective until the appeal on the temporary injunction could be heard, possibly a matter of a year, but with the issuance by the Circuit Court of Appeals it is only effective until the first opportunity the court can give to hear the case on its merits, and usually takes precedence over other matters.

In his request to the circuit court, Mr. Huffman argued that without a restraining order the "distributors will so violate their contracts and cease such deliveries (of films) which will result in great, irreparable and continuing damage and injury to the appellants; and that the only other alternatives will be or would be to surrender their constitutional rights, privileges and immunities and to obey, bow to and acquiesce in the unauthorized, unconstitutional and unlawful edicts and orders of said Denver Grievance Board."

In refusing the first request made to him to grant the injunction, Judge Symes refused not only to rule on the constitutionality of the code or the NRA, but he also refused to rule whether Mr. Huffman was engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce. This last issue was one of Mr. Huffman's main contentions—that being engaged only in intrastate commerce, and not having assented to either the code or the NRA, he was not subject to either. Judge Symes ruled that the Grievance Board had acted in compliance with law, and that their decision represented the views of the industry as a whole, and should be obeyed.

Says Plan Was Changed

Judge Symes reviewed the history of the auto giveaways briefly. He said that when the drawings were started they were strictly a lottery, since no tickets were given out unless one attended a Huffman theatre and was in the theatre on the night of the drawing. Later the plan was changed, tickets being distributed free in front of his theatres and in drug stores and other public places. Judge Symes held this constituted a change in form and not in substance, since most of the tickets were still obtained by theatre patrons.

Out of 534,000 auto chances given out in July, 354,000 were given to theatre patrons, while 180,000 were distributed elsewhere.

Judge Symes stated that the plan was in essence gambling and played on the cupidity of the public, and at present it lay in the doubtful zone of the law, but that he would not rule on the legality of it.

The Government's attorney attempted to have the case thrown out, claiming that Mr. Huffman "did not come into court with clean hands." Judge Symes ruled that had nothing to do with the case, that Mr. Huffman had a right to be heard, since the case was on the equity side of the court.

Declared Needed Protection

Mr. Huffman attempted to show that the distributors and the Grievance Board were in a conspiracy to boycott any who refused to obey their edicts. Judge Symes refused to consider this angle, saying the distributors signed the code, believing it to be law, and were merely carrying out orders. The seven distributors involved introduced a letter which stated that they felt bound to obey the orders of the Grievance Board unless ordered to do otherwise by a court of jurisdiction. Judge Symes held there was not a vestige of evidence proving conspiracy on the part of the distributors or the board. He took the attitude that Mr. Huffman was in effect asking the court to approve of a chance drawing and refused to do so principally on this ground. Judge Symes further pointed out that some of the picture contracts had a section making the code a part, and he also ruled that any contract carried the law of the land as part, whether specified or not.

Mr. Huffman's appeal bond was set at $2,500 by Judge Symes, and doubled later by the appellate judges.

SOCIAL INSURANCE PLAN AND PATENT POOL INQUIRY BILL TOUCH ON FILMS

California Tax Measures Would Exact Heavy Toll From Hollywood; 10 Per Cent Admission Levy Asked in Indiana

President Roosevelt's social insurance program carrying with it the hint of additonal taxes for producers, distributors and exhibitors, this week took precedence over everything else at the Capitol.

Under the legislation introduced to make effective the President's social insurance program, employers in the film industry would be subjected, beginning January 1, 1936, to a payroll tax for unemployment insurance and, a year later, to another tax for old-age insurance.

The legislation calls for joint effort by the Federal and state governments, employers and, in the case of old-age insurance, employees. The payroll tax will start at one per cent for unemployment insurance and by January 1, 1938, is to reach its maximum of three per cent. The payroll tax for old-age insurance will start at one-half of one per cent, increasing by 1957 to 2 1-2 per cent. Employees also are to contribute to the old-age insurance fund, at the rate of one-half of one per cent of their earnings. It is provided that no tax shall apply on that portion of a payroll representing non-manual employees receiving more than $250 per month.

Provision is made for crediting to employers' tax payments up to 90 per cent of whatever they may contribute to state unemployment insurance funds.

To Investigate Patent Pools

A measure providing for an investigation of patent pools, some of which, it is charged, are operated for monopolistic purposes, or to eliminate fair competition, has been sponsored by Representative William I. Sirovich, of New York, who in past sessions has devoted considerable attention to the motion picture industry.

Fairly definite proof that this will be so is seen in the statement this week by Mr. Sirovich that, while there are from 20 to 30 industries in which patent pools or licenses are a factor, he is interested in Electrical Research Products, Incorporated, in addition to the radio broadcasting industry and in radio receiving set licenses. He stressed, however, that he has no one industry in mind in respect to this particular bill.

The measure to require the filing of pool or license agreements would be referred to the House patents committee, of which he is chairman, Mr. Sirovich explained, thereby affording him the needed excuse for an investigation of the patent situation. His effort to approach that end by means of a resolution directly calling for an investigation was rendered unsuccessful by the reference of the measure to the rules committee, which is usually reluctant to grant investigatory powers except where approved by the Administration.

As a result of numerous requests from outside sources for an investigation, and also because of the numerous changes in the personnel of the House immigration committee, bringing into the group a number of men who are not familiar with the situation, it is considered more than probable that hearings will be held on Congressman Dickstein's bill applying the contract labor provisions of the immigration laws to alien actors.

Senator Black and Representative Lloyd were reported behind a bill to regulate salaries of film persons earning more than $25,000 yearly.

State Legislatures Active

In the field throughout the week various state legislatures were considering bills designed to pinch the pockets of exhibitors and distributors a little bit tighter during the ensuing year.

In California the state's politicians regard the organized production branch of the industry in Hollywood as the most logical source of much-needed revenue, and bills have been introduced which will hit producers' incomes. While Governor Merriam last week delayed until Friday presenting his budget message to the Legislature at Sacramento, Democratic forces hurled bombshells at the state's deficit problem with a barrage of tax bills. Foremost among these was one proposing a levy up to 75 per cent on incomes, and, as Hollywood's payroll amounts to $76,000,000 annually, the industry would be heavily hit. Another California bill proposes a boost in corporation franchise taxes from two to six per cent. Other taxes expected are censorship taxes, a producers' tax and admission taxes. Senator Sharkey has introduced a bill to continue the sales tax at two and one-half per cent instead of permitting a reduction to two per cent on June 30.

Ask Theatre Exemptions

With evidence proving that millions of dollars in Denver theatre investments have been lost in the past few years, exhibitors in that territory hope to convince the Colorado Legislature, now in session, that it should pass theatres by.

A bill, allowing Sunday motion pictures in Delaware, is being prepared for introduction in the House of the state legislature at Dover by Representative Dr. Willard R. Pierce, of Milford. The bill will contain a clause providing for a tax of three cents on each ticket of admission. Another bill would create a state censor.

A bill taxing all Indiana theatres 10 per cent of admission receipts was introduced in the House Tuesday by Robert L. Stanton.

In Massachusetts a bill prohibiting children under 14 years from seeing films "except as they are suitable for children," has been placed before the legisature by Representative Thomas A. Dorgan of Dorchester.

Missouri theatres would be saddled with a 2 per cent gross tax if a movement in the state legislature succeeds. Governor Park, who has recommended a 1 per cent tax, has said he would not be opposed to 2 per cent.

A New York measure would require licensing of imported foreign films.

Bernerd to Realign Gaumont British

Arrival in New York last week of Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager of Gaumant British, for a six-week survey, augurs many changes in the executive and sales set-up of the American division. Mr. Bernerd said he had plans for realignment of various departments, but declined to go into detail. He will report his findings to Mark Ostrer, Gaumont chairman, scheduled to arrive in New York in a month.

"My purpose is to strengthen, not modify, the Gaumont British set-up," Mr. Bernerd said. "Gaumont during the 1933-34 season had its biggest year and the company's feature pictures are breaking records in English theatres."

It is said John Maxwell of B.I.P. offered the committee of investigation of General Theatres, a Gaumont theatre enterprise and the target of some of its stockholders, a deal whereby he would take over the preference shares controlling General Theatres and that he stands willing either to offer cash or an exchange of A.B.P. stock. The Maxwell interests further are expected to take over United Picture Theatres, previously managed by Gaumont, but since July controlled by a receiver for the debenture holders.

In New York, Arnold Van Leer this week resigned as exploitation chief of Gaumont. Lou Guimond also resigned last week from the Gaumont publicity department. Sam Warshawsky took over the company's pressbook production.

Boettiger Weds Anna Roosevelt

Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall, daughter of President Roosevelt, and John Boettiger, former Washington correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, who recently joined the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, were married quietly and unexpectedly at the Roosevelt town house in New York last week. The ceremony was performed by Presiding Justice Frederic Kernochan of New York special sessions court, an old friend of the President.

Present at the ceremony were Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother; Mrs. James Roosevelt, Jr., wife of the President's eldest son; Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, John Roosevelt, the President's youngest son; Henry S. Hooker, former law partner of the President, and William Astor Chanler, assistant corporation counsel of New York.

Mrs. Boettiger divorced Curtis B. Dall in Nevada last July. Mr. Boettiger had been divorced by his first wife in Chicago in July, 1933. The couple are expected to live in New York.

BROADWAY STAGE GETS AROUND TO PRICE CUTS; $2 TOP IS GOAL

But Paucity of Good Plays Is Found Real Problem, with Fledgling Playwrights Flown to Other Fields of Endeavor

Six New York Managers Voluntarily Reduce Top Price as Much as One-third, Though League Still Remains Silent

By FRED AYER

Broadway, after five years of stupor despite the oft-repeated question, "What is wrong with the theatre?", is waking up at last to the fact that at least a partial answer may be found in admission price reductions. To better organized enterprises, such as the motion picture or automobile industry, the natural weapon against the general retrogression was a lower retail price. Not so with the unorganized business of the legitimate theatre.

Now, however, with the end of the depression in sight, many New York managers are doing what it is agreed they all should have done in 1930 and 1931. Admission prices are being pared to a level within pocketbook reach of many more persons.

Although no official action has yet been taken through the League of New York Theatres, composed of Broadway producers and managers, a drive to reduce prices is on, with the approval of such Broadway managers as Herman Shumlin, Max Gordon, Laurence Schwab, Philip Dunning, William A. Brady and George Haight. These managers, furthermore, are actually doing something constructive, for each one has voluntarily reduced top admissions, sometimes as much as 33 per cent, most coming down to $2.20.

"The audience for $3 seats is limited, while that for seats at $2 is a long-run audience," said Herman Shumlin, producer of "The Children's Hour," this week. "Some managers have claimed it is impossible to present "big names" at a $2 scale, but it can be done if they will figure out how much they need and find a theatre with enough seats at low prices."

At least 50 per cent of all dramatic productions running in the week ending January 19 were charging top prices of under $3 and the ultimate aim of those managers sponsoring the price cutting movement is to obtain a more or less standardized $2 top for regular evening performances.

The Individualists

There is, on the other hand, the school of managers whose creed throughout the depression has been that "if a show is good enough, if it is a hit, the public will pay to see it, regardless of price." In some instances this might be true, but there scarcely has been a play on Broadway since "Journey's End" with enough universal appeal to warrant such a policy.

George Ross, theatrical publicist, points out that price reduction has been discussed sporadically each season, but the fact remains that the stage folk, always "rugged individualists," never can get together. The producer with the hit attraction refuses to divide his profits with a principle. The producer with a fair and saleable show, on the other hand, would rather have his orchestra filled at half the price than have scattered parts of it occupied at the standard top.

Admission price reductions may go a long way toward solving the legitimate theatre's problem. However, another and more important factor is the lack of good plays.

The depression has curbed the careers of those young men and women who, in 1929, were fledgling playwrights. The present crop of would-be O'Neills, Cowards, Andersons and Sherwoods abounds in ideas, but lacks theatrical craftsmanship. Take two plays seen last week, "Living Dangerously" and "Little Shot." Neither had anything to offer and both closed within the week. "Living Dangerously" was from London. "Little Shot" had four performances. Unfortunate, too, from the motion picture point of view, is the fact that "Living Dangerously" did nothing to further the careers of Conway Tearle and Renee Gadd, and no more can be said for "Little Shot," with the vivacious film star, Lillian Bond.

The Authors

Reginald Simpson and Frank Gregory are the authors of "Living Dangerously." Godfrey Tearle, Conway's brother, and Carol Goodner, who played Phoebe Foster's part in London, "walked out" on their London engagement in the piece; they refused to be seen in it.

Percival Wilde, the literary gentleman responsible for "Little Shot," is the author of many one-act plays, and there was just about sufficient legitimate action in "Little Shot" to make a moderately acceptable one-act play. Poor direction, by an enthusiastic young actor-director named Bretaigne Windust, also marked or, rather, helped to mar this play.

On Dramatic Critics

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive director of the League of New York Theatres, blames something or other on dramatic critics who attend a play "in a half-soused condition," or see only part of a production before writing their reviews.

John Van Druten's "The Distaff Side," which holds the record for 1934 productions with 138 performances by January 19, will close February 2 and then will have a six-weeks tour in Boston, Toronto and Philadelphia.

D. A. Doran, Jr., former eastern story editor for Fox, has formed an organization known as The Stage Associates. A score of young actors and actresses, most of whom have been or are appearing in Broadway productions, constitute the "associates." The idea is to prevent "stimulating plays in the most professionally competent manner and with the most efficiency."

Wilson Film on Chain Store 'Evil' Stirs Retailers

The motion picture as a weapon of propaganda frankly designed to expose socalled "un-American" business methods, makes its appearance on the American scene in a new form in a feature film specifically intended by its producers and by opponents of chain store interests to weaken the hold of the chain system and build up "home-town" spirit and support of local enterprises.

The film is "Forward, America", produced by Frank R. Wilson, former production, distribution and theatre executive and until recently chief of the organization division of the National Recovery Administration. The picture is said to have caused considerable comment by merchants and exhibitors in many sectors. At the moment it is the subject of a concerted protest from several organizations in Cincinnati, including the Chamber of Commerce, more important members of the Retail Merchants Association and other interests allied with the retail grocery trade in that city. There is plenty of publicity for the film, both good and—Mr. Wilson said—"not so good".

It cost Mr. Wilson exactly $30,000 to produce "Forward, America," he said, and he bore the brunt of expense out of his own pocket. The Federal Government, he said, has no "interest" as such in the picture. Mr. Wilson no longer is connected with the Government.

Mr. Wilson is head of an organization known as Economic Films, Inc., with offices in the RKO Building, 1270 Sixth avenue, New York. It is incorporated under the laws of New York state. Economic Films is producer and distributor of "Forward, America." The company has state managers in 14 states, including Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

A snag in the system of distribution appears, however, in the fact that the film is given free of charge to the exhibitor, who, for his cooperation, shares in the receipts with the merchants and Economic Films, but the merchants usually buy blocks of tickets for 10 cents each and distribute them gratis to their patrons. This practice is in direct violation of Section I, Part 3, Article V-E of the code.

The protest in Cincinnati, Mr. Wilson said, is more or less typical of the attitude of chain store operators.

The film recently has been playing at several independent subsequent-run houses in Cincinnati. The local grievance board received protests from the merchants' associations and large department stores, on the grounds that the film contains scenes derogatory to grocery chain operation. The local grievance board ruled that it had no power to act. Representatives of the NRA compliance board at Cleveland investigated and the merchants' protests were forwarded to Charles H. Janssen, executive secretary of the Retail Groceries code authority. Mr. Janssen, it is now revealed, refused to take action because none of the merchants could prove that the film had hurt his business individually.

Mr. Wilson has been identified with the motion picture industry since 1918, before which he had been a newspaperman and editor.

THEATRE NEWS

W. L. Youngclaus, retired for a short time from exhibition, is understood planning a new circuit in Nebraska and Iowa. He has renovated and equipped a new house in Albion, Neb. Others said to be planned are in O'Neill, Broken Bow and Wayne, Neb., and Harlan, Ia. . . .

The Earle in Philadelphia has been returned to direct Warner control. William A. Haynes, for six years district manager, will handle the house. . . .

A 600-seat house being built in Bexley, O., by Theodore Lindenberg, will be halved by a solid partition, with 300 seats on each side, but both screens covered by the same projector under Lindenberg's own projection system. The plan is to suit the theatre to the size of the crowd. . . .

Two new theatres, in the same neighborhood, are planned for Milwaukee. Louis Orlove, former Saxe Uptown manager, is reported heading a group to erect a $100,000 theatre and office building. Jacob Eskin, operating several houses, and Frank Fisher, former local exhibitor, plan a nearby house. . . .

The North Grand theatre, in St. Louis, is to be improved by the Best Amusement Company. Bids have already been received on the work, to cost about $30,000. . . .

Charles A. Somma of Richmond, Va., plans the erection of a $75,000 theatre, to seat 750, on a local site already selected. . . .

The Levrad Amusement Corporation, with plans for 10 theatres, will open its third, the Auditorium in Baltimore, on February 11. It owns the Cameo and Acme in New York. The circuit's theatres show only foreign pictures. Charles S. Levin and Matty Radin head the firm.

Tuttle Assails, Milliken Defends

Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told the Federal Grand Jury Association at its annual meeting in New York last week that the industry is making strenuous efforts to cooperate in the nationwide attack on crime, while at the same meeting Charles H. Tuttle, former United States attorney, assailed the motion picture with the charge it inspired hero worship of the criminal in the mind of the child attending the films.

Mr. Milliken, whose address preceded that of Mr. Tuttle, pointed out, in the industry's effort to combat crime, the use of scientific information to the end that screen material shall not contribute to the undermining of character or the making of criminals, the presentation of the most modern methods of crime suppression by police agencies, and the efforts in the direction of character building through a definite program,

Mr. Tuttle, declaring that he did not intend to "indict the industry as a whole," said that hero worship, which he characterized as one of the greatest educational forces, through its influence on children, "is being extended to certain characters on the screen whom we, as parents, would not allow in our homes. Yet we permit our children to go out and worship these characters two or three times a week at the movies."

Mr. Tuttle declared the real evil was block booking, which forces the exhibitor "to take the good and the bad together."

Goldsmith Tells Cleveland Group Of New Recording

A new system of high quality sound-on-film recording of motion pictures for a complete elimination of background hissing noises and, at least theoretically, making possible the ultimate of realism in sound-on-film recording and reproduction, was demonstrated by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, scientist and consulting engineer of the RCA Manufacturing Company, in the course of an address Tuesday evening before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce at the Statler Hotel.

The demonstration was used by Dr. Goldsmith to illustrate the remarkable progress which has been made in the improvement of the quality of sound motion pictures. The new system, demonstrated for the first time in public, has been described by the RCA Victor engineers who developed it as "the motion picture sound of tomorrow." Dr. Goldsmith used a special film recording of a musical performance in Radio City Music Hall in New York, and called specific attention to the ability of the new system to reproduce the full definitions and shadings of all the instruments in the orchestra over the complete audible range of sound, and to the complete absence of hissing sound during the quieter portions of the music.

With the new recording method, it was pointed out, the sound waves are halved into two separate but symmetrical sound tracks, one negative and the other positive, automatically eliminating the unused portions of the sound track which is a necessary part of all existing sound-on-film systems.

Dr. Goldsmith, while pointing to the amazing strides made by engineers in the development of television, nevertheless tempered his utterance with respect to the commercial future of television. He cited the tremendous economic problem of launching a nationwide television service, when the cost of connecting numerous broadcasting stations of only limited service range in a network is staggering at present. There is also, Dr. Goldsmith noted, the important question of who will pay the high cost of putting the unusual amount of talent on the air, since commercial sponsors would be called upon to pay a substantial portion of the cost of a feature film production for an hour's broadcasting. Although he expressed the belief that these problems would eventually be solved, Dr. Goldsmith declared that much must be accomplished in the interim.

Noting that one may eventually see by radio, Dr. Goldsmith suggested that in the remote future radio might appeal to man's other senses, such as taste, touch and smell. For example, he said, there is the possibility of transmitting three-dimensional replicas of objects in the studio through "teletactile broadcasting," so that a solid representation which "might even be touched as well as viewed could be sent into the home." "Telegustatory broadcasting," or the transmission of taste, might make it possible to "taste" a fine brand of coffee, for example, by radio, he said. The transmission of smells, "telefactory broadcasting," would be simpler, he declared, but emphasized that these possibilities were now only "whimsical and remote imaginings."

ADVERTISING IN FILMS BRINGS NEW PROTEST

British Exhibitors' Association Brings Fight Into Open; Standard Contract Again Rejected

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Protesting against inclusion in a British entertainment picture of items definitely of the character of advertisements for proprietary articles, a provincial branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has brought into the light a long-standing problem. The complaint that these scenes previously were incorporated in advertising films, for which an exhibition fee would be paid to the theatre, indicates the rather intricate situation which now has to be faced.

There always have been two opinions regarding the practice of screening advertising material. In principle there is a strong objection, fully realized by the CEA, to the display of commercial material to audiences which have paid for entertainment. In fact, the cash received for the display of such films has been very useful to many exhibitors.

A Complicating Development

It must be said for the advertising film that, due both to its moderate footage (300 to 500 feet) and to the skill with which it usually was prepared, it provoked no serious expressions of public disapproval. Hence its development on a scale producing a very successful sub-departmen of production. A number of companies came into existence for the purpose of making and distributing such films, while the number of theatres regularly showing them, though hard to estimate exactly, certainly reached 500 and may have been 1,000. Included were theatres on the Gaumont British and other circuits.

Simultaneously, there was a development in another direction; the organized display of advertising films in sub-standard form in other than commercial cinemas. Here there has been such enormous growth as to create a new problem. This type of display, in clubrooms, public halls and schools, consists of a mixed entertainment and advertising display, and is either free or given at nominal admission rates. The competition has proved very serious to many regular theatres.

Steps are being sought whereby to control this development. They probably will be found in the impending revision of safety regulations, whereby displays of non-inflammable non-standard films no longer will be possible in unlicensed buildings.

"Slipped Into Pictures"

The problem of the advertising film in the cinema is more difficult. Nowadays, instead of 300 feet of frank advertising material, to be shown so many times a day at so much per three days, the exhibitor seems to face the prospect that blatant advertising may be slipped into British entertainment films on a scale far transcending that once charged against the producers of American pictures.

It will be realized that only the most obvious instances of this camouflaged advertising are likely to cause protests. Keen-eyed exhibitors spotted hidden advertising in certain American films produced by a concern which also possessed radio interests, and it is a fact that these films very obviously dragged before the camera the trademark on any radio set which figured in a scene. It is, however, a far step from practices of this sort, objectionable as they may be, to what is now apparently being attempted in England.

In an issue of the reel specifically challenged by the CEA there recently appeared a glaring instance of proprietary advertising. One of the detached interest, travel and "instructive" items composing the reel was a series of shots interpreting character from the shape of the mouth. The commentator remarked in effect:

"And talking of teeth, it is necessary to clean them regularly. . . ." —and forthwith there followed a "tooth drill" shot, with a huge labeled tube of paste.

An audience reaction which I personally noted was significant. There was a general gasp, followed by exclamations of disgust and contemptuous laughter. The patrons had been "had," and knew it. Though they did not know it, the exhibitor also had been "had;" he had paid for the film as entertainment. It is to be presumed that the producer also had been paid by the advertiser.

The exhibitor's objection is not, principally, that he is expected to pay for advertising material for which payment previously had been made. The "straight" advertising film was short and snappy and more or less openly proclaimed its character: camouflaged advertising renders the whole program open to suspicion. That is the CEA case, and it reads like one to which distributors will have to reply.

Insist on Standard Contract

The Kinematograph Renters' Society has rejected proposals from the CEA to cooperate in the preparation of a form of Standard Contract, "owing to the trading interests of individual renters being dissimilar," but there is to be a continuance of the theatre men's efforts to stabilize trading methods. If distributors will not help them, they propose to draft their own model contract, and try to obtain its adoption by individual companies.

This decision was reached at a meeting of the CEA general council, at which various points of difference with the KRS were discussed. The exhibitors' organization has been unable to obtain from distributors any concession in regard to the practice of cutting off film supplies from any theatre proprietor found guilty of making false returns of takings; neither will the KRS modify its practice of supplying information to the Revenue authorities in cases where evasion of Entertainment Tax is charged. Also, it did not think the Clean Films campaign called for any action by distributors.

Two Years of Negotiating

Of all these negatives, that referring to the contract is most disappointing to exhibitors. There have been two years of continuous negotiation in the hope of arriving at a uniform contract. The desire for standardization goes back much further than that, and "model" contracts in fact have been drafted, both by the CEA and by individuals. Whether the new form, if it arrives, will have any better luck may be doubted. It is stated that the backing of the big circuits is guaranteed. Once upon a time, that might have been a decisive factor, but if there is one fact more obvious than another in the existing circumstances of the British industry it is that, in military language, the initiative has passed from the exhibitor to the distributor. The distributors are a compact and well-led body, know what they want and as a means of getting it have, in the control of film supplies, a weapon incomparably stronger than anything in the CEA armory. There may therefore be a Standard Contract embracing all that the exhibitor wants, but just what use will it serve if distributors refuse to accept it?

What Is a Newsreel?

Here is a very vexed question in the British industry at the moment, for many reasons. Newsreels, as such, are not liable to censorship. Neither can they be registered under the Cinematograph Films Act as British films, for Quota purposes. Recently there was an official announcement that a rehash of old news items was not a newsreel, and that a commentary might take any newsreel out of that classification. In effect, the ruling was that the only items not legally subject to censorship were silent shots of events reported in the newspapers at about first release date, but that they would not in fact be censored, even if they included a commentary, while newsreel editors showed a willingness to be discreet.

All this previously has been recorded, but it becomes important in view of a decision just handed down by Mr. Justice Clauson in the chancery court, that a subject called "Memory Lane" must be registered for Quota. "Memory Lane" is a series of shots of war memorials, with music and commentary, and it was argued for the Board of Trade that it was a newsreel because of its dated association with Armistice Day. The plea reads rather feebly, and probably was just an Aunt Sally set up to be knocked down, for the Clauson judgment does not conflict with, but definitely supports, the official view of a newsreel.

The outcome of this case is, in fact, that the Board of Trade or the Home Office has a legal ruling to support any action it may contemplate, at any time, by way of censoring news items which do not fall within the narrow limits indicated above. What looks like a trade victory is, in fact, a victory for censorship exponents.

NEW COMPLICATIONS IN FRENCH QUOTA

When Deputy Gratien, at the instigation of M. Martinelli, preesident of the Union des Artistes, projected a question into the French parliamentary tangle in which he asked in the Chamber just why the government was willing to authorize the dubbing of as many as 94 motion pictures in six months, under the Quota. Under French law the written and formal question must be answered by the government. The first result of the action was to tie up the Quota problem with vexatious tax matters.

Martinelli, reversing an earlier stand, proposes that only 50 to 60 foreign films be allowed to enter France in a year, a position in principle tallying with that advocated by the Chambre Syndicale. The Chambre, at its annual meeting recently, decided upon a realignment into sections representing production, distribution and exhibition.

American distributors as well as French exhibition interests doubt that the new move by Deputy Gratien will get very far.

Lloyd Hamilton Dies in Hollywood

Lloyd Hamilton, one of the most popular screen comedians in the days of the silent, and only occasionally active in the talking picture, died last week in Hollywood of a stomach ailment. He was only 43 years old. He had been ill for several months, and a few hours before his death had undergone a blood transfusion, as his condition suddenly became critical. Dogged by ill fortune, the comedian had broken both legs in 1932, and later a cafe in which he was interested failed.

The feature of the Hamilton comedy technique was an expression of soulful and patient bewilderment as his various screen partners played all manner of tricks on him. Famous as well was the small cap which he always wore perched on the front of his head. He was large, over six feet in height, and weighing in proportion, and his bulk made still more amusing his hurt expression.

For years he was "Ham" in "Ham and Bud," one of the most successful of silent screen comedy teams. He made a stage debut at 18, in a production of "Strongheart," in Oakland, Cal. He remained on the stage for five years, appearing in "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Monsieur Beaucare," in which he toured with James K. Hackett. Musical comedy stock in San Francisco was followed by his entrance upon a screen career in 1914.

He wrote and directed many of his pictures. Among them were "Are You There," "A Self-Made Failure" and "His Darker Self." He was married twice, both unions ending in divorce. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Mary Hamilton, and a sister, Mrs. O. M. Judson, of Piedmont, Cal.

Joseph T. Steed, 58, pioneer theatre owner in the Birmingham, Ala., district, and a local resident for 25 years, died last week following a brief illness.

Three deaths occurred among film people of Boston last week: Frank Zampino, sound man from Pathe; the father of Henry Smith, local RKO booker, and the mother of Harry Martin, Universal booker.

New Double Feature Suit Awaits Perelman Verdict

Institution in Cleveland of another court action testing the legality of anti-double feature clauses in some distributors' contracts will be deferred pending determination of the Harry Perelman suit in Philadelphia against major distributors on the same grounds, independent exhibitors and distributors indicated in Cleveland and New York this week. The Perelman case has been under the court's consideration for several weeks.

The Perelman suit charged conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws and if the decision is favorable to Mr. Perelman, an independent exhibitor in that sector, an identical charge is expected in Cleveland.

Four theatres in Cleveland, all suburbans, returned to double billing. Only independent pictures are being shown at the four houses, and major distributors in the territory are continuing to sell with the double feature restriction clause. The four theatres are Alhambra, Metropolitan, Temple, Family.

DISTRIBUTORS ASK LOWER MEXICAN DUTY

American film distributors in Mexico this week were reported to have advised exhibitors in that country that they will withdraw completely from the country unless the government offers some relief from the high duties on discs and films, which, the distributors claim, are excessive.

Last week American distributors in Mexico City discounted the story that was published in one of that city's leading newspapers to the effect that they were quietly canceling their contracts in preparation for withdrawal. Now they have notified exhibitors that February 18 will be the deadline for service unless, of course, the government alters its position.

MPTOA Names Convention Heads

Ed Kuykendall, president, this week announced committee chairmanships for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, opening February 25 in New Orleans, at the Roosevelt hotel, as follows:

Credentials and rules committee, M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Resolutions, Edward G. Levy, New Haven, Conn.; Music tax, Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia; Code trade practice committee, Morgan A. # Coxe Hears Foes Of Paramount Plan

Presentation of formal proof in support of the plan of reorganization of Paramount Publix Corporation was completed in New York Friday before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe. A hearing of all interests opposed to the plan was set by Judge Coxe for Monday, following a postponement.

Johnston Opposes Plan

Percy H. Johnston, former president and recently elected chairman of Chemical Bank & Trust Co., and a director of Paramount, testified Friday that he was opposed to management, or company, men on the board of the reorganized company. Counsel for bondholders opposing the Paramount plan maintain there are too many banking representatives on the new directorate.

Mr. Johnston expressed confidence in Paramount's future. He said he would have been willing for his bank to accept a settlement of the $13,000,000 claim against the company by a creditor bank group which provided for a cash payment of not less than the $5,175,000 set.

"I confidently believe that all of the bank creditors will get their money," Mr. Johnston said. "However, there are 15 banks involved and some of them, either because they haven't the intimate knowledge of Paramount that I have or because it would be unwise for some of them to accept any large amount of stock in settlement of their claims, cannot feel as I do about accepting a proposal other than this."

Archibald Palmer attempted to show the reorganization is irregular in that no stockholders' meeting was held at which the plan was adopted for the company.

Opposes Company Men on Board

Under questioning by Mr. Palmer, who is counsel for holders of 3,600 shares of Paramount stock, Mr. Johnston explained he opposed inclusion of company men on the directorate "because they would be placed in the position of passing on their own acts. That was tried before in Paramount, you know."

Mr. Johnston denied that the banks had refused to accept a settlement on any other basis than that in the plan. He said Frank A. Vanderlip and other members of the debenture holders' committee, and Duncan Holmes and Maurice Newton, both of the stockholders' committee, had opposed the $5,175,000 cash payment. It finally was agreed, he testified, that because the banks had put new money into Paramount they should receive an equal amount in cash and, for the balance of their claims, representing old credit, they would take their place with other creditors of Paramount.

Minority creditors on Wednesday demanded representation on the board.

Malcolm Sumner, counsel for bondholders, and Allied Owners' Corporation, a large Paramount creditor, opposed phases of the Paramount Broadway reorganization plan. This plan, however, is favored by the two largest Broadway bondholders' committee, which together represent approximately half of the $8,875,000 bonds outstanding. Opponents of the plan contend that the bondholders' claims would not aggregate more than $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, whereas the reorganization plan, they hold, involves Paramount in guarantees aggregating $4,400,000 and provides for an annual rental of $260,000 for the Paramount theatre and $188,000 for office space in the Paramount Building, these rentals being attacked also as excessive.

A proposal was filed with Special Master John E. Joyce in New York Tuesday to expedite reorganization of Olympia Theatres, New England subsidiary, by buying for $50,000 the circuit's stock not held by Paramount and allowing an Olympia stockholders' claim.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Chapayev

(Amkino)

Drama

That there is more sweep, more action, and more entertainment value in this latest importation from the state-owned motion picture studios of Soviet Russia, than in almost any previous film from that source, there can be no question. But still the Russian producers cannot forget that their country, and its people, are still in a large sense at the bar of world opinion, and so they continue to inject that element into their product.

There is every evidence that they somehow feel a compulsion to justify their status quo, that in one way or another they must picture the Red Revolution and its results as worthy of effort. It is in part self-justification and in part propaganda, that characteristic which has been such a part of the motion picture output of the Soviet state.

This picture records a small phase of the Revolution, recounting via the screen the dashing heroism and superb leadership of one Chapayev, a hero of the Revolution, who, in a relatively small section of the country, on the border of the Caspian Sea, did battle with the forces of the White Russians, made up chiefly of former Czarist army officers. The story is derived from the memoirs of D. A. Furmanov, who was sent out from Red headquarters in the bloody days of 1917, a Red army commissar, to bring the leader of localized guerrilla warfare definitely under the long arm of the official Red army, to be commandant of a division. Furmanov is said to have acted as Chapayev's second in command during the campaign which ended in Chapayev's death, a victory for the Red army and transformation of the rabble leader into an almost legendary, and thus doubly heroic, figure of the Revolution, which seems considerably in need of heroes.

Insofar as exhibition in this country is concerned, the film is plentifully studded with subtitle translations of the all-Russian dialogue, making for easy understanding of the story. It has pace, action and dramatic value, and, unusual in Russian importations, considerable footage devoted to scenery; in fact so much as to give an impression of having been introduced solely for scenic effect. In that regard the footage is too long, and the pace is checked as a result.

The action is concerned solely with a recounting of the leadership of Chapayev, carpenter's son, who fought in the Russian army during the war, became a guerrilla leader when the revolution struck, and by reason of his own power of leadership and courage, kept his occasionally recalcitrant followers victoriously in line. Eventually, however, he was wounded after a surprise attack and, attempting to swim to safety, was pursued effectively with machine gun bullets and drowned. Reinforcements summoned by the heroine of the band, machine gunner, brought an expensive victory.

It is obviously a picture for select audiences who may be interested in foreign product, but it indicates more of an appreciation of what is meant by screen entertainment than the Soviet producers previously had evinced. It may be a complete realization of that point, or it may be merely a result of the material with which the producers had to work in this instance.—Aaronson, New York.

[Editor's Note: "Chapayev" which is the current ecstasy of the pink young admirers of the Red cause who are so conspicuously in print in the motion picture departments of the newspapers these days, is a better camera job than the Soviet's average. It is, however, not amusement merchandise and has a box office value only to those few theatres which may have a following of academic students of the screen, or the fewer which are largely patronized by adherents and enthusiasts of the Red regime. The picture and its purpose are presented in a closing title shouting progress for Red Revolution. The action is devoted to showing that a Red with a machine gun can shoot a lot of enemies. —*T. ## Clive of India

U. A.—20th Century

Romantic Drama

Telling a moving love story against a stirring action background, "Clive of India" puts in the hands of those who will play the picture practically every necessary audience interesting quality with which it can be sold successfully. Educational in its historic atmosphere, the picture actually is the story of Robert Clive's great ambition. It narrates in thrilling, spectacular style the incidents and events in his career that elevated the obscure clerk to the status of one of England's greatest heroes. It graphically illustrates how this one man made India a British dominion.

There being entertainment and commercial worth in those colorful episodes, there is for practical purposes an even greater value in the production's love story. It is that of a woman who, living a life that necessitated her sacrificing all the things closest to every woman's heart, knew great happiness and great tragedy. It is the story of a loyal woman, who as a steadfast inspiration to her husband, solaced his bitter, disillusioned moments and shared his triumph.

The locales are India and England. Clerk Clive falls in love with a medallion portrait of Margaret, sister of his friend Edmund. Disgusted with his counting-room lot, Clive, persuading Edmund to accompany him, joins the army. Here come such well known historic incidents as the Black Hole of Calcutta, the victory at Plassey and Clive's marriage to Margaret. Back to England in triumph, showered with titles and honors, he becomes a country squire. Then, though it seems heartache to Margaret and the eventual death of their first born, Clive returns to a seething India to bring order out of the chaos which his political successors have wrought. Home again, and fortune turns her back on her favored child. Discredited, on trial before Parliament on charges of accepting a bribe, his name dragged in the mire by avaricious politicians, he would bear his tragedy alone, only to have Margaret hear his simple and honest rebuttal and to be with him in their first home when the Prime Minister calls to inform him that a grateful king has decreed that India, taken from the hands of the East India Company, shall be a dominion of the Empire. With his honors and fortune secure, the little family settles down to a life of peace and happiness.

As this picture packs so much worthwhile entertainment and commercial value within itself, its presentation to the public should be a proud occasion. Let them know by every available means that "Clive of India" is an attraction worthy of their respect and attention.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Whole Town's Talking

(Columbia)

Comedy Drama

The irrelevant title is this picture's sole handicap. As a fast moving entertainment package, it majors in gangster-atmosphered comedy, drama, suspense, human interest, action which continually engenders new surprises, and a cleverly contrived romantic situation. The whole, liberally leavened with a unique brand of melodramatic hokum and thereby tossing the picture directly in the laps of the masses, emerges as snappy, thrilling popular amusement.

It's one of those pictures in which there's always something doing. Quickly establishing its character, but without unduly revealing the trend, it has Edward G. Robinson in a dual role. As office clerk Jones, he's a willy nilly with a yen to be a writer and frantically in love with the boss's secretary, Bill, whom he can admire only from afar. His resemblance to Killer Mannion, a ruthless, killing, fugitive jail-bird, is so marked that when Mannion is reported escaped, Jones is catapulted into the limelight. Picked up by the cops, he gets his first break with Bill when she assists in identifying him as quite a harmless and thoroughly scared citizen. The limelight is grand for him when newspaper man Healy prevails upon him to ghost-write Mannion's lurid career. Robinson takes also the role of Mannion and here is again the menacing character created in "Little Caesar."

The ghost-writing agreement brings Jones and the killer into intimate association. To obtain the passport with which Jones is able to go about his daily work, Mannion invades his double's room, and terrorizes him into giving him the pass. His object is to put a friend of his own ilk on the spot. Then as one thrill-packed sequence follows the other, Jones the while making some progress in his romantic adventures, the picture builds to its smash climax. Mannion has decided that Jones should be rubbed out. But plans go awry and as Jones enters the killer's stronghold, he pulls a trick that stands his double beneath a rain of lead.

Of course he gets a big reward for bringing in the much wanted dead desperado and as he has set himself firmly as a writer, he's in a grand position to take the aggressive with girl friend Bill and order a quick marriage and honeymoon.

So tempoed that the drama constantly accents the fundamental comedy, the picture manages to capitalize all that was attractive of the old gangster films and at the same time introduce much that is pleasing in the way of novelty and thrill. In every way it's the kind of attraction which, whether played in big house or small, can be presented to patrons as a worth-the-money attraction. Additionally it's a natural for tricky curiosity-creating exploitation.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Baboona

(Fox)

Cameras Over Africa

Martin and Osa Johnson, whose second home might well be, and largely is, the once dark continent of Africa, adopt modern transportation for their latest visit, the airplane. This aerial safari, which required 20 months and covered 60,000 miles, has resulted in shots new to African films, possible by reason of the bird's-eye view permitted. The whole film is a record of definite interest, and, to judge from the reactions of an audience at the Rialto in New York, a record also of definite entertainment value.

Extremely well, and this probably the work of the expert Truman Talley of Fox Movietone newsreel, who acted as editor, has the finished product blended jungle savagery, vast panaramas, scenic highlights, comedy and a certain amount of suspense. The audience went into gales of hilarity at the antics of the monkeys and the natives. Unusual as well was the result of the use of portable sound equipment, recording the snarling of animals, the chattering of monkeys, the jabber of natives caught by the camera and microphone in heated argument.

The film is a departure also in the paucity of jungle combat, in survival of the fittest, with which previous pictures of the African scene have abounded, possibly to satiety.

The exhibitor will be well aware of the methods which previously have been demonstrated as most successful in the selling of this type of picture. It is open to all sorts of ballyhoo of a circus nature, making full use of stills, lobby material and the like. This picture contains much that is new, much that is unusual, of its type. Schools might be contacted to advantage.

Highlighting are scenes of an island completely covered with millions of flamingoes, huge herds of elephants trekking across the plains into the jungle, the efforts of the natives to drive the dread rhinoceri from their country, the landing of the pontooned planes on streams infested with crocodiles and hippos, the striking scenic effects as the planes circle the summits of two of Africa's highest snow covered peaks, the gathering of pygmies about the planes in the jungle, and the antics of the monkey pets the Johnson's accumulated.

The film's real high spot, and the source of the picture's title, is the activity in a large colony of baboons, discovered by the Johnsons. Their ordered, and gastronomic, existence is broken into by the attacks of leopards and hyenas, and the baboons flee. That flight, as the animals cross a stream to escape their pursuers, is the most unusual spot in the film, as the large monkeys spring, swim and splash their way to safety, caught partially in slow motion. Then they find a haven, which proves to be the abiding place of a smaller breed of monkeys. They are bitterly resentful at the intrusion, and despite their lack of size, rage and storm and torment their larger foe, until the baboons take flight in all haste.

It is on the whole interesting and entertaining material, which may be sold to anyone, any time.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson in Africa. Distributed by Fox Film. Edited by Truman Talley. Release date, February 8, 1935. Running time, 72 minutes. Production Code Certificate No. 0272. General audience classification.

Gridiron Flash

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

A wholly engaging yarn of the young man who goes from prison to college, and there, via the necessity of playing clean football and the influence of a girl, learns the vast difference between right and wrong, this picture contains elements of lively and attractive entertainment. Definitely a minor picture, and making no pretense of being anything more, it succeeds in combining romance, comedy and fast action on the football field in a pleasing manner.

There has been considerable indication that young Eddie Quillan, who appears only occasionally in films, has a rather wide and appreciative following. That being the case, there is probably room for real selling of his name, especially in the smaller situations where apparently his popularity is strongest. In support are Betty Furness, Grant Mitchell, Lucien Littlefield and Edgar Kennedy.

Comedy is a strong element in the story, although the dominating theme is the reformation of the boy, chiefly through the manner in which the girl virtually manipulates him into a realization that his own self-respect, and the respect of others, are important considerations in his life.

Young Quillan, a phenomenon on the football field of the prison which is his temporary domicile, is approached by Mitchell, old grad of the dear old college, which is badly in need of just such an outstanding backfield star as Quillan. Finally reluctantly installed among schoolbooks, and highly resentful of the hazing which is the portion of all freshmen, Quillan is urged back into the game by Mitchell when the coach benches him for dirty playing. Mitchell's urging takes the form of dangling the future of big money in the game later before the boy.

When Quillan, however, hears from former pals that there is something good in the wind, Mitchell enlists the support of Miss Furness, daughter of the college policeman, to keep Quillan in college, and the treatment begins to take effect. Mitchell arranges that he and Quillan shall rob a wealthy friend of Mitchell of his wife's jewelry, all a part of Mitchell's design to keep the boy in school and on the team. When Quillan overhears that Miss Furness's interest in him is merely for the school, he sends back the jewelry he has stolen and leaves town, but is lodged in a local jail by a stupid constable. The big game is on, Quillan is finally located in time to save the day in the expected fashion.

It is energetic and generally appealing, although unpretentious material.—Aaronson, New York.

The White Cockatoo

(Warner)

Mystery

There is plenty of mystery, suspense and activity in an appropriately mysterious atmosphere, in this screen adaptation of a novel of the same title. It may be worth while to call attention to the fact that the film is from the book by Mignon G. Eberhart, one of the more prolific of our mystery writers, who has a wide popularity, especially for this particular story.

The film has suspense and the additional intriguing element of the part played by the white cockatoo in the solution of a baffling crime or series of crimes, which take place in a small, out-of-the-way hotel on the rugged coast of France. And here there is no master detective mind functioning flawlessly, but an American engineer, caught in the midst of criminal activity by accident, and by the application of common sense and the exercise of the powers of observation, unraveling a crime that baffles the local French police. The incentive is largely the girl, who appears to be an intended victim.

The romance is incidental, but of importance to the story, comedy has its small moments, but the dominating element is the movement which piles mystery on mystery, murder on murder. Heading the cast are Ricardo Cortez and Jean Muir, with Ruth Donnelly and Minna Gombell in chief support. These names may be of some value but the outstanding selling factor is the mystery itself, and the origin of the story.

Cortez, American engineer, stops at the small hotel during a storm, and immediately runs into excitement, as he finds the owner of the hotel and his wife, Miss Gombell, pursuing her white cockatoo, which has escaped into the courtyard. A moment later a man is found dead on the balcony outside Cortez' room, a small sword from a clock in his room in the man's body. He discovers that Miss Muir is the heir to an American estate and is to meet a representative of her American brother at the hotel, to prove her right to a share in the estate.

She is apparently in great danger, and the RRING POLLY MORAN, EL BRENDEL, SHEMP HOWARD, HERB WILLIAMS mystery, centering about her, includes a doctor guest, the owner and Miss Gombell, a man who arrives and introduces himself as the representative of Miss Muir's brother. The French police, called reluctantly by Miss Gombell, are unable to discover the murderer and hold Cortez temporarily. Miss Donnelly, American school teacher, supplies the film's few lighter moments.

When the doctor disappears, the case is further complicated, and it appears he was the guilty party, until his body is discovered in a room long unused. It is only by noting the excited action of the pet cockatoo when the supposed American investigator appears near him, that Cortez's suspicion is aroused. He sets a trap which catches the American, who has been guilty of the crimes, attempting to take the money intended for the girl.

The unusual twist which leads to the apprehension of the murderer adds to the effectiveness of the climax. The story is entertaining and suspenseful mystery.—AARONSON, New York.

Women Must Dress

(Monogram)

Drama

A drama of marital complication, this film would seem to have considerable in the way of feminine appeal, both in story elements and for exploitation. The title itself indicates an initial possibility in that direction, and the fact that the story is in part concerned with the operation of a fashionable dress establishment, opens the way for tieups with community stores which should prove fruitful in attracting feminine interest.

There is a secondary significance in the title, which implies the necessity that the woman make herself attractive to her husband, not only by the activity of a dutiful wife, being a good cook and the like, but by retaining in her appearance that which initially attracted him.

The cast is not outstanding, so that the burden will have to rest on the story elements. In the lead is Minna Gombell, with Gavin Gordon, Hardie Albright and Lenita Lane in support. In the cast as well are the seven winners of a recent Monogram-Agfa national contest for screen material. They are all in minor roles.

Miss Gombell is the exceedingly dutiful wife, whose husband, Gordon, is a fairly successful engineer. When Gordon accidentally meets a neighbor, Miss Lane, Miss Gombell is not aware of the danger signals ahead, being rather too deeply engrossed in her household duties. Zeffie Tilbury, her mother, sees the danger but keeps her own counsel. The daughter, Suzanne Kaaren, is in love with a young doctor, Albright. Finally Gordon reaches the breaking point, falls in love with Miss Lane, and divorces his wife. Miss Gombell turns to a former employer, who operates a fashionable women's shop, and returns as a designer. She becomes a partner in the firm, while Gordon goes to South America on a project, planning to return to marry Miss Lane.

Miss Gombell so turns her daughter's mind that she throws Albright over and becomes engaged to a young and wealthy boy.

She quarrels with her mother, and for the first time the self-confident Miss Gombell realizes the mess she has made of her own, her husband's and her daughter's lives. She confesses her error to Albright, and he and Miss Kaaren are married. Gordon, returning for the wedding, finds that he is still in love with his wife.—AARONSON, New York.

Dirty Work

(Gaumont-British)

Farce Comedy

Once again it's a question of American patrons' reactions to a type of British stage farce which, possessing real screen values, is undoubtedly full of good situations, amusing acting, and dialogue which will bring the laughs wherever it is understood.

Ralph Lynn, Gordon Harker and Robertson Hare are three employees of a jewelry store troubled by mysterious thefts. At the instigation of the store detective, an accomplice of the thieves, the innocent trio are persuaded to get themselves up as crooks and to stage a raid on the shop, in order that the actual crooks, receiving the goods, shall be captured. The intention is to use them as cat's paws, but their amateurish clumsiness leads to a warning to the store owner which brings the real police on the scene, with the result that the plot ends quite otherwise than was planned by the crooks.

There is a most ingenious blend of the atmospheres of farce and crook drama, and a humour of detail seen at its best when the three musketeers have adopted their disguises. This "amateur burglar" angle is probably the most effective line of exploitation.—ALLAN, London.

Cowboy Holiday

(Syndicate)

Western

A western which is, at best, run of the mine material of its type, this may fill the bill in the weekend action position. It has its quota of riding and shooting and hand-to-hand battling, though the fighting rather falls short of reality. The boys "pull their punches," which brings an unfavorable reaction. Likewise, in one of the horseback pursuits, when the obvious intent of the pursuers is to dispose of the pursued, one of the riders is seen carefully to shoot into the air. That struck the risibilities of some of the audience.

It will have to sell as straight western material, there being an absence of a particularly well known western star name. "Big Boy" Williams, considerably heavier than handsome, has the lead, and although he is effective on a horse and with a gun, he is not quite the dashing hero. Janet Chandler has the feminine lead.

The story might have been any one of many which have gone before. Williams, cowboy off on a holiday, never manages to attain that vacation, as he stops in on his old friends, the sheriff and his wife, and finds the sheriff in trouble. A supposed Mexican bandit is conducting highly effective robberies in the county and the sheriff finds his job slipping unless he can uncover the marauder. Williams, though he had no intention of so doing, finds himself in it, especially when Miss Chandler's father is killed, and Williams, arriving on the scene at that moment, is accused of the murder by the girl. He makes good an escape, and sets out to prove to the girl that she was wrong.

A clue here and there points directly at the sheriff's deputy, masquerading as a reformed Mexican desperado, who once had known Williams. With the aid of the Mexican, Williams sets a trap, into which the deputy tumbles, which leads, of course, to a ride through the hills for Williams and Miss Chandler.—AARONSON, New York.

Calling All Cars

(Syndicate)

Melodrama

There is at least a certain amount of action in this independent piece, with that action virtually the only recommendation in so far as showmanship potentialities are concerned. Into the inconspicuous spot on the regular run program the subject may fit.

The story is stereotyped, with the newspaper reporter, attracted to a girl by chance, finding her in difficulty, and assisting her, with a blending of romance, incidental and occasional comedy and the predominating element of action.

The cast has no outstanding selling quality, the leading role taken by Jack LaRue, with Lillian Miles in the feminine role opposite.

LaRue, police reporter, meets Miss Miles in a restaurant, learns that she is connected with a notorious racketeer, and later finds her in jail on an automobile speeding charge. She is at first unwilling to accept his assistance, but finally consents. Through a judge looking for political favors he wins her release, but only by saying she was about to elope with him when she was arrested. The well meaning judge does nothing less than marry them in his office. She evades LaRue and joins the racketeer, and he follows.

He finds that the racketeer is about to quit town, facing a grand jury investigation, and the girl plans to go with him. He also learns that she is not LaRue's confederate, but the daughter of a man whose death the racketeer has caused, and is working for the police. There is plenty of action in the closing minutes, as the racketeer's henchman discovers LaRue using the girl's dictaphone in her room, and she is forced to accompany the gangster aboard his chartered boat. Just in time, of course, LaRue arrives on board before the boat casts off, the police following a moment later. The girl, as expected, is rather glad to see her husband.—AARONSON, New York.

Mystery Woman

(Fox)

Drama

Despite the obvious implication in the title, this is not a mystery story, but a story of government spies. There is action and suspense enough in the yarn, and romance which takes an unusual turn as the woman who is fighting fire with fire to help her falsely accused husband, meets and finds an unexpected confederate falling in love with her. It is spy against spy, espionage agents working with and against one another, with plenty of secret activity if no actual mystery.

The locale moves from France, aboard ship, to New York and back to France. The background theme is that of the woman who undertakes a dangerous mission, her act dictated only by her loyalty to and faith in the innocence of her husband. There is considerable suspense involved, and the yarn maintains the interest of the audience throughout. Although the conclusion is more or less expected, the attainment of that conclusion has much of entertainment.

Mona Barrie has the lead role, supported in particular by Gilbert Roland, John Halliday and Rod LaRocque. It appears obvious, then, that the selling may better concentrate on the dramatic elements of the story itself, and its tieup with the title, rather than on cast names.

Miss Barrie is convinced her husband is innocent, when he, a French army officer, is stripped of his rank and sentenced to Devil's Island for treason. A missing state paper is the key to the situation. Miss Barrie suspects that Halliday, an art collector, is also an espionage agent, and in possession of the paper. She takes an assumed name and boards the steamer on which Halliday is a passenger, bound for New York.

En route she is successful in making herself attractive to Halliday and he is fascinated by the strange woman. At the same time, Roland, posing as a Spanish gentleman, but actually himself an espionage agent, seeks out and tries to win the attention of Miss Barrie. When she sees Roland in the act of stealing from Halliday's cabin what she takes to be the incriminating paper, she accepts his invitation to visit the Spaniard's cabin, and there in turn steals the document, but finds only half of it.

In New York, Miss Barrie finally concludes that she must ally herself with Roland if she is to recover the missing half of the paper. They discover that Halliday's men murdered Roland's assistant and took it. Miss Barrie approaches Halliday, they strike a deal for the paper, and that evening Miss Barrie and Roland take the paper from Halliday's private safe. Halliday and his men return, as they try to escape, and Roland, understanding the circumstances, stays to shoot it out with the agents, permitting Miss Barrie to escape. A concluding sequence finds her husband publicly restored to his rank.—Aaronson, New York.

EXPLAIN SHOWING OF G-B'S "POWER"

The Kansas City Star recently preceded its review of "Power," Gaumont Britsh film, by John C. Moffitt, critic, with an editor's note, at the request of Fox Midwest, showing the picture at the Apollo. The precede note explained that the exhibitor regarded the picture with some misgiving because of the sensitiveness of the Jewish question as an international topic. The note pointed out that the exhibitor screened the film for several prominent Jewish individuals of the city, prior to its regular exhibition, and these pre-viewers expressed the opinion it should be publicly exhibited. "The exhibitors," said the note, ". . . exhibited the picture only after expressing the sincere desire that it does Jews no injury."

When A Man Sees Red

(Universal)

Western

Routine western material, there is a considerable lack of that action which is obviously the backbone of western pictures. It must be considered one of the weaker of the productions which star Buck Jones, who has a wide popularity among the devotees of the western, especially the youngsters.

The title means very little, and has but little real significance with relation to the yarn. There is a certain amount of the expected riding, shooting and general indulgence in the fine art of bare-handed scrapping, but hardly enough. The romance is there, as well, and a third side to a triangle, in the shape of a feminine menace to the course of true love. Jones' is the only name of any selling consequence, and the exhibitor is rather in the position of having to rely on that. Peggy Campbell plays opposite.

When a rancher dies, Jones, his foreman, goes to New York to bring the heiress west, and finds her a snobbish young woman with ideas of a career as an artist. She resents Jones and his manner, but softens somewhat when she discovers the will of her uncle names him her guardian. When Jones attempts to prevent her from seeing a man she has met, a man Jones is certain is a member of a band of rustlers, she continues to see him, chiefly to spite Jones.

Eventually, when she accidentally is caught in a raid by a sheriff's posse on the rustlers, Jones saves her and finishes the rustler, although he is wounded himself.—Aaronson, New York.

The Scarlet Pimpernel

(London Films - United Artists)

Costume Drama

From the studio which gave birth to "Henry VIII," this adaptation of the Baroness Orczy's book and play has the mark of class in every detail of production. The background of revolutionary France and of fashionable London of the same eighteenth century period gives it an atmosphere of romance, sustained by polished dialogue and brilliant acting.

For the mass public, there is the title, the melodramatic subject matter so largely concerned with the Terror and the guillotine, and the names of Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon. Nevertheless, it is a picture for the discriminating rather than the general. The one important quality it lacks is punch. Its treatment is that of comedy rather than of drama; its acting is more important than its action.

Sir Percy Blakeney is the head of a group of high spirited Englishmen who assist French aristocrats to escape from the Paris revolutionaries to London. He is known only as the Scarlet Pimpernel, from the fact that he signs his orders with a seal representing that flower. In London society he is regarded as a brainless beau, esteemed by the Prince of Wales because of his advice on costume, but held in contempt by men of action.

Owing to the success of dramatic coups by the Pimpernel's men, who rescue victims from the very tumbrils in which they are being carried to execution, the French ambassador in London, Chauvelin, is told by Robespierre that his own head will fall if he fails to capture the mysterious Englishman. Chauvelin threatens Lady Blakeney, a Frenchwoman, with the death of her brother unless she helps him to identify the Pimpernel. She helps set a trap and, too late, realizes that the betrayed Pimpernel is her own husband.

She is captured by Chauvelin. When the Pimpernel arrives, he offers to surrender if his wife is released. Chauvelin consents, and sends Blakeney to face a firing party. The soldiers are all members of the Pimpernel's band, and so the tables again are turned.—Allan, London.

Produced by London Films, and distributed by United Artists. Directed by Harold Young. Camera, Harold Rosson. Sound, A. W. Watkins. Settings, Vincent Korda. Novel by the Baroness Orczy. Adaptation, dialogue, etc., by Lajos Biros, Sam Berman, Robert Sherwood and Arthur Wimperis. Running time, 95 minutes. Classification, "G." British Censor's certificate, "U."

Perfectly Mismated

(Columbia)

Good Comedy

In one of those marital mixup affairs, strangely enough, there are a number of good laughs, chiefly by reason of the presence in the lead of Leon Errol, the man with the undependable underpinning. He and his wife are not exactly doves on the proverbial bough, one of the principal difficulties being Errol's former wife, Dorothy Granger, now married to a big and active lad, ever on the hunt for his wife's former husband. A mixup in apartments leads Errol to his ex's rooms, following a really comic inebriated sequence by Errol, and the comedy ends in a burst of wall-cracking slapstick.—Running time, 20 minutes.

This, the seventh of the series of supposedly authentic letters by unlettered people to various companies, provides approximately the same degree of laugh provocation as preceding numbers. # FILM FOUNDATION SPEEDS ITS PLANS

Non-Profit Organization to Sponsor and Help Finance Making and Selling of Films

The Motion Picture Foundation of the United States of America, which last October officially made itself known to the industry as a non-profit agency to sponsor and assist financially in the production and distribution of motion pictures of "consistently high moral tone," this week announced completion of preliminary organization movements and, at the same time, made known the personnel of an advisory committee of nationally known men and women, formed to help determine the Foundation's policies and plans.

In announcing that its initial organization plans had been formulated and that its program is now ready to be put into effect, the Foundation also made known the five different types of films which will be made by its own production staff, exclusive of pictures to be made by outside independents and released by the organization.

The five classifications, briefly, include:

(1) Family films, which will be promoted particularly for use at the increasingly popular weekend family show; (2) historical productions, showing the development of states and cities; (3) instructional pictures, as an aid to teaching in classrooms; (4) musical pictures, to increase understanding and appreciation of fine music through the dramatic pictorial interpretation of musical masterpieces, and (5) pictures based on international goodwill, showing the necessity for world unity and international cooperation.

The Foundation's advisory committee will have a full complement of 100 individuals, representing a wide scope of profession and occupation. Only 50 members of the committee have been selected thus far; it is expected the remaining 50 will be announced within a few weeks.

No Agitators

It is significant that the list of educators, publishers, clergymen, manufacturers, lawyers, authors and others, which appears elsewhere on this page, includes none of the socalled reformers who have been making a business of agitation against the motion picture industry.

Dr. William B. Millar, secretary of the Foundation, this week said the committee will not so much point out "what is wrong" with motion pictures as it will stress what should be included or emphasized.

"They are not to pick out flaws but will suggest improvements," Dr. Millar said. "As leaders and molders of public opinion, the benefit of their years of experience is at the service of the industry. They have worked with people in all walks of life and of all ages and they are qualified to say what is needed. They hold that both the industry and the public want good pictures.

"They will not attempt to dictate to the industry how it should conduct its business but they will offer a liaison service between public and producer in the interests of both. They hold that the motion picture industry is one of the greatest potential forces for good in the country today and they offer constructive advice and unbiased counsel based on practical, everyday contacts with great numbers of prospective patronizers of motion pictures. The committee is not negative, but positive. It will not seek to hamper by rule or regulation but to enlarge the legitimate scope and influence of the motion picture."

Financing in Preparation

As to financing of production, L. Roy Curtiss, president of the Foundation, and at one time associate of the late J. D. Williams in First Choice Pictures, this week declined to comment.

"We wish to make no statements at this time with respect to financing," he said.

In October it was revealed that Tamblyn, Brown, a New York company specializing in fund raising campaigns, had been engaged by the Foundation to campaign for subscriptions to the amount of $1,500,000. At the time, Mr. Curtiss was reported to have obtained the pledge of "some wealthy friends" to match any sum over $1,000,000 that Tamblyn, Brown might raise. What amount the fund raising organization did raise before it dropped the account in November has never been made known.

Endorsed by Milliken

The Foundation's aims has the endorsement of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Carl E. Milliken, secretary, said this week that the organization's attitude is entirely constructive from start to finish.

"Everyone connected with the Foundation is sincere as to the organization's purpose," Mr. Milliken said. "They are fine people of high standing and are sincerely interested in education of the people to a more consistently better type of film entertainment, in addition to their many planned extra-theatrical activities. Any activity undertaken by such individuals should be a guarantee of high purpose."

In addition to its production and distribution plans, the Motion Picture Foundation repeatedly has asserted its stand against censorship in any form and its spokesmen have reiterated the fact that it contemplates no sort of legislative program. Further, it has no intention of meddling in any way with existing motion picture machinery, in exhibition, production or distribution.

Dr. Millar formerly was general secretary of the Greater New York Federation of Churches. Born in Lake Mills, Wis., the son of the Rev. William Thomas Millar, he received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Lawrence College at Appleton, Wis., in 1899, and in 1920 his degree of Doctor of Divinity. From 1896 to 1910 Dr. Millar was secretary of the International Commission of the Young Men's Christian Association. In 1898 he organized the Army and Navy department of the YMCA and served as secretary of this branch until 1910, obtaining permanent buildings for the organization and funds totaling more than $2,000,000. It was in 1921 that Dr. Millar became secretary of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, which post he held until 1933.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 257.—(A) What, in your opinion, constitutes the best projection room location from all points of view? (B) What, in your opinion, should be the limit of location of projection room above the screen (based upon projection angle) and why? (C) How would you proceed to ascertain the projection angle in your own case?

Answer to Question No. 252

Bluebook School Question No. 252 was: (A) Name the various items involved in screen image dimensions and explain each one in detail.

It has been very hard to select an answer for publication, but everything considered I think I will publish that of C. Rau and S. Evans, because their reply is concise, well worded and their argument well set forth; also, these two gentlemen are our oldest Bluebook School "pupils," having sent in an answer every week, except once when on vacation, for several years. Their answers are always excellent, too. Did I visit the Capitol Theatre, Victoria, British Columbia, I certainly would expect to find excellence in projection. Men who have the wide knowledge possessed by Evans and Rau, plus the energy to get out really creditable, well constructed, neatly written answers for all the space of time they have, cannot possibly fail in being everything a first-class motion picture projectionist should be. G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg and J. Wentworth have also been with us for a long while. D. Danielson is another consistent "pupil."

The following also deserve at least honorable mention: C. Oldham; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; L. Grant and R. Geddings; G. Thompson; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; D. Breaston and H. Haber; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; R. Geddings and L. Grant; G. Harrison and F. Harlow; N. L. Simms; R. and K. Wells; D. Stellegos and G. Wayne; F. L. Saylor and G. N. Guidotti; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; A. F Sprafke; D. Ferguson and D. L. Sinklow. Many others have sent in excellent answers occasionally, but not quite so consistently. Everything considered, I feel the "school" has done a great amount of good by stimulating men to study.

"The various items involved in screen image dimensions are as follows:

"(1) The power of the light source itself will to a large extent determine the maximum screen image dimensions, since the available light will only adequately illuminate a certain number of square feet of surface. It thus is that the greater the area of the screen image, the less brilliantly will be its illumination, and that if the area be too great the result will be a lowering of screen brilliancy until the picture will be under-illuminated, dull, displeasing, lifeless and the cause of eye strain.

"(2) If the picture be too large the view from the front seats will not be good, and if the front seats be relatively close to the screen, they will have small value, as none but children or the inexperienced theatre patron will occupy them unless all seats farther back are filled. There was a time when 'anything went,' but those days are gone. Theatre patrons have learned that if the picture is large and the front seats close to it—well, they cannot enjoy the show from that location.

"(3) On the other hand, if the picture be too small and the viewing distance from the screen to rear seats long, the condition, while improved as to the front seats, is bad from the rear ones. Those occupying them will probably not only lose some detail, but will suffer from eyestrain in the attempt to see it. However, unless the screen image be smaller than any now used in theatres, we believe the small one will please a greater number of people than will the excessively large one.

"(4) The very large picture will not have the apparent sharpness of the smaller image, because since there must naturally be faults where the magnification is so huge, these photographic magnification faults become the more visible as the size is increased. This, of course, tends to detract from the beauty of the picture. (Wouldn't it be helpful to say the picture will look coarse-grained?—F. H. R.) Another thing, the large picture at long projection distance sets up difficulties in the projector optical train that are not always easy to overcome.

"(5) As the magnification is increased—picture size enlarged—every defect in the photograph over the projector aperture is of course also magnified in the same amount. Dirt filled scratches, movement in the picture as a whole, and other faults will be more visible because they are large."

Brothers Evans and Rau brought forward a sixth item, namely the making of things in the screen image over life-size, but with this I find myself unable to agree. Theatre patrons have become so thoroughly accustomed to seeing giants on the screen that so long as other objects are in the same proportions, the huge magnification is not noticed at all.

May I sum the matter up as I see it? First, effect upon the eyes from both front and rear seats. Second, beauty of screen image, which is very largely a matter of illumination, and as pointed out by Rau and Evans, has a very great deal to do with screen image dimensions within certain well defined bounds. Third, magnification of the tiny film photograph, which very naturally loses much of its beauty if it be carried too far. How far it may be carried without serious results is a matter for debate, but I personally would say when the 18-foot limit is passed, beauty begins to suffer, at least from all seats in the front half of the average theatre auditorium.

Securities Commission Simplifies Registration

The Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington has issued simplified forms for the registration of securities by established corporations. The purpose is to make easier new flotations. The new form is called A2. Balance sheets and records of earnings over a period of a least three years are required. According to Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the commission, the new forms carry out the commission's pledge to make registrations "less onerous, less expensive and more practical."

MPPDA Adds Space At New York Headquarters

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in New York, has taken additional office space on the 15th floor of the building in which the offices are located. The new space will be occupied by the eastern office of the Production Code Administration and the Advertising Advisory Council, headed by J. J. McCarthy. The additional space will relieve congestion on the 21st floor.

WHAT IS THE M

WHAT IS IT? It is a twenty-minute picture, issued once a month. Each release contains five or more complete dramatic stories. For the first time you will see the hidden beginnings, play-by-play developments and breath-taking endings of world happenings you've read and wondered about.

HOW IS IT PRODUCED? From wherever things happen, reporters and camera men of THE MARCH OF TIME send hundreds of stories and thousands of feet of film. The best of these are woven together in radio MARCH OF TIME'S curt, concise manner. Re-enacting those scenes that are missing, it brings to the screen complete dramatic episodes.

IS IT A NEWSREEL? No.

THEN HOW DOES IT COMPARE WITH A NEWSREEL? THE MARCH OF TIME makes no attempt to cover the complete news of the day. In fact, the last minute, exciting flashes of the news reels prepare your audience for MARCH OF TIME'S searching dramatizations. For only events of universal interest that have a dramatic background worthy of development are used by the MARCH OF TIME. It no more competes with a newsreel than a magazine story does with a front-page headline. THE MARCH OF TIME is made to go on a programme with a newsreel.

ARCH OF TIME?

PHIL M. DALY IN THE FILM DAILY—At last we have had the opportunity to view the much touted impending screen innovation . . . "The March of Time" . . . They have so dramatized the news as to create an entirely new form of screen entertainment.

It is really hard to define . . . in showing us showmen something new in showmanship. . . . It is simply True Life Stories embellished with the story form of the screen.

KANN IN MOTION PICTURE DAILY—Opportunity came yesterday to witness what the current excitement labeled "The March of Time," is all about. Drawn from the formula which lurks behind the sensational national broadcast of the same name. . . . "The March of Time" proposes to get behind the news and to interpret it, to tell how as well as when. The formula is new. That is, it is new in pictures. . . . It is refreshing and full of promise.

It Happened in New York

Universal

Comedy is the essence of this story. The title being completely expressive, it's the yarn of a two-fisted taxicab driver in love with a movie star worshipping shop girl; a temperamental, tempestuous movie queen, her publicity agent and what happened to New York when the whole melange was thrown together for a gala world premiere. The script, indicating that action will be excitingly fast moving and slam bang in character, is based on an original story by Ward Morehouse and Jean Dalrymple, with the screen play by Seton I. Miller and Rian James. It is being directed by Alan Crosland, whose most recent pictures are "The Personality Kid," "Case of the Howling Dog" and "White Cockatoo."

For the type of story, the cast is fully adequate. Set in the role of the volatile star is Gertrude Michael, recently seen in several Paramount pictures, including "Murder at the Vanities," "Menace" and "Bolero." Her foil is the harassed press agent, Hugh O'Connell, recently in "Gift o' Gab" and "Cheating Cheaters." Heather Angel is the star-struck girl, who in getting the job of posing as a sensational European actress more than steals a march on her idolizing if sometimes bewildered taxi driver sweetheart, Lyle Talbot. Heading the list of supporting players is Adrienne D'Ambricourt, who has appeared in such pictures as "Design for Living" and "Gallant Lady." Two of Universal's crop of newer younger players, Phyllis Ludwig and Rafael Sturm, will make their debuts in featured roles.

Sequences in the picture which convey ideas as to how the production may be adapted to exploitation include the glamorous star's arrival in New York; her association with the taxi driver who later escorts her to the gaudy premiere, the attempted jewel robbery and the mutual discovery of the boy and girl in roles they never dreamed of appearing in.

McFadden's Flats

Paramount

An out-and-out comedy, the potential entertainment of this story bears a very close resemblance to that provided in the "Cohens and Kellys" series. Two men are its central characters; one a lovable old Irishman (Walter C. Kelly), who made a fortune by the sweat of his brow, the other an equally lovable Scotchman (Andy Clyde), who came here because he heard it was a free country, and as lord and master of a one-chair barber shop has done pretty well by himself and his friends. Kelly was famous Virginia Judge of vaudeville's happiest days. The story, which was a popular old legitimate stage attraction and subsequently a silent picture, is by Gus Hill. The current screen play is by Arthur Caesar, Edward Kaufman and Andy Rice. Direction is by Ralph Murphy, who made "Private Scandal" and "Great Flirtation."

As the story unfolds, it's the consummation of an Irishman's dream. Wealthy, he remembers the squalor of his immigrant days and embarks upon the building of McFadden's Flats. Going broke, via the depression, before a job is finished, he is unwittingly rescued by his old Scotch barber friend and a banker, who suddenly discover they were co-workers in the old hod-carrying days. About that central theme is woven a skein of comedy that should be productive of refreshing laughter and a vein of human interest that carries the accompanying juvenile romance to a blissful ending.

As Kelly and Clyde are starred, the other principals of the cast are favorably known screen names. Included are Jane Darwell, George Barbier, Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell and Pat Moriarity.

The theme hints at the potential exploitation possibilities. The Labor Day Parade, in which McFadden heads his craft carrying a golden mortar hod to the deep humiliation of his daughter and the subsequent ridicule of her youthful sweetheart, provides a definite clue to the novel stuff that can be used in creating interest for the "McFadden's Flats" brand of entertainment.

Shadow of Doubt

MGM

A recent Collier's Magazine story serial, authored by Arthur Somers Roche, is the foundation of this production, which includes many elements automatically recommending it as both a showmanship and entertainment feature. Essentially it is a uniquely solved murder mystery, running the entire scale of essentials necessary to a romance tinged, comedy-relief shudder picture. Modernly timed, localed in New York, it not only has the advantage of being potentially promising entertainment, but its producion coming quickly upon the completion of the publicized serial gives it a timeliness.

The screen play is by Wells Root, recently credited with "Paris Interlude." Direction is by George B. Seitz.

While practically the entire cast is composed of established screen names, one newcomer, Constance Collier, will be presented. A well known stage figure, she, as the eccentric old recluse who eventually unearths the clues, is the focal interest point. For more practical and familiar purposes, however, the cast features many who because of their work in recent pictures are considerably in the public eye. As Ricardo Cortez is starred, Virginia Bruce, last seen as Jenny Lind in "Mighty Barnum," has the leading feminine role. She probably will be recalled readily as the star of "Jane Eyre." Other featured players are Isabel Jewell, remembered for her effective work in the courtroom scene of "Evelyn Prentice"; Betty Furness, Regis Toomey, Ed Brophy, one of the "Thin Man" group; Arthur Byron, currently in "President Vanishes"; Bradley Page, Ivan Simpson and Sam Hinds.

As a departure from current practice, the title "Shadow of Doubt," long a common expression, assumes an effective showmanship asset. As a medium creating interest for the attraction, even of more value than cast names, it can be adapted in scores of ways.

King of the Ritz

Warner

The regal sound of its title to the contrary, "King of the Ritz" is a hilarious comedy story. Pepped up by a novel romantic situation, it's the yarn of high-powered promotion—an insane stunt that lands a blowhard pot washer, who couldn't hold down a job in a hot dog stand, into the post of head chef of the Ritz Hotel.

The original story, screen play and dialogue are by Albert J. Cohen and Robert T. Shannon, with direction by William H. McGann, who made "Maybe It's Love."

In the story, William Gargan, currently in "Black Fury," is the cyclonic publicity man who does it all for love and a job. Patricia Ellis is the girl in the case. The chef, great as long as he is only talking about cooking, is Eric Rhodes. The lady who saves the bacon for all, as well as the bankers' dinner, is Bodil Rosing. Supporting players include Allen Jenkins, Dorothy Tree, Gordon Wescott, Addison Richards, Berton Churchill, Mary Treen and Mary Russell.

In southern California commercially sponsored cooking schools have been held pretty regularly in motion picture theatres. Such a goodwill contact stunt may return unexpected dividends by concocting a special localized showmanship campaign that ties in the picture. Certainly because of its theme and the paralleling action, it opens the door to a probably long dormant brand of exploitation. In any case, the story looks like an exploitation show which permits the doing of many things not ordinarily possible in connection with the regular line of pictures.

The Florentine Dagger

Warner

This is a baffling murder mystery drama. It is an original story by Ben Hecht, whose magazine writings, screen contributions such as "Scarface," "Viva Villa" and the currently widely discussed "Crime Without Passion," have kept him in the limelight. Assumed characters in the story are particularly intriguing. Featured are Donald Woods, a young playwright, descendant of the terrible Borgia family of medieval history, and Margaret Lindsay, an actress portraying a realistic crime role in a show written by Woods. Her father, forbidding the marriage although they are deeply in love, is found stabbed to death with an ancient Florentine dagger. Under some strange hypnotic spell neither knows where he or she committed the crime in some inexplainable fury. From this point on, under the guidance of a smart detective and a psychologist, both interested in the young folks' welfare, the mystery and motive for the crime are unraveled.

The screen play is by Tom Reed, with added dialogue by Brown Holmes. Direction is by Robert Florey, whose forte is evidenced by such mystery dramas as "I Am a Thief" and "Registered Nurse."

Familiar names make up the supporting cast. Henry O'Neill is assigned the role of the murdered man; C. Aubrey Smith that of the tender hearted psychologist; Robert Barrat, the scientific detective. Supporting players listed are Eily Malyon, Charles Judels, Adrian Rosely, Paul Porcasi, Rafaela Ottiano and Grace Ford.

As this is the kind of picture which, because of story potency, is quite apt to have audiences sitting on edges of their chairs; as it also cleverly covers up the actual killer and the reasons for the crime until almost the very last moment, it looks to be one which will challenge even the smartest and most discerning amateur sleuths. Presented as a "see it and keep the secret" feature, it should make possible much unique showmanship.

MUTINY AHEAD

Majestic

This story is predicated upon showmanship and entertainment elements, the value of which is acknowledged as satisfactory to the regular run of patronage. The yarn is an action adventure thriller, opening in a swanky semi-sophisticated drawing room atmosphere, then transferring its activity to a treasure-hunting schooner. As it unfolds, a romantic love story is related against a background of jewel robberies; there's a bandit battle; jealous romantic conflict resulting in a wild man-to-man fight; discovery of the sunken treasure; an undersea struggle with an octopus; mutiny, and the eventual triumph of the loyal crew over the mutineers.

The picture is a Darmour production with original screen play by Stuart Anthony, who has specialized in exciting adventure yarns. Direction is by Tommy Atkins, who recently handled Radio's "Silver Streak."

Leading roles are assumed by Neil Hamilton and Kathleen Burke, who is currently appearing in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Featured roles are occupied by Leon Ames, Reginald Barlow, Noel Francis and Maidel Turner. The supporting cast includes Ray Turner, Katherine Jackson, Dick Curtis, Paul Fix, Mathew Betz, Joe Young, Edward Earle and Boothe Howard.

With the production trend pointing towards a cycle of sea stories, as several of the major companies have such brand of entertainment either in preparation or actually shooting, this picture should make possible a capitalizing of popular enthusiasm.

THE LITTLE COLONEL

Fox

In story value, personnel, production assets there is enough potential showmanship in "The Little Colonel" for several pictures. Readers of the Annie Fellows Johnson semiclassic of the same title constitute a ready-made audience. The screen play is by William Counselman, who performed the same service for "Bright Eyes." The picture is being directed by David Butler, who made "Bright Eyes." Shirley Temple is starred.

Locales are the old South during Reconstruction Days immediately after the Civil War and the Old West of the same time. The theme of the story, which has among its features little Miss Temple singing "Love's Young Dream," deals with the child, granddaughter of an old die-hard rebel, estranged from his daughter because she married a northern officer. As the little family fortunes in the great western mining country sink to a low ebb, Shirley and her mother, Evelyn Venable, return to live near the old homestead. There the child's sweetness and simplicity crack the old man's armor and effect a happy family reconciliation. Final sequences of the picture, localed in the South, are to be in Technicolor.

Shirley Temple's drawing powers are fully realized, and the quality of the supporting cast is unusual. Lionel Barrymore, currently in "David Copperfield," is the old Colonel. Miss Venable plays the part of Shirley's mother, and John Lodge, seen in "Menace" and "The Scarlet Empress," is her father. Included also are Bill Robinson, one of the stage's most noted Negro dancers; Sidney Blackmer, currently in "Count of Monte Cristo" and "The President Vanishes," Alden Chase, William Burress and Frank Darien.

Although there is quite a bit of comedy, human interest romantic drama is the principal motivating element. Possessing a sure heart appeal, the picture promises to emerge as the most interesting of any in which the little star has appeared.

DEVIL'S CARGO

Columbia

Dynamite on a careening, brakeless auto track is the devil's cargo. An action thriller, moving from one sensational anti-climax to another, the story concerns a former auto racer who, suffering a fear complex, falls in love with a girl and manages to get himself involved in a series of hair-raising situations far more dangerous to his physical and mental as well as sentimental wellbeing than anything that could happen on the roaring track.

Story and screen play, originals, are by Anthony Coldeway, and the production is being handled by Lambert Hillyer, a director who has made a specialty of Columbia's exciting action features.

The production, avoiding anything that smacks of sophistication or pretentiousness, is aimed directly to arouse the interest of the action-thrill fans. To attain this objective it makes use of much old tried and proved melodrama, the hero being a real hero in every aspect, and the villains despicable in all their activities.

With a definite market in mind, the producers have been careful to select a cast of players whose past accomplishments identify them with entertainment of this brand. Wally Ford is the sacrificed and imposed-upon hero who knows just what to do in the nick of time. The girl with whom he falls in love is Marian Marsh. Charles Grapewin, characteristically, is the poor old man who has a lot of trouble but fares pretty well in the end. The villain is Arthur Hohl, who has established a pretty good screen reputation for always being ready to indulge in any kind of dirty work. This quartet precipitating the major action, other players are the juvenile Jay Ward and Charles Middleton.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40

Fox

In contrast with the two most recent Will Rogers pictures, which, because of their character, came within the "dated" classification, this is a story of today. It bases its entertainment largely on the theory that today's elder generation is getting more fun out of life than the youngsters. In it Rogers is cast as a country newspaper editor, commenting in a way that parallels his daily briefs, read by millions, on the fads and foibles of life.

While based on the sensational book, "Life Begins at 40," written by Walter B. Pitkin, practically the only things retained are the title and some of the book's quaint philosophy. The screen play is by Lamar Trotti, who collaborated on "Judge Priest," and direction is by George Marshall.

Essentially a comedy, one of its hilarious sequences being a Rogers hog-calling episode, the story also carries a novel romantic thread. This, in relation to the fundamental motivation, should give the production an appeal equal to the youngsters.

While the cast includes several players who previously have appeared in Rogers pictures, several new personalities are introduced. Included are Richard Cromwell and Rochelle Hudson, about whom the romance of the story evolves; George Barbier, Jane Darwell, seen in "The White Parade" and "Bright Eyes"; Slim Summerville, Sterling Holloway, Thomas Beck, Roger Imhof, a fixture in most Rogers pictures; Charles Sellon, sensational in "Bright Eyes"; John Bradford and Ruth Gillette.

Although Rogers is the outstanding commercial attraction, the picture, because of its title and the material used in its production, is more of an exploitation feature than his recent attractions. Its small town locale and atmosphere make possible a brand of showmanship establishing the attraction as something absolutely different from anything the public has seen its favorite star play in recent years.

Princess O'Hara

Universal

No royal romance this; rather the comedy embellished modern romantic dramatic story of Kitty O'Hara, cabman's daughter. It is an original by Damon Runyon, the character of whose previous screen contributions is pretty well understood. The screen play is by Doris Malloy, in collaboration with Harry Clork. Direction is by David Burton, credited with "Let's Fall in Love" and "Sisters under the Skin."

Fundamentally, the yarn is a love story, of a princess, whose father was killed by Vic Toledo's gorillas in a taxi-cab war. As it takes on a vivid horse race atmosphere, it engenders conflicting romance, builds unique action, places the princess innocently in the role of horsethief who, under the sponsorship of a fairy godmother in the guise of a jewel encrusted old dowager, brings the hero and heroine together for the happy ending.

The cast is of unusual importance as it relates to recent pictures in which the leading players appeared. Because of the forthcoming "Sequoia," Jean Parker, one of the "Little Women" girls, is almost certain to be a popular figure. Likewise the latest picture featuring Chester Morris, "Society Doctor" (MGM), has the earmarks of being popular. Leon Errol was seen as the steward in "Captain Hates the Sea"; Vince Barnett is currently in "Black Fury," and Henry Armetta appeared in "Imitation of Life." The support lists Ralph Remley, Dorothy Gray, Anne Howard and Jimmy Fay, the little family which the princess is compelled to support; Verne Hillie, her romantic rival, also Clifford Jones, Clara Blandick (the dowager), Pepi Sinoff and Tom Dugan.

One of the showmanship features should be Cabman O'Hara's skin and bones nag, Goldberg, a peg upon which many odd exploitation stunts can be hung.

ONE of Hollywood's noblemen passed peacefully last week, when death took Col. Conway Carroll Wyatt, 80, custodian of Fox Movietone studio, unshrouding in his death as colorful a drama as ever graced the screen.

He was a mysterious figure to all but three persons. His benign personality and spirit of noblesse oblige implied a heritage which everyone sensed in all daily contacts.

Heir to an earldom which he forsook to be a soldier of His Majesty in the Zulu and Boer war, he later fought with the Americans in the Spanish-American trouble. And he is said to have served at one time on Lord Kitchener's general staff. He was given England's highest award for bravery, the Victoria Cross.

Descended from Irish Kings, born in County Antrim, 1855, son of Lady Ann O'Neill, he permitted his family to think him dead, a victim of Cuba's yellow fever. In 1900 he married Emily Ridley, daughter of General Ridley of the Confederate service. One daughter survives him.

He met Winfield Sheehan at San Juan Hill, with the Rough Riders.

Admired and esteemed by all Fox studio employees, to each, without their knowledge, he willed them a legacy of his own loyalty.

"Credit Grabbing"

"Credit grabbing, one of the most popular of the arts and sciences of Hollywood, is responsible for most of the poor pictures canned here," emphatically declared a studio executive.

"Whenever you have writer, director, producer or artist, whose mental focus revolves around position of his name on the screen, the size of his name on posters, or his social standing at the Clover Club, usually his film goes into production like a peacock and comes out like a duck. Then the 'credit grabbers' wash their hands of it. The head of the studio gets credit for those. But when one comes along that hits—it's a holiday for the credit cullers."

39 Pictures in Work

Although major studio production hit a high peak with 39 pictures actively in the work, only three new ones were started and but one was completed. Paramount, Columbia and Twentieth Century each has a new one, and Universal is credited with the single finished feature.

At Paramount "Hold 'Em Yale," adapted from a recent Damon Runyon short story, was started. The cast is headed by Larry (Buster) Crabbe, Patricia Ellis, George Barbier and William Frawley.

The starting Columbia feature, "Gimpy," will present Jack Holt, Mona Barrie, Frankie Darro and Bradley Page.

"Les Miserables," the Victor Hugo classic, was started at Twentieth Century with Fredric March, Charles Laughton, Rochelle Hudson and Florence Eldredge.

Universal's completed production is "Transient Lady," the cast including Gene Raymond, Henry Hull, Frances Drake, June Clayworth, Clark Williams, Spencer Charters and Douglas Fowley.

Besides the 39 pictures actively working, there are 24 completed or editing. MGM has nine; Warners six; Fox three, Paramount and Columbia two each, and Universal and Radio one apiece. Besides these, 44 are in preparation for early shooting.

MGM is busy with five productions. "Reckless," "Naughty Marietta," "Vampires of Prague," "Public Enemy No. 2" and "Casino Murder Case." Eight are on schedule for immediate production. There is an untitled Marx Brothers picture. For "Mutiny on the Bounty," preliminary atmospheric shots are being made. "Wife vs. Secretary," Faith Baldwin story, will team William Powell, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy. Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina" will have Greta Garbo and Fredric March. "Cecil Rhodes" will star Charles Laughton. "Her Cardboard Lover" and "Times Square Lady" are two others in preparation.

Fox has three in the active shooting stage—"George White's 1935 Scandals," "Dante's Inferno" and "Recipe for Murder." Seven being prepared for the cameras are: "Thunder in the Night," with Warner Baxter and Eva LaGallienne; "Highway Robbery," Spencer Tracy; "Hold That Tiger," Lew Ayres, Zasu Pitts and Walter King; "The Torchbearers," Will Rogers; "Redheads on Parade," John Boles and June Knight; "Nymph Errant," Alice Faye and Jack Haley, and "Orchids to You."

Warner, busiest of all, with eight shooting and six editing, plans to continue its pace, as eight additional features are scheduled for early production. Shooting are, "Go Into Your Dance," "King of the Ritz," "Goose and the Gander,". "Travelling Saleslady," "Wanderlust," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Caliente" and "The Florentine Dagger." On their completion, eight more will start. "Oil for the Lamps of China," will feature Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson, John Eldredge and Jean Muir. Robert Donat, star of "Count of Monte Cristo," will be seen in "Captain Blood," Sabatini's story. "The Green Cat," stage play adaptation, will feature Bette Davis. "Women Are Bum Newspaper Men" a recent magazine story, has Glenda Farrell heading an all-star cast. George Brent and Jean Muir will be seen in the Ring Lardner story, "Haircut." The first Marion Davies picture to be released by this company will be "Page Miss Glory." "Case of the Curious Bride," a recent Liberty magazine yarn, completes the group in preparation.

Paramount Shooting Seven

With seven pictures shooting, Paramount closely rivals Warner for number of features in work. Although only two are editing, six are set for early activity. Among those ready to go immediately is "Big Broadcast of 1935," with Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti, Joe Morrison, Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland. In Cecil DeMille's "Crusades" will be seen Henry Wilcoxon, Loretta Young, Ian Keith, Alan Hale and Sir Guy Standing. "Two on A Tower," principal locale being the Eiffel Tower in Paris, will present Tullio Carminati and Mary Ellis. "End of the World" (tentative title), will star Sylvia Sidney. Although no cast has been set, the much discussed stage play, "Small Miracle," is ready for the cameras. The last prepared production, "People Will Talk," teams Charley Ruggles and Mary Boland.

Radio's five active pictures are supplemented by six in preparation. Included are "Village Tale"; "Sylvester Bonnard," which will star Anne Shirley; "The Informer," a story of the Irish revolutions; "She," adapted from the Sir Rider Haggard novel; "The Murder Song" with Wheeler and Woolsey, and "Dress Rehearsal."

To succeed the quartet now on the stage, Columbia has two stories ready. "Wings of Song" will star Grace Moore. "Eight Bells," adapted from the wellknown old stage musical comedy classic, is being cast.

At Universal seven productions are ready to go. William Powell and Fannie Brice will be seen in "The Great Ziegfeld." "Show Boat" will feature Irene Dunne. "Diamond Jim" will star Edward Arnold. "The Raven," adapted by Jim Tully from the Edgar Allan Poe poem, will team Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi. Also ready for transfer from writers to actors are "Sing Me a Love Song," a musical drama; "Magnificent Obsession," and "Sutter's Gold."

Only three short subjects are shooting, reflecting the condition of the short subject market, exclusive of cartoons, MGM, Roach and Warner each having one. Eleven are editing and eleven are being prepared.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

No. 100—SALARY AND WORKING HOURS FOR THEATRE "CHECKERS"

QUESTION—Please advise me if there has been some provision made in the NRA set-up to affect salaries and working hours of "checkers," both for agencies and for individual distributors.—PENNSYLVANIA.

ANSWER—The motion picture code does not in any place stipulate salaries and working hours for "checkers."

A checker might be considered to be a distribution employee, because he works either directly for a distributing company or for a checking service which is retained to check percentage receipts on a motion picture for a distributor. The hours of employment stipulated in the code for workers in distribution are as follows:

Section 1 (a) No employee, except outside salesmen, shall work more than forty (40) hours in any one week.

(b) This provision for working hours shall not apply to professional persons employed in their profession nor to employees in a managerial or executive capacity, or in any other capacity of distributor or sole responsibility who now receive more than $35.00 per week; nor to employees on emergency or maintenance and repair work.

The 40-hour maximum working week, therefore, does exempt, according to the foregoing provisions, all film salesmen, professional persons such as accountants, auditors and the like, exchange managers or other exchange executives of sole responsibility, and other persons in distribution receiving more than $35.00 per week; also, employees on emergency or maintenance or repair work.

Section 2, Article IV-B, which follows the foregoing provision, and which pertains to the minimum wages for distribution, provides that no employee in distribution shall be paid:

(a) Less than fifteen dollars ($15.00) per week in any city over 500,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city.

(b) Less than fourteen dollars and fifty cents ($14.50) per week in any city between 250,000 and 500,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city.

(c) Less than fourteen dollars ($14.00) per week in any city or place up to 250,000 population or in the immediate trade area of such city or place.

Whether checkers are to be governed by the foregoing clauses stipulating maximum working hours for certain distribution workers, exempting certain other classes from such maximum hours and stipulating a minimum wage schedule, is a matter that must be decided either by the motion picture Code Authority, acting as an interpreter of the code, or by the National Recovery Administration (William P. Farnsworth is a NRA deputy administrator with supervision over amusement codes). Or, perhaps, there may be some service code which would take in checkers, and inquiries in this connection could be made at the National Labor Board of the National Recovery Administration at Washington.

No. 101—DESCRIPTION OF THEATRE "BANK NIGHTS" STUNT

QUESTION—As a regular reader of Motion Picture Herald I have noticed several articles in regard to "Bank Nights." However, I have been unable to learn just what "Bank Night" is and how it is conducted. I am very anxious to find out the full particulars and would appreciate it very much if you will accommodate me with the same.—WEST VIRGINIA.

ANSWER—We assume that the inquiring exhibitor is aware of the fact that "Bank Nights" in the copyrighted form now in general use are a violation of the motion picture code as the result of an interpretation placed upon the so-called "lottery" clause (Part 3-E, Section 1-a) by the Code Authority, which ruled that although "Bank Nights" were not specifically mentioned as such in the clause prohibiting lotteries, nevertheless they are to be construed as being included in the prohibition.

Regardless, the machinery of the code provides that a competing exhibitor, or another exhibitor, must file a formal complaint with the Local Grievance Board in the territory against the theatre employing the "Bank Night" plan of merchandising. The matter is left entirely to the Local Grievance Board to determine on the facts of the individual case whether the question of lottery is involved, lotteries being prohibited under the code. Appeals from Local Grievance Board decisions may be filed with the Code Authority. (Further discussion of "Bank Nights" and latest developments in the conflict in the industry for and against the plan appeared in the issue of January 12.)

The following is a description of the "Bank Night" plan that has been copyrighted, trademarked and patented by Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., and which is in general use:

Affiliated Enterprises enters into a contract with an exhibitor, for a sum of money (weekly fee, or a percentage of the gross receipts), and furnishes the theatre with register books, trailers and other paraphernalia. On a designated night of the week the theatre itself offers a prize of some specific amount of money and the drawing thereof, as a rule, takes place at about nine o'clock in the evening. Registration by the patron is said to be absolutely free and is further described as follows:

In Register Number 1, persons, patrons, over the age of 16 years, may register by signing their names and addresses, and opposite each name space is a number, in regular order from number one up. Register Number 2 is provided by Affiliated, in which there are placed, in alphabetical order, the names appearing numerically in Register Number 1. Set opposite each name in the second register is the number corresponding to the number opposite the respective name in the first register. This system of registration is provided in order to eliminate any duplicate registration.

Register Number 1 is placed in or near the entrance or exit of the theatre or, it may be placed at some other convenient place. Each person when registering places the prefix of "Mr.," "Mrs." or "Miss" before the name, and no one shall be allowed to register more than once.

A bank is chosen by the exhibitor, wherein a certain designated amount of money is deposited by him for each week of the project. The name of said bank shall be exhibited over Register Number 1, and the name of the bank may be used in all advertising pertaining thereto.

It is distinctly provided that no additional sum or compensation shall be added to the regular admission to such theatre by reason of the "Bank Night," and, according to Affiliated Enterprises, "the purpose of the system shall be for advertising only."

At a certain time or times fixed by the exhibitor, the numbers corresponding to those set opposite the names in Register Number 1, are placed in a box, from which is chosen or selected one another; and in the event the person, whose name is written in Register Number 1 opposite the number so chosen from the box, shall be present in that theatre, or on the outside, without a paid admission, or appears at the box-office to claim the award, he shall be entitled thereto, and he shall have the right to go into the theatre without a paid admission and shall be entitled to the cash offer as though he or she were in the theatre by a paid admission at the time of the drawing; and the owner of the theatre shall immediately make available said amount to the person entitled thereto.

In the event that the individual representing such number thus chosen is not in the theatre at the time of the selection, or does not appear at the theatre and claim the award within a reasonable time after the selection, he or she shall not have or be entitled to said amount. In the latter event, the amount of said bank account shall be carried over to the next week and shall be increased by the regular designated amount. Thus the amount shall accumulate from week to week until the registration of a party is selected or chosen who claims the said amount, either by being in the theatre or on the outside, or who presents himself within a reasonable time after the selection. There will only be one number chosen each week, and, according to Affiliated, "it shall be distinctly understood that the registration shall be absolutely free and that no admission or ticket shall be required in order to register and participate in same."

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Alamo, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

Hey there, what's getting to be the matter of these United States of America anyhow? We read in the press recently that the supreme court had declared unconstitutional the "hot" oil section of the oil code, right at a time when we were going to paste the blue eagle on the back window of April Shower. This is another case of "I told you so," and there are a lot more things that are unconstitutional too.

We have always had a lot of confidence in the judgment of our supreme court, and it is quite evident that its members don't believe very strong in a one man government. The facts are that the court has never been very crazy over back seat drivers. This government was founded upon the theory of the people ruling, but we have drifted so far away from that theory that we can't see it with a spyglass.

We have read and heard a great deal about Child Labor laws and the way they are being enforced. We sit out on our front porch, which is a few rods from the highway, and we see truck after truck going by loaded full of Mexican men, women and children, going to the vegetable or grape fruit fields to work, while we see dozens of Americans tramping the highways every day looking for a job.

If these children who are doing the work that Americans should be doing are American children they should be required to go to school. If they are Mexicans they should be deported. The child labor laws may be enforced in Massachusetts and other eastern states but it is a joke here in the Rio Grande valley, and this is practically Vice President Garner's front yard, too. Institutions and corporations hire Mexican help because they claim they can get the Mexicans to work cheaper than Americans. Any institution that thrives on that theory will never be electrocuted for its patriotism. Down here they put the Mexicans to work and the Americans on the relief rolls, and, as we said before, this is not far from John N. Garner's home town. Outside of that, though, Texas is a great state and full of people whom we rate as good as those up north, and much better than some we know, but we are not mentioning any names. She would be a little better off, however, if she had our golf course and our jawbone poker club.

Color-blind Driving

Some people think that the best way to break up a drouth is to plant a "Shelterbelt" 100 miles wide and 1,000 miles long, regardless of the cost, since "Jones pays the freight" anyhow. And some there are who think the best way to cure the depression is to give business a shot in the arm. Maybe our vision is somewhat clouded. Maybe we see things from the cornfield, but if we are going joy riding we want to know that the driver knows the rules of the road and can distinguish a red light from a green one. Color-blind drivers have been working for the undertakers for a long time.

It may be of interest to Micky Larson and Nels Benson up at Oakland, Nebraska, to know that we met an old friend of theirs down here by the name of Moreatis. Moreatis came here from Oakland and he says he has known Micky and Nels for a long time. He gave us a lot of information about these boys that we don't care to mention here, since they are both good friends of ours. But maybe you don't know who these two Polanders are. Nels owns a fine theatre building in Oakland and Micky operates the theatre, and has operated it for a long time in spite of all the authorities could do. He overcomes public objection by running the best pictures there are to be had, and Mickey is a great favorite with a lot of the Hollywood stars.

Moreatis says that when he was in camp at Camp Funston near Des Moines, Iowa, during the war Nels came down there and brought each boy from Oakland 20 cartons of cigarettes, and if there is a boy who was down there and hasn't got Nels listed as 100% plus he ought to be shot at sunrise with a gun loaded with buckshot.

If you will recall, Nels is the boy who wanted Mickey and us to help him move a piano the first time we called there, and the next time we had to help him move a cookstove. Both of them had handles on 'em and would hold about a gallon. Outside of that and a few other things, they are not a very bad bunch up there.

The Way to Start

We have just received a letter from Mr. Beels at Dodge, Nebraska, advising us that he was opening a new theatre up there and wants us to send him the HERALD. Whenever a man tells us that he wants the HERALD it is pretty conclusive evidence that he is a man of excellent judgment. We hope Mr. Beels has an abundance of success with his new theatre.

These Texas Longhorns down here are great people; they are always trying to do something for us. Probably they have a left-handed notion that we are of some importance to humanity, but anyhow they keep our room filled with grape fruit and oranges all the while. We have enough fruit piled up in our room now to last an ordinary man and the hired girl for several days, and still they invite us out to their homes to get more fruit. But we'd sooner pull oranges and grape fruit off the trees in the Rio Grande valley than shovel snow off the sidewalks in Nebraska. Just think how John Piller has to shovel snow up in front of the Piller Grand in Valley City, North Dakota. Gee whiz.

Fresh Strawberries

We can get fresh strawberries in the markets here now and we see truck loads of cabbage, carrots, beets and other garden varieties going by to the packing houses every day, and when any of it gets up north in the corn belt it is so high that it is almost prohibitive because of the transportation charges. They sell strawberries here now for 7½ cents a pint, and a pint will make a pretty good shortcake, if you ask us. And a shortcake made out of fresh Rio Grande berries isn't a bad thing to have in the family. Probably New York and other eastern cities never heard of the Rio Grande valley, but as soon as they get the harbor dredged out at Pt. Isabelle so they can get water transportation direct to those cities, they are going to look on the map and see where the Rio Grande valley is. A Mexican said to us yesterday, "Esta Rio Grande varey es un ersmo varey en es to viere," and we replied, "Oh, yah, dos is richt, by gosh." Then he went into a cafe and ordered a bowl of chili and some frijoles. Some longhorns down here call these Mexicans "Pepper-bellied greasers." We have found them to be a pretty decent kind of pople.

Maybe next week we will give you a shark story—if Ernie will print it.

Gentlemen:-

I consider LITTLE MEN which played at our Byrd Theatre, Richmond, Virginia, the week of December 25th one of the finest productions made this year. It is on a par with any major production, and I consider it a privilege to have shown a picture of this caliber.

I am inclosing you an editorial which appeared in the afternoon paper in which the paper recommended this picture to its readers. This editorial is one thing that we very seldom get, and as you know, we cannot purchase.

Wishing you every success with this picture,

Dear Lou:

When we were at Caliente you spoke to me about the picture I was playing first run at the Central, Oakland, "LITTLE MEN" by name.

I don't know whether you have bought the picture or not, but if you have not, I would suggest that you buy it right away. I think it will go over big with you and I will be more than pleased to give you any thoughts or ideas that we used in our publicity campaign, if you so desire.

The people that saw the picture in Oakland were 99% pleased and boosted the picture to others.

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—Played on Bargain Night and was pleasing to all. Give us Brown in more action pictures. Running time, 61 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—This is a very good picture that pleased all who saw it. It is full of action, thrills, comedy and romance. It is an action drama about the life of an ambulance driver and is very good entertainment for the whole family. The gangster theme in this picture is put over in such a way that it is not objectionable. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Dec. 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: John Gilbert, Victor McLaglen, Alison Skipworth, Wynne Gibson, Walter Connolly, Leon Errol—Had read some kicks on this and so was afraid of it a little, but most of my patrons thought it a good show. It deviates from the usual way a story is put up and so puzzles some of them until they get to thinking it over. But it's good, clean comedy program, I think. Played Jan. 10. —B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—This average entertainment from Jack Holt. He always pleases our fans and we don't have to worry when we set his picture in. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 4.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

DESERT VENGEANCE: Buck Jones—It's pictures like this that cause Buck Jones to lose his popularity. It was too unreal.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy, Lillian Bond—One or two more roles like this one and Tim McCoy deserves a role opposite Garbo. He is much better in action roles than in western. Running time, 58 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong, Ann Sothern—Another good picture from Columbia. Pleasing story that your audience will enjoy. Ann Sothern good in this picture. Played Oct. 23-24.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie, Winnie Lightner—Excellent human interest story that will please any day of the week. Winnie Lightner and Ed Brophy furnish plenty of comedy to make it breeze along at a merry clip. Don't be afraid of this one. It's good. Played Jan. 8-9.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie, Winnie Lightner—A good, clean family picture. We heard nothing but praise for it and I believe it will satisfy any small-town audience. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Jan. 4-5.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Winnie Lightner, Mona Barrie—A very fine picture. Although it has a poor title, it sure is a good program picture. You can push it and then face them when they come out. Book it if you have it bought. Played Jan. 3.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard, Roger Pryor—There have not been many reports on this one, so I will tell you the truth as I have experienced it. We opened on Sunday and had the poorest business that we have had with a Sunday opening following the biggest Saturday night we ever had with another picture. This picture may appeal to a few but not to me. It is just trouble from beginning to end.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—Played this picture on Bank Night and it pleased all. Lombard and Robson make a great team. Running time, 85 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—A very fine picture, good enough for Sunday in any town. Well directed and acted and moves along at a good pace, with plenty of comedy and yet at no time does it become silly. A better picture than "Lady for a Day" and that was good. Played Dec. 20.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones, Cecilia Parker—Played this one to good business on Saturday and Sunday nights. Will please your western fans. Played Dec. 29-30.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT LAW: Buck Jones, Carmelita Geraghty—This is a very good picture of the western type and should please all western fans. It is full of action, fighting, romance and a bit of comedy. The story begins in the front lines of the war, but ends just as a western should. Buck Jones always draws a good business here and this one pleased all. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Dec. 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—This picture was a master production, but our patrons are uneducated to operas, so unfortunately it did not please so well. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Dec. 16-17.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—You exhibitors that have not shown this picture should get busy and put it on and then just sit back and take in the shekels. Buck Jones at his best in a light role and if I may say so, Dorothy Revier adds plenty of color to the picture and we should see more of Dorothy. It is an action picture with plenty of good, clean comedy and will serve as splendid week-end offering.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Allen Jenkins, Donald Cook, Jean Arthur—Dandy picture, plenty of action, good story. Pleased our Holt fans. Played Oct. 20-21.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHIRLWIND, THE: Tim McCoy—Good western. But think it's my last McCoy. My patrons do not like him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—Pleased all who came to see it. Leslie Howard, being English, was able to give a splendid performance in this picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Dec. 23-24.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis—One of the finest Brown pictures made. Plenty of business to a satisfied audience. Don't be afraid to step on this one—you can't say too much. Played a little late, but got them in. Played Nov. 3-4.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—My patrons still telling me what a swell picture it was. Scenes of West Point drew much favorable comment, and a bouquet to Pat O'Brien for his bit in a fine cast—from my patrons and myself. Powell's roommate in this picture looks like a "comer" to me. Played Jan. 11-12.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—Four boys just out of college showing what they are up against in keeping the larder full of groceries. Entertaining production that will please. Only wish Jean Muir had had more to do. Played January 6-7.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien—Pat O'Brien as a fast talking auctioneer. Sort of a Lee Tracy type picture. Will please more men than women. O. K. for action day. Played January 5.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—One of the best pictures I have ever played. Well liked by everybody. Truly a family picture.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Played this picture pretty old, but it sure is a good one. I believe the best one she has made. Dunn and Trevor are very good also, I believe the best I have ever seen them, and all in all, it is a fine picture. Played December 13.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Tom Brown and Anita Louise in college story, fighting and quarreling all through the picture. Professors kept busy patching it up and they finally end in a clinch. Again Stepin Fetchit mumbling so no one can hear or understand him. Could have been swell show, but it is far from it. Business not average. Played January 11-12.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Swell. "Program picture out-grosses average special." Which goes to show that if a picture has story, direction, stars, it doesn't have to be labelled a special with a production cost outline to put it over. Played December 11.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—This is a very good picture of the college type with football as the background, and the story deals mostly with the fraternity affairs. It has plenty of comedy and romance and will appeal mostly to the younger patrons than to the adults. Stepin Fetchit adds much to the entertainment and this will prove great family entertainment. Played on late Saturday night show. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Average picture. People who had never been to college liked it better than those who had. The gold medal goes to Stepin Fetchit. What would Fox do without him? Good singing, especially by Glee Club, a bright spot in this average picture. Played January 13-14.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—Played this five days and made mistake by not running all week. Haven't space here to say how great the picture is, but it broke all records for business. This kid will run Will Rogers close race this year for top grosser. Congratulations, Shirley. Thanks for the Christmas present. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 25-26-27-28-29.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young—Could have done more business but I am perfectly satisfied as my people were. All those I spoke with claimed it was a beautifully made picture and perfect entertainment. This Loretta Young girl sure is coming along in grand style and does a nice job in this picture. Played December 26-27.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Charles Boyer—A splendid picture in my estimation, but the patrons said No, and proved it at the box office. Made 62 cents profit, however, and was thankful. "Caravan," like "Love Time" was a little too classical and they just won't work. Loretta Young deserves all the credit for getting them to take a chance on it. Running time, 109 minutes. Played November 30-December 1.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—Here is a fool proof story. It would have been hard to have made a bad picture from such a story as this. The production organization of Harold Lloyd is to be congratulated for the manner in which they transferred this story to the screen. The ending of this was changed, but only to improve it, it seemed to me. They spent money freely. It gave satisfaction. Business was just a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—

Our people like the Chan stories, consequently the box-office is good when I play one. I consider this one the best of the Chan series. Played November 23-24.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—To my sorrow, I played this against my better judgment, and had I have followed the advice in this column I should have saved myself a loss. Poor, though a few said it was the best Chan to date. Well, what of it, that still don't mean much. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Very interesting detective story with Oland as the Chinese detective, a character made famous by Earl Derr Biggers and his Post stories. Very good picture. Played January 1-2.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: The most interesting of this type show. A history of and events leading up to the World War. Played January 8-9.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—One of the best westerns this year. Excellent story and fine cast. Played December 21-22.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Good murder mystery. Good cast. But just did not draw. People here do not seem to like murder mysteries. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 14-15.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Made a nice Christmas show for us. All our patrons put their OK on this one. Did not get the business I expected due to below zero weather. Played December 25.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—One of the best by Rogers. Ideal for a small town and entertaining from start to finish. Played December 16. —B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Just another air picture and it will not draw. Air shows are a thing of the past. Story is weak. Air shots interesting. Some comedy by Vince Barnett and Herbert Mundin. Baxter gives a good performance, but a shame to waste him in this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 12-13.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—This is a very good picture of its type, but did not appeal to the women. It is a war picture with plenty of comedy, drama, thrills, action and romance. It is a story of the air corps of the Army with everything one could expect of that type of show. This offers good entertainment for the whole family and we played one day to very good business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—It is too much to expect of Lasky to make two good ones in a row. He should have named this "Hell and Rain," for it rains entire first half of picture and balance of cast try to find each other the last half. No story, no sense, no acting. Just rain. I wish they would let Stepin Fetchit learn to talk plain instead of to himself. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 9-10.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Pleasing little program picture with a little of everything. The story concerns a deserted mining camp and a hunt for the lost gold mine. Some comedy by Stephin Fetchit. Played January 12.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Played this one on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday but should have played it an additional day as the business warranted. Best Rogers picture to date. Played December 9-10-11.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Tom Brown, Anita Louise, Stepin Fetchit, Henry Walthall—Drew well against a terrible rain storm. Grand old Henry B. Walthall equals Mr. Rogers. But after all it's the writer, the story. This great cast had it, and delivered. We expect to break our rule and bring it back. It's that good, and better. Played January 7.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Contrary to all reports, Will Rogers has always been a box office flop to me, for the reason that there is never more than about two prints to an exchange and by the time we get a print every one has seen the picture, and what little business I get are those that have seen it and forgotten what it was about. Personally, think his pictures are perfect entertainment. Played December 21-22.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—The best yet by Rogers. Very good acting and story and a picture that will click with the whole family. Played December 30.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—It will please if you can get them in. It's worth about two of Fox's "Marie Galante" or "Gambling."—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—A splendid picture that took a loss. We just can't use opera or classics. The Legion of Decency hasn't done us any good. I live in a Catholic settlement, and it hasn't brought me any new customers by showing clean pictures, and I did get them when there was some sex in them. Played November 27.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—One of the worst pictures shown in a long time. This should about finish Swanson. John Boles deserves better. Title is good; sounds like a good musical. It's an operetta and the silliest thing I ever saw and people walked out in droves. Why didn't they use this for foreign distribution only? Running time 81 minutes. Played December 23-24.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—We put this picture on Sunday-Monday against our better judgment, thinking perhaps the stars would put it over, but we did not do a very good business on it and those that came were not satisfied. Several walkouts and the second night told the story. This would be a good picture to avoid playing in the small towns if possible. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 30-31.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MYSTERY WOMAN: Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland —Although this is a program picture, it was well received and comments were favorable with the exception of a few that are always hard boiled. It is a story of a woman spy who is after an international document of great importance to the French government. This document in turn will clear her husband, Rod La Rocque, of the charge of high treason, whereby he has been sentenced to penal servitude for life on Devil's Island. Her adventures lead to America, where she is mixed up with other secret agents, but wins out in the end. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 8.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

PURSUED: Rosemary Ames, Victor Jory, Russell Hardie—A terrible booking for Christmas show, but it was the best I could do. They seemed to like it, however, not many comments either way. Took an expected loss, however. My advice would be to put it on your Saturday play date, and it might get by. No names is the biggest fault with the picture. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 25.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—A nice show that will please all who see it. Clean and entertaining from start to finish. Played December 23.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Our audience enjoyed this picture very much, plenty of comedy and good for any day of the week. Played October 13-14.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—One of the best comedy dramas Fox has ever made. Keeps the customers laughing every minute. Good business on mid-week. Will please any day of the week. Played November 6-7.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—This is a very good picture of the comedy drama type. The story exposes the Hollywood racket of dramatic schools and is full of comedy, drama and romance. The story is a bit draggy in spots, but as a whole it offers good entertainment for the whole family. The musical touch adds much to the picture. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—One swell picture. It has everything. Good for any night, especially Sunday. Jesse Lasky finally came through with a good picture. Jane Darwell nearly stole the show, and if Fox gives her some good parts, they will have another Marie Dressler. Business good. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 16-17-18.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—This is a very good picture that is quite different from the usual show. It is a drama, daring and human and dealing with many young women student nurses, who sacrifice their life for humanity. Practically all of the picture takes place in a large hospital and this will prove excellent entertainment for all. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Mascot

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen, Ted Fio-Rito & Orchestra—Fair musical comedy that seemed to please our Saturday and Sunday audiences. Nothing big. Played January 5-6.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young—Same old football stuff and the young people like it.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer—One of the outstanding pictures of the year. Think it was the snow storm that hurt my business as I had many requests for the picture. Played December 18-19-20.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—This may be one of the best pictures of the year, but it is absolutely not a small town picture. All dialogue, no action, little comedy. Shearer has a certain following. It is a prestige picture, and that does not pay the bills. A greater number of walkouts than on any picture that we have had in some time. In fact, were it not for the acting of the principals, it would have been boresome and in fact it was to a large number of our patrons. It is just not in the cards to have pictures like this please only just a small number of our patrons. Very much overrated as an audience picture. As far as a rural town is concerned, I don't want any more like it myself. Second day's business nil.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—"Judge Priest" was the only picture to outgross this one to date. Splendid picture. Metro is again having a good year. Played November 25-26.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Otto Kruger, Stuart Erwin—A rather fantastic story, but so well put together that it does not seem improbable and the acting is all 100 per cent good. Heard no unfavorable comment and much praise. It happened to hit the worst spot possible at the end of the holiday week, but did as much business as any picture could have done. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 28-29.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Played this one on Thanskiving Day, possibly a little late for a baseball picture, but I can assure you that the good business that we enjoyed was due to this picture as the word-of-mouth had helped it. Had we played it earlier it probably would not have done more than it did. It's a natural for the day I played it, as there is nothing that will offend and there is plenty of action and comedy.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Too bad we couldn't have played this picture right after the World Series. However, it pleased the baseball fans and most of the women. Wrong time of year and too much snow. Average biz. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 12-13.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—A nice little picture that pleased. Nothing big about this. However, it pleased and that's what we like in a picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 2.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy —Although not the type of picture of "The Thin Man," it pleased our patrons as well, if not better. A good box office attraction. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—A great picture. Not only a great cast but the people will certainly enjoy this picture. Many say it is one of our best pictures. —Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—Played this on Bargain Night and had a nice crowd. James Dunn and Jean Parker, being the stars, were good, but Una Merkel and Stuart Erwin also deserve merits. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 4-5.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—Plenty good and pleased every one who saw it. Played December 28.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Pictures of this caliber are a pleasure to run not only from the box-office but from the reaction they leave. Everybody was pleased. Just one of those sweet, well-made pictures that draw. More of this type of entertainment won't hurt the business a bit. Played December 2-3.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—This was a knock-out for our small town. Pleased every one, including our box-office. That scene where Bob tried milking the cow brought more guffaws than we've heard for a long time. Already our patrons are asking, "When's the next Bob Montgomery and Maureen O'Sullivan picture coming?" and that's sweet music to our ears. Let's have them co-starred again in a similar story, MGM. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 5-6.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Lots of our patrons proclaimed this as the best picture they had ever seen. Robert Montgomery's natural acting puts this picture in a class by itself—his easy flow of high-class comedy is great. You can step on this one and not be afraid. Played January 9.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeannette MacDonald—Frank Lehar's operetta brought to the screen. A beautiful and spectacular musical romance well done. Music lovers should enjoy it immensely. Played three nights to only average business. Running time, 10 reels. Played December 30-31-January 1.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—Good little action picture that held you tense throughout the show. Played December 12-13.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—It's different. It's Garbo's greatest story of a woman who dared to seize the love her heart demanded. From Somerset Maughan's greatest novel. Played to average business. Running time, 9 reels.—Played 10-11-12.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—I think the best Garbo picture we have played in a long time. Our patrons thought so, too. There was not so much foreign talk or costume or period setting as in her previous pictures. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 25-26.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—Something wrong with this picture somewhere and I could not tell where it was, but the audience did not like it. The story was a little disjointed, and while it was a semi-gangster picture, it seemed to be reaching for pathos that wasn't there. Not so good. Could have been left on the shelf and no one would have missed it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—Ran this picture on Bank Night, but patrons came because of Bank Night and not the picture. Running time, 59 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth, Maxine Doyle, Betty Grable—Played on Bargain Night and pleased all who saw it. Will go over better in college towns. Running time, 87 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Jimmy Durante—We played this picture one day on Saturday and it pleased our Saturday crowd. We were afraid to play the picture two days on account of Durante being so loud in all the pictures he is in, but he was not so bad in this picture and the picture would have held up two days, we believe. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 5.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—A great picture with excellent cast, and fine box-office. Running time, 104 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes—Sweet show. Excellent acting by Helen Hayes in a difficult part. Played December 30-31.—J. Glen Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—Actors portrayed their roles well, but this type of picture doesn't appeal to our patrons. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh—I saw the show playing and thought it the bunk, but when we did play it I was surprised to find that the patrons liked it and said so, and that's that. Played January 3-4.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—One of the finest pictures we have ever run. Best box office to date this year. Cast perfect, 100 per cent satisfied customers, no percentages. Boys, play this one and give your audience a treat and give the independent corporation a break; they deserve it with this kind of a production. An excellent small town picture. Played December 8-9.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—This will please most of your crowd, but you will think it a cheap show. They followed the book too close to make a real motion picture entertainment out of it, though the people will come out to see it and that is what counts.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

'NEATH ARIZONA SKIES: John Wayne—Just another western action picture with thrills sprinkled here and there which a child could solve. Why do they use the same scenery that has been used in the past two western pictures that I have run? Running time, 6 reels. Played January 3-4-5.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Very good comedy-drama that people went for in a big way. Business way above the average. Good story, cast, photography, all good. Sylvia Sidney and Gene Raymond do some good acting in this one. Was surprised at the business as I did not expect to do much on it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Gertrude Michael, Joseph Schildkraut—Good picture of ancient history. Spectacular and thrilling. Pleased. Played December 30-31.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—Truly different. Did not hear any kicks, but did not hear anybody rave about it, either. Running time, 11 reels. Played January 4-5-6.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—Now this baby went right out and did business just like old times. Penner in just about enough—any more would kill him off. Oakie good as usual. Running time, 9 reels—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner—There is no question but that this is the best picture released this year. Extra good draw at the box-office and in the picture the producers remembered what people want to see when they come to a show—entertainment.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—A natural. A big grosser. Could have played a week. Great mixture of comedy, football, dancing, singing and snappy music. "College Rhythm" tune a hit. Joe Penner and his duck a riot of fun. Am glad Paramount signed Joe up for another feature, as Joe is sure to become big draw among comedians. Pleased everybody. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 2-3-4-5-6.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—This is real box office stuff and a very entertaining slapstick comedy. Well balanced cast with Lanny Ross doing some nice singing and Helen Mack some nice looking and Oakie and Joe furnish laughs. They can leave the foreign dame at home and my audience will never miss her.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Worse than worse. Old man Marx seems to love vulgar expressions, and the others not permitted to do what made them good in "Cocoanuts"—plenty of music. But not in "Duck Soup." Terrible. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 8.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Old, but pleased my people.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael—Slow and dull. Just waste of good celluloid that could have been used for collar buttons or somethin'. Running time, 7 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—Bing's best picture. The type that everybody likes.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—Taken from the story of the "Grand Duchess and the Waiter" which bordered on foreign locale and sophistication and a very poor picture. This one will hurt Bing for some time to come. Good title, but nothing to back it up with. Worst business on this of any Crosby picture so far. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 1-2-3.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—We played this picture mid-week instead of on Saturday as we would do ordinarily and we did a dandy business, and the picture was good. Running time, 55 minutes. Played January 8-9.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Those who like Fields will go for this one as it is full of laughs; not a dull moment. Not much story. But, after all, it's a comedy and a good one. Good for any time of the week. It will not draw any extra business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 9-10-11.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—As good as the average Fields picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 3-4.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker—A good picture, thrilling and exciting. Anna May Wong very good. Average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played January 3-4-5.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—I played this one rather late, but I'm glad I did because of the current publicity that Shirley has been getting helped put it over. A neat little show, however. Played Jan. 9-10.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—Played on New Year's Eve and was a good picture for a midnight matinee.

THEATRE ACCOUNTING

a method book that is also an account ledger

It performs two services: (1) It is a complete text on the proper way to keep your theatre accounts of expenses and receipts and (2) it contains enough pages for a full year's bookkeeping. Because it is so practical, time-saving and accurately simple, thousands of exhibitors have already exchanged their old, cumbersome and expensive methods for this easy, self-operating system. Its use is becoming more widespread each day.

Exhibitors who are already using this system are reminded to order their 1935 book at the earliest moment so as to permit no break in the daily continuity of your accounts-keeping.

Those exhibitors who have not yet changed over to this new method should do so at once—to guard against losses, avoid income tax troubles, guarantee your profits—and to do it effortlessly, a few minutes a day.

QUIGLEY Bookshop

1790 Broadway New York

Running time, 58 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—A fairly good little mystery picture, but one that would not hold up for more than one night. Running time, 58 minutes. Played December 29.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard—This is swell entertainment. I believe the crowd is rather fed up on Shirley, though, as this did not do the business that her last two have done. It is a dandy picture.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper—This one is just a little different. Not as good as other Shirley Temple pictures. Business only average.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY: W. C. Fields—For a good old-fashioned laugh this takes first prize. It's riotous. Joe Morrison very well appreciated on account of coming from our city. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—A nice lot of comedy in this one, but some do not like a costume picture here. Ruggles is good for some laughs. Played January 12-13.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Joan Bennett—Was very much surprised at the entertainment qualities of this picture. It did not do the business it should have. However, opening day was very good. Francis Lederer's smile is worth the price of admission. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Very good. Lots of comedy all the way. Those who like Arlen will be well pleased with this one. Business not so good before Christmas, but no fault of picture. Running time, 63 minutes. Played December 19-20.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Pretty good little picture. Ida sure is swell. Would like to see her in more pictures.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Too short. Wonder why they will drag out a slow-moving story to 10 or 11 reels and tire folks to death, and give one like this that everybody likes a bum's rush. Seems like they want to get it over with when making it. However, it's a swell piece of entertainment.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Very good; it has everything that a western should have. There was a villain, but they did not rob a bank and they did not hold up a stage or any of the other stereotyped westerns, but it depicted the trek of the wagon trains and the villain was half Indian, and a swell Indian fight also. The men sang "Wagon Wheels" at the encampment. Also an innovation in a western, a woman with a swell voice sang an old love song in one sequence. So altogether a very good weekend picture and I could use a few more like it that were not over the cut-and-dried pattern on the average outdoor western.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—This was very good entertainment. Western with a lot of nice outdoor action and Zane Grey's name puts the western into a class entertainment.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott—Strange as it seems, we played this one for our New Year's midnight show along with a lot of good shorts and broke all house records since "Little Women." Played January 1.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Carole Lombard, Charles Laughton—Very good. Laughton measures up to standard and Miss Lombard, more beautiful than ever, does a fine piece of acting. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 1-2-3.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Helen Morgan, David Holt—People liked this very much. David Holt was good and with a little more camera experience will go big.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan, Ralph Bellamy—Played this old, but was very well received. Good story and Dix does himself proud. Played December 7-8.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley—A wonderful picture, but from the box-office, a flop. Where were the people that were crying for clean, wholesome pictures?—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Pert Kelton—If you want to keep your audience entertained and have them send their friends back the second night, then play this one. You won't need to hide in the basement when they come out. Played December 25-26.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, New Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—Every report on this picture said it was poor or worse, and all of them were right. We showed it Saturday matinee only and pulled it. No excuse for such. Played January 12.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Gene Raymond—Still making money. Played December 4.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—We fondly remember Ginger back in Dallas on amateur night doing the Charleston. Astaire and Rogers the best team to hit Hollywood. This is the best picture I have had this year. Can be played on any date with a positive guarantee of entertainment. And there is none of this hooey called "Art" in it. Running time, 97 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—One of the best musical comedies of this or any other year. Clean, with good songs, good dances, and a story. Drew extra business. Running time, 107 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—A very, very good picture that pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 107 minutes. Played January 6-7.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—This is a fairly good program picture with college football as the background. It is the same old story of the hero winning the game in the last few minutes and saving the day for his college. This type of entertainment should go over great in the football season, but the producers should change the story. Played one day to average business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY! Wheeler & Woolsey—Made a trade for this one in place of one of the new releases and had average business for four days, first part of week. I am not so sure, but believe "Kentucky Kernels" makes better entertainment, but this is okay and this pair should be seen yet this year in a big picture. There is a box-office demand for them and they, like the four Marx Brothers, must be shown in big stuff.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, "Spanky" McFarland—Some improvement on others, but they have never grossed what "So This Is Africa" did. Wasn't sexy enough for my patrons. But I would say that it is a fair program picture, though it is called a special. I broke even on it. Played December 28-29.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler & Woolsey—This one is clean, boys. Nothing outstanding but a good family attraction with some laughs and good music. Business above average. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 14-15-16.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, "Spanky" McFarland—The best yet, I believe, by this pair. My audience laughed all the way through (both of them) and came out well pleased with the picture. I think it will please anywhere. I, however, played it in very cold weather, which hurt the draw. Played January 13.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Thelma Todd, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher, Walter Catlett, Gregory Ratoff—Nice little program picture. I have been agreeably surprised at business I have been doing on some of these program pictures. However, RKO service in the Dallas exchange is perfect and prints are good. Played December 18.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—This is a fair picture with a comedy cast.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—A highly pleasing show. Story is very simple, but it is the kind that always pleases.

—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett, Hardie Albright, William Farnum—They came and liked it. It had all the old-time mellerdramatic thrills, of close places, where the switch was thrown just in time to clear the tracks for the "Silver Streak." Step on it for all you have, for a Friday-Saturday show, and you won't receive a complaint. Played January 4-5.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—This is a good action picture and people liked it. I tried to sell it on an educational angle—actual pictures of the Boulder Dam and world-beating train, and it didn't go over as a high-brow picture, though did business as an action picture.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Our patrons came out all out of breath. One lady asked for nerve tonic. Must have been okay, but I didn't think so.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—Excellent picture, interesting story, well received by our New Year's crowd. Don't be afraid of this one; it will please. Played January 1-2.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Not as good as some this team has made, but will get by on your bargain nights. Played December 18-19.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—A Zane Grey tale with Richard Dix at his best. A good combination that pleased and drew some extra quarters. Played December 28-29.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Interest holding drama. Did not draw extra business, but pleased. Played January 4-5.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Fredric March, Constance Bennett, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—One of the best satirical pictures we have ever shown, with history as a background. March and Bennett make a good team. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 30-31.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Felt as though I was going to do a brody on this one, but I was agreeably surprised. Did a nice business and pulled in people that haven't been in my house for months. United Artists finished their year in good shape. Played November 4-5-6.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss—One of the best Arliss has ever made, appealed to any class, comedy. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Charlotte Henry—A very good picture, but, like all Arliss pictures, we have not so good patronage.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo Ill. Small town patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—In a pinch forced to accept this for a Sunday booking. Many liked it—others thought it was terrible, but the darned thing did business. Running time, 8 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Stuart Erwin, Mary Carlisle, Thelma Todd—Some of my people said they would never come to see Durante again after I showed "Strictly Dynamite" (RKO). They kept their promise. Picture is fair, but few of my people like Durante.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner—This compares very favorably with the old silent version. It has all the heart-tugging elements of father and son love. Hugh Williams, who plays the (adult) part of the son, could be used to advantage by American producers. It seems to me he has fine possibilities. I found the slight English accent of some of the players quite agreeable. A worthwhile production, with no pulling power for me.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, David Manners—Good mystery if you could get connections. The public seems to be a bit tired of these big deep mysteries. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 9-11.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—Plenty of clean, exciting comedy that pleased our Saturday night crowd. Young and old liked it. Played January 12.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe—Lots of stars. A little of everything and not much of anything. Running time, seven reels. Played January 11-12-13.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes, Jane Wyatt, Florence Reed, Jackie Searl—Excellent production of the Dickens' Classic. However, it seems to be practically impossible to get them in on these pictures. What few saw the picture came out raving about it. Running time, 102 minutes. Played December 30-31.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Paul Lukas, Wynne Gibson—This is considerably above average. This story of the woman who sacrifices and suffers, contrary to other pictures of this type, has a heart-warming happy ending. This is worth getting behind. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Ned Sparks, Rochelle Hudson—One of the very best pictures that will be produced this year or any year. Our patrons were 100 per cent in praise of this picture. Running time, 111 minutes. Played January 1-2.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Mary Carlisle, Phillips Holmes—A good show with a nice cast. Damon Runyon stories all good. Running time, 67 minutes.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Binnie Barnes, Lois Wilson, Elizabeth Young—Very good picture and it looks like this Binnie Barnes will go places if they give her the right kind of pictures. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 2.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WAKE UP AND DREAM: Russ Columbo, June Knight, Roger Pryor—Light picture that seemed to please every one. An old plot that was handled very well by Pryor, Columbo and Knight. About average mid-week business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 3-4.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Donald Woods, Jean Muir—Very well done. This new boy Woods has a bright future. Good story, but for some reason didn't go over. Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 9-10-11.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—A real small town comedy that the crowd eats up.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—One of the best of the mystery type shows. Played January 1.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DAMES: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell—Was able to please patrons as musicals do, but was a little overdrawn as far as stage scenes are concerned. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 2-3.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charlie Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—Played on Bargain Night and pleased all. Good entertainment. Running time, 68 minutes. —Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson, Patricia Ellis, Guy Kibbee—Light comedy with music that pleased the younger element. Running time, 66 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Very good. These two Irishers make an excellent team. With lovely Gloria Stuart the picture was completely satisfactory. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 16-17-18. Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Patrons well pleased. Educational to a certain extent, but action's a little overdrawn on Cagney's part. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 9-10.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. Small town patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—A fine team's work wasted on very poor story. Nevertheless, it's box-office. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 1-2-3.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins—Action comedy and a good story right down the alley for a week-end booking with Cagney and his pal doing their rough and tumble stuff. His leading lady was good, too, so was the chap that kept the small town jail. The kind of a picture that the small towns will go for.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins—This is a very good picture that should please every one. It is a typical Cagney picture with plenty of action, excitement, comedy and romance. It is a story of two truck drivers who are continually getting into trouble. The entire cast turn in an excellent performance and the trailer sold the show for us. Played Christmas day to very good business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—Pleasing for the whole family. Music, romance and comedy with Hugh Herbert. Personally didn't care for Irene Dunne's singing, but what do we know about singing? Story is localed in the 'gay nineties." Played January 10-11.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

HEADLESS HORSEMAN, THE: Comicolor Cartoon—Just fair, color in these cartoons not so good. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Columbia

AW, NURSE: Scrappy Cartoon—A swell cartoon. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HAPPY BUTTERFLY, THE: Musical—This is a very good cartoon comedy with music. This is one of the best of this series we have played. Columbia certainly has improved their shorts over the last two years and here's wishing them continued success. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLD YOUR TEMPER: Leon Errol—This is a very good slapstick comedy with plenty of laughs and should please all. Errol is very funny and turns in a good performance in this. Let's have more of these good two-reelers that please the patrons. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire Comedy — Mickey's comedies are always good and this one is no exception. We have our first poor one to run yet. Lots of laughs and I like to hear 'em enjoy the shorts. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Educational

BLACK SHEEP, THE: Terry-Toons Series—This one is just like all the rest. Terry-Toons are far behind in cartoons and can only be considered as filler on any bill. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

BOUNDING MAIN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series —I find Educational single reels very weak and this one is no better. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

BOUNDING MAIN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series —Dandy singing by a crew on board a ship. We played this on Saturday and it was well received. Running time, 10 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

EDUCATING PAPA: Frolics of Youth Series—Very uninteresting. Very poor. This also goes for entire series of Frolics of Youth. Running time, 20 minutes. —W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West—A very good slapstick comedy with good music and a little dancing. The photography is very good and the recording is much better than the others we have played from this producer. Running time, 18 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Coronet Comedies Series—Fine musical comedy with dandy tap-dancing. Running time, 20 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD GAD-ABOUT: Treasure Chest Series—A good one-reel subject showing several of the stars and also with a little story running through it. Running time, 9 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Sylvia Froos, Frank Luther—A waste of time and film. This is no good. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series—Fairly good Song Hit Story. Running time, 10 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN OF THE BAR: Ernest Truex—Only fair, not much to laugh at. Educational started out this year with good comedies, such as "Good Luck—Best Wishes," "Hello, Sailors," "She's My Lilly," "Nifty Nurses," "The Girl From Paradise." The others have been way below par. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

GIRL FROM PARADISE, THE: Musical Comedies Series—A dandy musical comedy that will please. All of this series from Educational have been extra good. Running time, 21 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song Hit Stories Series—Hill-billy singing puts it over. Not bad at all.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song Hit Stories Series—A Song Hit story for your Saturday crowd. Fine. Running time, 10 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

TIME ON THEIR HANDS: Song Hit Stories Series —This is a very good issue of the Song Hit Stories Series, with plenty of good music. There are several old-time songs in this that pleased our patrons. Let's have more of these one-reelers that will please the patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Sylvia Froos, Warren Hull—Above average Educational comedy. Patrons well satisfied, and they said so. Running time, 2 reels.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN YONDER: Song Hit Stories Series—This is the best of the single reels by Educational and this isn't saying much. Running time, 7 minutes. —W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Fox

FOX NEWS: New Edition—Wonderful improvement over old News. Many people have commented how well they like the new one. Running time, 7 minutes. —W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang Comedy—This is a very good comedy featuring Our Gang and should please both young and old. These shorts are very good and they always please our patrons. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DISCONTENTED CANARY, THE: Happy Harmonies Series—A nice color cartoon with splendid music that was really enjoyed. The story in it was true to life. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

DONE IN OIL: Todd-Kelly—Not so very funny, but will get by.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DUTCH GUIANA, LAND OF DJUKA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This is a very good one-reeler that is both interesting and educational. It shows many scenes of Dutch Guiana and the methods of travel and native living. Good entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FATE'S FATHEAD: Charley Chase—A nice comedy that was well received. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

FATE'S FATHEAD: Charley Chase—Nothing wonderful. Personally, I would call it average and give it the benefit of the doubt. Chase has made lots better comedies than this. Running time, 2 reels.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN OF POLISH: Musical Revue—Way below the standard we expect of MGM. Too silly to be funny. Running time, two reels.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: Pete Smith—The poorest of this series. Very unfunny or amusing.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

IRELAND, THE EMERALD ISLE: FitzPatrick Travel Talks Series—A very good Travel Talk in color and one that will please in most every theatre.

Running time, 8 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel and Hardy—Just like all of their stories—great.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

LIVE GHOSTS: Laurel & Hardy—Good Laurel and Hardy comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE-HORSE FARMERS: Todd-Kelly—This comedy got a lot of laughs from our audience and was very good. Running time, 18 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

OLD PIONEER: Happy Harmonies Series—O. K. cartoon in color. Running time, 8 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

RUGBY: Oddities Series—A real treat for those who have seen rugby played and Pete Smith's narrations pep it up very much. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SOMETHING SIMPLE: Charley Chase—Judging by the scarcity of laughs, this is the poorest Chase we have had. It is below the average Chase, although it probably will get by. Running time, 2 reels.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER, THE: Musical Revue—Beautiful and unusually presented, but it failed to click with our audience. Running time, 20 minutes.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS, A: Happy Harmonies Series—As good a cartoon in color as we have played. Running time, 9 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

VIVA WILLIE: Willie Whopper Series—Okay cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A HATFUL: Charley Chase—Good Chase comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

Paramount

AXE ME ANOTHER: Popeye the Sailor Cartoons—These cartoons are unbeatable. I give them equal rating with my features. This one is up to par. Running time, 7 minutes.—Herman Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

CAB CALLOWAY'S HI-DE-HO: Headliners Series—Not so hot. People are getting tired of seeing his mouth open up. Running time, one reel.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

DANCE CONTEST: Popeye the Sailor—Popeye best cartoon on the market. Rapidly replacing Mickey Mouse. The best one to date and they are all good. Popeye easily the favorite cartoon with my audience, young and old. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

A DREAM WALKING: Popeye the Sailor cartoons—A few good laughs in this one with Popeye trying to rescue the fair sleepwalker.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ELEPHANT NEVER FORGETS, AN: Color Classics Series—Poorest Color Classic yet. Not near worth film rental they get for these cartoons. Very poor; nothing to it. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 13—This is a very good one-reeler of this series, presenting the 13 Wampas Baby Stars of 1934. This offers good entertainment, although is rather old. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD RHYTHM: Gordon and Revel, Lyda Roberti, Jack Oakie, Norman Taurog, LeRoy Prinz, Edith and Bill Wilshire—Plain robbery. We got the same thing in our talking trailers. Just a plug for "College Rhythm."—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

KEEPING TIME: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Sportlights are, as a rule, all very good and interesting. People like them. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

LADIES THAT PLAY: Phil Spitalny and his Musical Queens—All-girl orchestra led by Phil Spitalny. This one ranks as one of the very best all music and good song numbers. "Bolero" number great. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

LITTLE DUTCH MILL: Color Classic—This cartoon, in my estimation, ranks with the best on the market today. If you have not played it, you must. Running time, 7 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO MORE STALWARTS JOIN THE REPORTERS

Russell Armentrout of the Clark theatre at Louisiana, Mo., formerly a stalwart in the ranks of reporters to "What the Picture Did for Me," leaves the reservist list this week to shoulder his typewriter and return to the front.

Tripping up through the communication trenches with Armentrout we glimpse Sherman Hart of the Palace theatre, Colorado, Texas.

As Jaysee Jenkins would say, it's of course because of Armentrout and Hart that the towns they hail from have had to adopt state names.

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN, THE: Paramount Varieties—Women daredevils defying death and very thrilling. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 5—Stuff we get in our newsreels. Ho-hum—good shorts are hard to get.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS: Just a filler. Most of the Pictorials are no good. Running time, 6 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Color Classic cartoon—These color cartoons are great stuff. Cost more and worth it. Running time, 11 minutes.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS: No. 2.—This one is fair. People do not go for this series. Very few interested in the past. I will be glad when they discontinue Souvenirs. Running time, 7 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

SUPERSTITION OF THE BLACK CAT: Paramount Varieties Series—This is a good novelty. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

YACHT CLUB BOYS' GARDEN PARTY: Good singing by Yacht Club boys. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

PARROTVILLE FIRE DEPT.: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Only fair. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

UNDIE WORLD, THE: Blonde and Red Head Series—A fairly good comedy that got several laughs from our audience. Running time, 21 minutes.—K. C. Preston, Lyric Theatre, Salem, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

DOGNAPPERS, THE: Mickey Mouse—This is the best and most exciting Mickey Mouse yet to play. Lots of action and fun in this one. Give it a good date. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

GODDESS OF SPRING: Silly Symphony—Very good. Beautiful color. Should rank with the best. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Universal

BORN APRIL FIRST: Sterling Holloway—Holloway has the stuff to be pretty good if they would just give him something besides excuses for plots. Running time, 18 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—Well done color cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHERE'S ELMER?: Vince Barnett, Frank Miles—I have yet to see a Universal comedy that is worth running. Running time, 18 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevities Series—This is a very good musical comedy with plenty of good music, beautiful girls and gorgeous costumes. The color adds 100 per cent to the entertainment. Let's have more of these. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Dizzy and Daffy Dean—Entertaining short with the Dean boys. Roscoe Ates and Shemp Howard furnish the comedy and the Deans show their fast ones.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GEM OF THE OCEAN: Broadway Brevities Series—A very good short subject.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

GOOD BADMINTON: Pepper Pot Series—Terrible. Running time, one reel.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

RADIO REEL NO. 2: Pepper Pot Series—This series has been consistently good.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHOW KIDS: Meglin Kiddies, Tad Alexander—This is a very good musical comedy featuring the kiddies. It is done in beautiful color and makes excellent entertainment for the entire family, especially for the kids. It is full of good music, singing and dancing all done by the kiddies. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SO YOU WON'T T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates—This is a very good comedy of the slapstick variety and has plenty of laughs. Roscoe Ates is very good and pleased all of my patrons. Let's have more of these. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SYNCOPATED CITY: Broadway Brevities Series—Entertaining musical comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 1: Pepper Pot Series—Variety of good vaudeville acts. Pleasing short.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

VIVA BUDDY: Looney Tunes Series—Fair cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Looks like it will be a good serial.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—We are almost at the end of this one. Good entertainment. Kept the folks coming every week at a pretty fair rate. Fifteen episodes.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

French Company Makes Film With Native Cast in Morocco

Eden Productions, French company, has completed "Itto," based on an episode in the colonization of Morocco by the French, and directed by Jean Benoit-Levy and Marie Epstein. A large part of the cast is made up of native Arabs, and the film was made with the use of a sound recording truck on the ground. The native Arabic language is used in addition to French.

'NO COLOR LINE IN FILM'

ASKS FAIR TREATMENT FOR COLORED PLAYERS

To the Editor of the Herald:

As an admirer of your frank and fearless treatment of our picture-game problems I would like to ask you if you think it has been fair treatment to Louise Beavers, the colored actress so familiar and popular with all picture lovers, that she be rigidly excluded from all publicity in "Imitation of Life."

To be sure she appeared in the cast in the Universal press-sheet, but was resolutely out of printers' ink in the cut-sheet, scene cuts, lithos and all ballyhoo material. Is the Land of the Free still drawing the color-line as tightly as ever, even into the realm of the people's best amusement?

Up here in Canada we like the Negro people when they're good citizens. Our British sense of fair play and citizenship is well developed. And, believe me, we do like that Beavers woman; she's a screen cocktail, no matter how little her "bit." So naturally we—I suppose I should make it the first personal pronoun—resent her being robbed of deserved prominence in that perfectly lovely Fannie Hurst story, which has taken my town by storm this week.

Of course Claudette Colbert and Warren William were as excellent as ever. So was our own Canuck, Ned Sparks. But the new element of value, the new star, the new punch, the new angle of showmanship, was the Negress mother—the kindly, loving, emotional, 100% natural mother. She carried the whole story along, was the cement that bound the whole structure. And they ignored her!—afraid of the chivalrous South, perhaps.

But we didn't ignore her. We had cuts made from studio "stills" that gave her a break. We featured the "black mother and the white mother." We openly resented (in the advertisements) the exclusion of this star from critical and advertising recognition. In fact, we pointed out to the people what we thought was an injustice. And we guessed right. The people have poured their thanks upon us for refusing to worship at the shrine of Established Stardom. I'm sending you some tear-sheets to show you.—Walter H. Golding, Manager, Capitol Theatre, Saint John, N. B., Canada.

How Mr. Golding and his staff carried out his idea in the newspaper advertising is reflected in the tear-sheets, from the Saint John Evening Times-Globe. January 16th: " . . . if you ask us we think Louise Beavers, the good-looking colored actress familiar as a dressing-maid in musical-comedy films, 'runs away' with the piece . . . the dramatics of Miss Beavers will make people wonder why the color-line was drawn so taut in the publicity."

January 17th: " . . . a colored actress as rival . . . "; January 18th: "Story of a Mother and a Black Mother and their Modern Daughters"; January 19th: "A White Mother and a Black Mother—and their daughter-problems. Sweet — wholesome — edifying."

And a press notice said: "Strangely enough, the player who seemed to get the liveliest audience reaction was the colored actress Louise Beavers, a familiar figure to picture fans but never before given a chance to be anything but a sort of mammy maid."

[Editor's Note: In the review of "Imitation of Life," which appeared in the December 1 issue of Motion Picture Herald, Miss Beavers was referred to as "the extremely capable Negro actress," and the writer characterized her work with these words: "Miss Beavers comes very near to being the actual star of the picture."]

EXHIBITOR WARNS OF NEON SIGN CASE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am writing you today because I feel as though all theatre exhibitors should be warned and on the lookout for a man with a neon sign fraud.

Several weeks ago a well-dressed man of about 40 represented himself as a brother to an exhibitor of some small Indiana town. As the story goes, he is a traveling salesman and his brother operated the theatre. Several months ago they decided to close the theatre and sell all of the equipment. At the present time all of the equipment is supposed to have been sold with the exception of this neon tube sign. The condition of the sale is this: the exhibitor advances enough for the crating charges. Then the sign is to be shipped express collect for your approval. The balance is to be paid within 90 days provided the sign arrives as represented and proves satisfactory.

I was foolish enough to advance this man seven dollars for the crating charges on December 17. As yet I have never received the sign nor have I been able to find any trace of it.—Theodore Schlosser, Essanoe Amusement Company, Mt. Vernon, Ky.

Mouthful

I want to say that the "WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME" section of the Motion Picture Herald belongs to us, and is the only place in the world we can say what we want to, and wherein we can tell the truth as we see it, and the producers would do well not to meddle with it.

I am sending along a report, inasmuch as I haven't sent in one lately. — Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas.

Have intended to write to thank you for including release numbers with features. Exhibitors will appreciate this addition.

On looking over my files we find that the issue of November 17th, 1934, is missing. Could we trouble you for a copy?—Howard Hager, Hagersville, Ontario.

Your Herald is one of the most valuable papers I have—one no theatre manager should be without. — Ralph Biamonte, Hollywood Theatre, Niagara Falls, Canada.
